On 4 October, BAMTAG called a public meeting in Barnes. No one in the community had ever seen anything like it. At least 2,500 people turned up, filling the streets in their concern. We had to hold two packed meetings, one after the other. The Minister may feel that these figures are fishermen's tales, but even disinterested observers confirmed the estimate. This reaction has been mirrored recently when a meeting held by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney—the scourge of fishermen's tales—attracted almost 1,500 people. Again, those unable to enter were forced to come back later for an emergency second meeting. In Kew last Friday, where, as I have said, not a new road but road widening is the issue, a hall that was meant to take between 200 and 300 people had over 500 inside, and it is said that the same number were struggling to get in.

Only two weeks ago, I led a delegation to the Minister from four London boroughs, consisting of eight hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington), 14 local councillors, drawn from the three major parties and many senior council officers, representing almost 3 million voters. My hon. Friend must therefore understand that these schemes are far too expensive to the environment, far too expensive to the taxpayer and, candidly, far too expensive politically. Therefore, the disadvantages far outweigh any marginal benefit there might be to the flow of traffic in the area.

As the Minister knows, new roads attract more traffic. The construction of the M25, which has certainly benefited traffic densities on the south circular road, has attracted more traffic than ever expected. The fact that it is so busy for such long periods of the day is, I admit, a justification for its construction, but new roads breed traffic and do not simply alleviate the existing or future level of traffic densities. To build a new road from A to B causes chaos at both A and B and is not the answer for an urban environment.

Where do the answers lie? The Secretary of State was right on 11 July, and the published objective for stage two under the heading "To improve the Environment" is right. It said that an objective of these studies is "To conserve and improve the quality of the environment" and went on to define environmental factors as including "noise, pollution, visual impact, severence, townscape, ecology".

On any of these criteria the new road, or the widening of existing roads along the south circular road must be rejected.

The building of new roads must be the answer of last resort—not first. We all want cars but we must learn to change our habits. Certainly sensitive traffic management schemes in local communities can help traffic flow, but far more fundamental are those policies, many of which I feel my hon. Friend must support. Inconsiderate and illegal parking has become a plague on London's roads. A increase in traffic wardens and further powers being granted to local authorities would improve the prompt treatment of parking offenders. Gradually, the deterrent effect would work.

Another fact agreed by the studies of Sir William Halcrow and partners is that more than 80 per cent. of all cars crossing London's bridges have only one occupant. That cannot be allowed to continue, and it does not need new roads to solve it. We need sensible park-and-ride schemes as so many other countries now have, with licences, or fines, for those who occupy cars containing fewer than three people coming into an area from outside.

Another possible solution is already, with the wholehearted co-operation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, well under way. He has more than trebled the taxation of those who benefit from company cars and his intended progress in this area might help to persuade even more executives to take to public transport. More minibuses, too, have proved extremely popular, as has easier through-ticketing; but one day, however unpalatable it may appear, road pricing must be seriously considered. There has been a 60 per cent. increase in the demand for the London Underground in the past few years, and at Mortlake station alone in the past two years a 15 per cent. increase in demand for commuter rail services. That must be further encouraged. It is crazy that the possible new road contained in Halcrow options 3 and 4 could have the effect of scrapping the Hounslow loop line, which in itself helps to keep thousands of cars and their commuters off our roads daily.

So what is so special about the area that I am so fiercely defending? Why is it environmentally so important? It is an area that has been correctly described as a place where the countryside meets the town. Residents and visitors alike marvel at the way the communities, while so close to the centre of London, maintain their almost rural feel. The Minister knows the place well. We prize our green open spaces and broad tree-lined avenues for the quality of life that they bring within the urban sprawl. The villages that form the area may now be almost interlinked by houses, but they are still distinguishable by a deep sense of individual community spirit. When threatened, they react with immediate impetus, borne out of a passionate desire to protect their special nature.

In Richmond, we have learnt to live with the necessary evils of modern society, enduring inordinate and ceaseless aircraft noise, and suffering, as do all parts of the metropolis, the pressures of the motor car. My constituents readily admit that they drive motor cars. Some of them own more than one, and many of them enjoy holidays and business abroad in a world in which demand for travel is ever increasing. But the main argument of tonight's debate is about how long we should continue to build new roads through the middle of harmonious communities merely to accommodate more and more cars; or should we learn to control our natural instincts and habits and learn that we must control traffic rather than allowing it to control us?

We have in the Minister for Roads and Traffic a man who has gained nationwide respect for his dedication to his portfolio. His tireless struggle to persuade the irresponsible driver to resist drink before driving has hit home hard, and the Secretary of State's White Paper, clearly influenced by my hon. Friend the Minister, further tightens up on the behaviour that society now regards as unacceptable when using the road. He is known as a determined individualist, as his humanitarian speeches when on the Back Benches clearly showed. Famous for what some might call a stubborn streak, he is vehement in defence of the underdog and is a noted conservationist.

I should have thought that, with the Secretary of State and my hon. Friend at the helm, the residents of Britain were in the right hands, and that the correct balance between needing to accommodate our society's rapacious demand for travel, by air, train or road, and the need to preserve our ever more important environment would be established. Surely my hon. Friend must understand that the assessment studies have affected the lives of millions of people over a wide area of London and that it is his moral duty, since the impact of the studies was not what he expected, to accelerate his decisions and so relieve the vast majority from their continuing blight at the earliest possible moment.

The threatened new roads and road widening are unnecessary, undesirable, over expensive and damaging, and seemingly contrary to the Government's stated policy. From three further meetings with the Secretary of State, I can draw the conclusion only that he agrees with me. For the Minister to scrap these schemes immediately is probably more than those affected could expect, but they have suffered long enough and he must dispose of the options that are clearly unacceptable without any further delay. He must collect further evidence on the less ridiculous schemes over an accelerated time scale, and then he would earn the gratitude of countless thousands throughout London.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) for the way in which he has introduced this important subject. He made some unnecessarily generous remarks about me. I used to bicycle down Vine road and turn left into Woodman road to meet the person who is now the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley). I know Barnes station and there are various other areas in his constituency which I know and admire.

There are also many people in my hon. Friend's constituency whom I know and admire. They are well represented, but they will not get any fishermen's tales from me. For example, when the chairman of Richmond's planning committee writes to me suggesting that I have not read Richmond's transport policies and programmes, I want to say publicly, as I have told him privately, that I have.

When I say that the official policy of Richmond council is a NIMBY one, I mean it. If Martin Elengorn wants to have a look, he can find it in paragraph 4.16 where there is rephrased what was elegantly said to be the previous policy, "Orbital roads yes; in Richmond no; into orbital roads no, unless they are outside Richmond." That is a different way of saying the same thing. It is inelegant and it is wrong.

The fact is that 67 per cent. of Richmond's population use cars for journeys longer than walking distance. As my hon. Friend said, we are not talking about people who are commuting to work in central London. The Lex gallup poll survey which came into my hands today asks what people use their car for nowadays. The replies showed: shopping for groceries 87 per cent., visiting family and friends, 86 per cent., shopping for consumer goods, 76 per cent. Those are the three highest categories before we come to journeys to work.

My hon. Friend referred to one of the many meetings that he has had, some of which I have attended. He will remember that I met the Barnes and Mortlake traffic action group and I asked how people got to Heathrow airport. They had many different routes. Rat-running is not quite the right phrase because there are not that many bridges over the Thames, but it is difficult to get from my hon. Friend's constituency to Heathrow airport. It is an unsatisfactory journey. When the consultants are considering options for such journeys we should not dismiss the search for ways of solving some of the traffic needs.

I agree that we should not try to cope with all potential road movements in London. Road construction is not the answer to most of London's traffic problems.

Mr. Hanley: I have already taken up a lot of time and I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way. Would he admit that not one person in Richmond would get to Heathrow via a new road across Barnes?

Mr. Bottomley: I am not sure. Starting from the south-east corner of my hon. Friend's constituency one conceivably could if there was access near Barnes, but that leads me to argue for the option presently being considered.

I hope that my hon. Friend will convey the following points to the thousands who come to his meetings. I wish that I were as popular as he is in his constituency. Incidentally, if he is in favour of public transport, he could try swapping places with me for a week. A railway line is proposed for my constituency. Perhaps he would like to come and explain why railway lines are so good and I could come to his constituency and explain about roads. I might repeat in public the offer that I made in private about his other problem, the future of Richmond theatre. Why does he not sell tickets at £10 a piece to all his road protesters to come and listen to me give an explanation of Government policy? That will help Richmond theatre and perhaps help those who have come to listen. I am not sure whether that will help me, but I make that as a reasonable offer to my hon. Friend.

Let me deal briefly with some of the documents that have been circulated which may be one reason why so many have been coming to my hon. Friend's meetings. BAMTAG has said in a leaflet that those who do not want a motorway slicing through Barnes and Mortlake should do what it suggests. All the people must do is listen to what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have said, which is that there are no motorway proposals within London.

Prospect, the newsletter of the Barnes Community Association, makes seven references to a motorway on its front page. However people misinterpret the David Hencke article in The Guardian on 11 July, they cannot possibly go that far unless they are deliberately making a mistake or trying to stir up unnecessary worries.

As my hon. Friend said, there are many people whose worries should not be stirred up until they actually know that there is a proposal. My hon. Friend asks whether we can accelerate the work of the consultants and the Department's consideration of the results of stage 2B. We shall do that.

My hon. Friend made reference to The Guardian, but he did not make reference to The Guardian leader of 31 January 1989, which says:

"What the Government should be doing with the burgeoning billions is spending on roads".

The Guardian, of course, speaks with a forked tongue, and when I enter David Hencke for the United Kingdom Press Gazette award of journalist of the year, I shall not use that editorial because it is not signed. I shall use, however, some of his other articles. My hon. Friend has referred to some of the timings of the announcements. The fact is that the David Hencke article, which on the front page referred to which is not even believed by Sally Hamwee—was tied in with the Kensington by-election. It was published on the last Monday of that campaign.

My hon. Friend has said that the Department has been more open on the consultants' work on options in London than anywhere else. It would be one of the paradoxes of modern journalism if the behaviour of The Guardian—which is the source of many of the reports in the locality—was the reason for us not repeating this procedure. I believe in open government. I believe that there is very little information that the Department has which should not be shared with the local highway authorities. I made it plain that the consultants would be working with the local boroughs, so they could put forward their views at stage 2A.

It was then asked whether we tried to keep it a secret between us and the local authorities, which was impractical and wrong. Perhaps, next year or the year after when we look back, people will say, "Peter Bottomley was wrong and those who believe in secrecy, like The Guardian, were right." I hope that that will not happen. I hope that The Guardian will come to believe that the way we have approached this matter is the right one. The David Hencke article turned what quite clearly are options into what they called proposals.

I would like to come to one point on which my hon. Friend fairly reflected Government opinion, which again concerns The Guardian and The Independent. They said that the Department instructed local boroughs to hide the fact that options were being considered. We have done precisely what local boroughs agreed—they were not forced—and what the GLC used to do and what any other local authority does when it considers options. When options move to the proposal stage, they appear on land searches. If local authorities want to talk about the options which the consultants are considering and tell prospective purchasers or inquirers about them, we are happy.

I want to nail the lie that in any way we have ever asked local authorities to do anything different from that which they were doing themselves. It is the sort of example—there may be another one tomorrow—where people have gone out of their way either to lie or cheat—I do not accuse my hon. Friend of that at all—or to seriously mislead. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for raising the issue, so I could make plain what I have previously made plain in parliamentary answers and to the press too.

There are people who will go to any lengths to suggest that the Department is trying to cover London with concrete. We are trying to obtain studies to see what can be done to improve mobility and the environment in London and to reduce road casualties. There is no doubt that the ownership of cars will increase, there will be massive investment in public transport and there is the need to consider not just local road improvements—perhaps for casualty reduction—but to see whether there are other links which could be built.

We must keep a sense of perspective. At the moment we are spending less than £100 million a year in London, which does not buy very much. There are proposals such as the WEIR proposal, and I have noticed that my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) has been listening attentively and, no doubt, if there was time, he would have intervened. I hope that he will not intervene on a point of order, because when the last Member for Fulham, Nick Rainsford, intervened on a point of order to say how unpopular the WEIR proposal was, he immediately lost his seat to my hon. Friend.

I hope that my hon. Friend and his constituents will argue for environmental protection and, like my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, for getting information through, options considered and proposals put forward as soon as possible so as to relieve uncertainty. Uncertainty is the worst aspect. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond that motorways should not go through London and that we will continue to do all that we can.

Mr. Hanley: Will my hon. Friend confirm that he will accelerate the time scale of the decision on these options?

Mr. Bottomley: Everything I can, I will do to that end. How successful I will be, we shall have to see, but I will do all for which my hon. Friend asked.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

House Sales (Bradford)

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): I have much pleasure in presenting a petition signed by over 200 residents, and their friends and relatives, whose homes are under threat of sale by Tory-controlled Bradford council. It calls for the homes to be held in public ownership and not sold to the private sector. It urges the Government to oppose Bradford council's plan to sell the homes.

The petition is accompanied by 15 letters from residents and I shall quote briefly from one. It says:

"Dear Mr. Cryer,

I am distressed to hear of the privatisation of this home"——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is presenting a petition, not individual letters.

Mr. Cryer: Quite so, Mr. Speaker. When I received the petition, 15 letters accompanied it. I am not presenting the letters but showing that this 81-year-old person——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The rules lay down that the hon. Gentleman may only describe the petition.

Mr. Cryer: The petition says that the Secretary of State for the Environment has the power to stop the sale. I take the view that, if he had any decency or concern for the plight of the elderly, he would use his powers. I regard it, as do the petitioners, as a scandal that valuable public assets are being sold off complete with the people living in them, which is reminiscent of the slave trade. The petition says:

"To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled. The Humble Petition of relatives and residents of homes for the Elderly sheweth

That the homes be held in public ownership and not sold to the private sector. Wherefore your petitioners pray that your Honourable House do urge the Government to oppose any measures by Bradford Metropolitan Council to sell the homes."

I support the petition and have much pleasure in presenting it.

To lie upon the Table.

BILLS PRESENTED

ABORTION (RIGHT OF CONSCIENCE) (AMENDMENT)

Mr. David Amess presented a Bill to require doctors and nurses to give a positive indication of assent before being required to perform or assist at an abortion: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 28 April and to be printed. [Bill 71.]

ABORTION (TREATMENT OF NON-RESIDENT WOMEN)

Miss Ann Widdecombe presented a Bill to require, subject to certain exceptions, a medical practitioner treating a woman not resident in the United Kingdom for the termination of pregnancy to give notice of such treatment to a medical practitioner in the country in which she is ordinarily resident: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 7 April and to be printed. [Bill 66.]

ABORTION (AMENDMENT OF GROUNDS)

Sir Bernard Braine presented a Bill to amend the grounds specified under the Abortion Act 1967 on which an abortion can be carried out: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 5 May and to be printed. [Bill 72.]

ABORTION (RIGHTS OF ANCILLARY WORKERS)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves presented a Bill to require ancillary workers to give a positive indication of assent before being required to perform or assist at an abortion: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 21 April and to be printed. [Bill 70.]

ABORTION (FINANCIAL BENEFITS)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett presented a Bill to amend section 2 of the Abortion Act 1967: And the same was read a First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 14 April and to be printed. [Bill 67.]

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering whether the five hon. Members who just presented those Bills are the same five hon. Members who not long ago were among a group of people talking about parliamentary skulduggery and blocking the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: I have no knowledge of the reason why hon. Members present Bills, but they were in order in doing so.

National Identity Card Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.38 am

Mr. Ralph Howell (Norfolk, North): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Mr. Speaker: I have been unable to select the reasoned amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Howell: I thank my sponsors for all the help that they have given me in drafting the Bill. I also thank the Clerks of the House, the staff of the Library and several other people who have helped me.

The principal reason for introducing the Bill is that crime is increasing at an alarming rate despite all that the Government have done. This Government have done more than any previous Government because they have spent more money on improving police and prison officers' pay and recruiting more police and more prison officers, and we have the biggest prison building programme ever. Yet, year after year, crime increases; and in the past 10 years, it has increased by an alarming 50 per cent.

Even more alarming is what has happened since an identity card system was abolished in 1952. The crime rate today is seven times as great as it was in 1952. The time has come when the people of this country have had enough of lawlessness. They want to be able to live their lives in peace and something more must be done than has been done so far.

We are having this debate today because a mistake was made in 1952. Although is is understandable that unnecessary regulations should have been abolished after the war, that provision should not have been abolished, and it is time now for us to correct that mistake. The Bill is based on the wartime measure. It is relevant to say that, after years of appeasement and failing to face up to the threat of Nazi Germany, the first measure presented to the House on 3 September 1939 was a National Registration Bill. It passed through all its stages on 4 September and 5 September and registration was effective from 29 September. We acted quickly then, and it gave a great psychological uplift to the whole country. At last we were galvanising ourselves into taking adequate action. Although that measure alone did not win the war, it would have been foolish to attempt to fight the war without such national registration.

We are fighting a different problem now, but the whole country must be brought in to fight crime. We can increase the police as much as we like, we can increase prison building as much as we like, but, until the whole country declares war on crime, it will continue to rise. An identity card scheme would be the first and most positive step and would give tremendous hope to those who suffer so seriously, especially in inner-city areas, from present-day lawlessness.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Howell: No.

Mr. Skinner: I have an important point to make.

Mr. Howell: I shall give way in my own time.

The Government are taking a neutral attitude to the Bill, and that is something to be grateful for. At least they are not opposing it.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): indicated assent.

Mr. Howell: I am glad to see that my hon. Friend the Minister of State is nodding agreement.

However, the Government have proved the case for me. We have already introduced the Football Spectators Bill, which proposes indentity cards; that proves that the Government believe that some measure of protection will come to law-abiding football supporters through indentity cards. I do not want to go into the matter deeply but my criticism of that Bill is that only 1 per cent. of the population attend football matches and they attend football matches for only 1 per cent. of the week. It seems hard on the other 99 per cent. of us who want protection from crime that no provision is made to help us by means of identity cards. Furthermore, although the Football Spectators Bill seeks to stop people going abroad to attend football matches, we are doing nothing about the lager louts on their way to Spain, who discredit this country.

The Government should recognise that public opinion is very much on the side of the Bill. A public attitudes survey, published this morning, shows that 57 per cent. of people support an identity card system, 37 per cent. oppose it and 6 per cent. do not know. It is not very dignified for the Government to be with that 6 per cent. of "don't knows". The Government should know one way or the other.

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, despite the publicity, there has almost been an absence of protest from constituents? The matter received considerable publicity in a national daily newspaper in Northern Ireland, but there was not a single protest.

Mr. Howell: That is an interesting point, and the leading article in The Times bears it out.

There are other interesting points in the survey. Of those who have an opinion, 61 per cent. are in favour and 39 per cent. are against. Of those who support the Labour party, 47 per cent. are in favour and 47 per cent. against. The Opposition must take note of what is being said, because the reason why they are condemned forever to opposition is that they do not reflect the opinions of the great proportion of voters.

Mr. Skinner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Howell: I shall give way in a minute. The hon. Gentleman must be patient. The point that I want to make before I give way is that 53 per cent. of union members support an identity card scheme.

Mr. Skinner: It is quite conceivable that one of the reasons why there is a difference of opinion in the country and among political parties and why even the "don't knows" are concerned, is that people are worried about the photograph that would be needed for identity cards. Some people might think that others would submit their sons' photographs for their identity cards. In the latest issue of "Dod's Parliamentary Companion", it seems to me as if the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) has sent in his lad's photograph. If that is the case, no wonder there is confusion.

Mr. Howell: In a few years' the hon. Gentleman may look as young as I do. But what a frivolous remark.

As I have said, the public at large support the Bill. Moreover, we are approaching 1992, when we shall have to do something about this matter. We are committed to the EEC and we shall remain in the EEC, and we know that the intention is to do away with passport control within the EEC. When that happens, it is not conceivable that other members of the EEC will operate an open-door system without any control, as we do for the Republic of Ireland, because that would open up the whole of the EEC and no one would know who was in the country and who was not.

Let me describe what the Bill is designed to do. It is intended that every person ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom shall have a numbered identity card and that there will be a register of all the persons who ordinarily live in this country. That is a necessary and important measure.

Clause 1(1) sets 12 years as the age at which a person must possess an identity card. Some people will think that the age limit is too low, and I am prepared to be flexible on that point, although to start with I was advised that it should be 10 because that is the age at which young persons are held responsible for their actions before the courts. Under the wartime provisions people were registered at birth and parents were responsible for children's identity cards until they reached the age of 16. The age of 16 is obviously too high today; we have all witnessed awful scenes in which very young children have thrown petrol bombs in Northern Ireland.

At the age of 12, young people generally go to secondary school and are capable of looking after bus passes and rail passes. The other day someone telephoned the Jimmy Young show to say that it would be a positive advantage for children to have a form of identification as at present many of them have none, while the rest of the population carry large numbers of cards.

The fine for failure to possess an identity card will be a maximum of £400—level 3.

To those who think that the Bill would give the police extra power, I want to make it abundantly clear that that is not what is intended. Clause 1(4) says:

"A constable, if he has reasonable grounds for doing so, may require any person who is in a public place to produce his identity card for examination so as to enable the constable to ascertain its validity."

That leaves the law as it is. The sus laws passed in 1824 were abolished by this Government in 1981; all Labour Governments kept them in place. Under the Bill, the law will remain the same——

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, for a long time, the sus laws caused no problem but that towards the end their excessive use brought the police into a lot of disrepute in some areas? It was a very enlightened step by the Government to get rid of them, and the police have made no representations to the effect that the loss of the sus laws has caused them problems.

Mr. Howell: That is the very point that I am making. Under the Bill, that improvement in the law, for which the Government can take credit, will remain. The law will be exactly as it was before. The police will have no right to ask to see an identity card unless suspicious circumstances surround the person.

Mr. James Pawsey (Rugby and Kenilworth): Does my hon. Friend agree that, in general, the police favour such a Bill? Will he repeat to the House the figures that he cited at the beginning of his speech, which show that public opinion is overwhelmingly in favour of identity cards of the kind he has described? That gives the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) his answer.

Mr. Howell: I am grateful for those remarks. The Police Federation is firmly in favour of this measure and has been firmly in favour of identity cards for a considerable length of time. I am sure that we would find the vast majority of members of the Association of Chief Police Officers in favour if we knew that body's views fully, although the issue has been fudged and somewhat clouded, perhaps because the Bill is before the House.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): I do not follow my hon. Friend's reasoning. He says that the law will not be changed, but clearly it will. At the moment, we have no sus laws and a police officer may not stop a pedestrian in a public place and demand his name and address. The Bill would introduce such a provision and reasonable grounds would include the constable wishing to ascertain the validity of the card.

Mr. Howell: I realise that it would have been better to include the words, "to ascertain the identity of the person" rather than the words in the Bill. I accept what my hon. Friend says on that point. But he is completely wrong that the Bill will alter the law, except by requiring a person to possess an identity card. It is intended that there will be no change whatever in the power of the police to stop a person who is not considered to have done something unlawful or to stop a person who is considered to be about to do something unlawful. My Bill may not be drafted perfectly; it is difficult to draft a Private Member's Bill perfectly. I am prepared to accept any amendment that will make matters clearer, but I repeat that the intention is not to give any extra powers to the police.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I am listening to my hon. Friend's explanation with interest. Does he agree that, no matter how the Bill is redrafted, the inescapable fact remains that it will be creating an entirely new criminal offence?

Mr. Howell: I accept that. I believe that we need an identification system and that we need a register of persons ordinarily living—that is, permanently living—in this country, and that everybody else in the country should carry a passport. That is the order of the day in practically every other country of the world. Why should we believe we are so different?

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): Will my hon. Friend please not be too contrite about any minor imperfections in the drafting of his Bill? It is not unknown for Governments, with all the vast resources at their disposal, not to get the drafting of Bills—even Bills presented from the Treasury Bench—absolutely perfect. Some of my hon. Friends believe that the Official Secrets Bill, for example, is not in every respect a model of parliamentary drafting.

Mr. Howell: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I would like to draw the House's attention to clause 1(5).

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): It is to my hon. Friend's credit that he has given way so often. As a former police officer in the west end of London, who has used the sus laws many times, I can say that the objection to them was that people could be convicted of not even attempting crime, but of merely being a suspected person. Nothing in this Bill creates that sort of offence.

Mr. Howell: The sus laws are out and this Bill will not bring them back. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his comments.

It will not be an offence to be without the card on one's person when one is stopped, but one must possess a card. The law will be the same as that applied to the production of driving licences. A person will have seven days to produce his identity card to his nominated police station. If he cannot produce it, however, he will have committed an offence, which will be provided for in this Bill.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Howell: No, I shall not give way. I should like to get on.

Mr. Cryer rose——

Mr. Howell: Will the hon. Gentleman let me finish?

Clause 2(1)(c) says that we are instructing the Government to produce numbered identity cards. The card will include the name, sex, date of birth, residence, photograph and signature of its holder. I have been assured that cards with photographs and signatures are as safe as any card can be against wrongful use.

Those are the main points about the Bill. The remainder are concerned with forgery and false applications, which are quite obvious.

Mr. Gow: Will my hon. Friend accept my congratulations—and I am sure those of my hon. Friends—on the provisions of clause 6, which rightly, but unusually, extends to Northern Ireland? I congratulate my hon. Friend on that, because the more we can legislate for the kingdom as a whole, the better we shall secure the acceptance of Northern Ireland as part of this kingdom. Has my hon. Friend had any discussions either with the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary or any other of its officers to discover whether this Bill would be welcomed in the Province?

Mr. Howell: I have not had any consultations with police officers in Northern Ireland, but I too believe that it is important that the Bill should cover the whole of the United Kingdom. This is the first time that such a Bill has been proposed in the House in 50 years, although our former colleague the right hon. Enoch Powell suggested that there should be an identity card for Northern Ireland alone. It is important that this Bill, and all other Bills, should cover the whole of the United Kingdom, because we could then save valuable time.

An identity card would be a tremendous asset to every law-abiding person and it would be something of a hindrance—I make no apologies for this—to the criminal. If we are to restore a peace-loving country and have law and order, where people are not afraid to walk the streets, something must be done.

I received a letter from a gentleman of 93 years. He told me that he had been in some of the heaviest fighting in two world wars and he regretted the fact that he was now afraid to go out at night. That is a terrible indictment of our society.

Mr. Robert Banks (Harrogate): I have been following my hon. Friend's argument carefully. Can he tell us approximately how many cards would need to be issued, the cost of so doing and how the cost would be met? Many people will be concerned to know whether they will be paying for them or whether the cost would fall on the taxpayer.

Mr. Skinner: And who would get the contract?

Mr. Howell: I shall come to the main point about the overall cost, but the intention is that initially the card should be issued by the Government free of charge to every citizen over 12 years. I have not worked it out, but there would probably be 45 million cards. However, if one lost one's card—as happens when one loses one's credit card—a fee would be charged for a replacement.

I shall now cite the advantages of an identity card system. It would save police time. It is ridiculous that the police must ask all the questions that would be contained on an identity card—perhaps out in the cold and rain—when a parking offence or a speeding offence has been committed. They must write it all out in longhand, just as they did in Queen Victoria's day. We can imagine what would happen if every time we made a bank transaction, instead of using a credit card, we had to go to the counter and watch the cashier writing in longhand all our details. The absurdity of that system is obvious.

Another advantage would be that it would help to detect crime, because many people would volunteer to show their cards. If there was a rumpus in a group of young people, there would be one or two ringleaders, but the more lawful people would be ready to show their cards and identify themselves. It would be a great deterrent to young people setting out on a course of crime for the first time.

Let us imagine, for example, the case of a youth who had decided that the time had come to snatch a handbag. The first thing that he would do before he set out—probably terrified himself, but being egged on by his mates—would be to empty his pockets so that he carried no form of identity.

Mr. Skinner: The first thing that he would do would be to empty someone else's pockets.

Mr. Howell: I am afraid I did not catch that.

I believe that that would be a deterrent, and some young people would never start out on a course of crime.

It would be of immense assistance in detecting social security fraud as well as other frauds. Our present system is archaic. We all have—if we are drivers—five sets of numbers. We have a national insurance number, a National Health Service number, a passport number and a driving licence number. As Members of this House, we must carry identification to enter this Chamber. Those cards to not deprive us of our freedom in any way.

An identity card would help the fight against drugs and against illegal immigrants. I believe that if the Bill had been in operation, the gentleman from Sri Lanka, Mr. Mendis, who was our uninvited guest for 13 years and who cost us a great deal of money, would not have been allowed to stay here for so long.

The card would also help us to deal with the even more serious problem of terrorism. In recent months, we have had examples of such terrorist attacks, especially the awful Lockerbie disaster. I do not intend to talk about that disaster, but I am concerned about the two journalists who posed as cleaners to get on to the aircraft at Heathrow. That was most worrying. I believe that the identity card system would be a tremendous help in finding out who has access to such sensitive sites as airports.

The identity card system would be a much more practical and sensible approach to the problem of football hooliganism than that outlined in the Football Spectators Bill. I believe that some Ministers are not altogether happy about that Bill. An awful lot of parliamentary time and aggro will be expended before that Bill reaches the statute book. The identity card system will be 100 per cent. effective against under-age drinking. Although I have not spelt it out in the Bill, there will be one coloured card for everyone under 18 and a different coloured card for everyone over 18. Therefore publicans and club owners would be able to identify under-age drinkers immediately and in a much more effective way than at present.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): My hon. Friend says that he is concerned that two journalists and others had had access to London Airport and access to aircraft. He said that an identity card scheme would help to overcome such problems. I do not understand how. Is he saying that the information on such cards should be backed up by a lot of information held in some data bank? I do not see how an identity card would help without that other provision.

Mr. Howell: I am sure that the card would help employers to know more about the people they are employing. The fact that we would have a register of all persons "ordinarily" residing in this country would be an immense help.

An even greater problem than terrorism is the increased fear in which many of our citizens live. Crime has increased sevenfold. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of people are living in fear. One of the most shaming things for this House and the country was the recent incident that occurred in Camden when a lady was burnt to death in her council flat because firemen were unable to get through the steel door that barricaded her home—the rest of the flat was also barricaded. That lady had lived in awful fear because we have been unable properly to enforce law and order. Instead of the Englishman's home being his castle, that home had become a prison and, eventually, a hell. We should think just as much about crime as we do about even more dramatic events such as terrorist attacks.

I have had little experience of inner cities, but I canvassed Bermondsey during the by-election there a few years ago. There I encountered the fear in which some people live in some of our housing estates. I did not feel comfortable all the time I was there. I believe that we must take this matter seriously because the time has come for positive action.

I believe that the Home Office has done some work on this card—I am delighted that it is thinking seriously about some sort of identity system. That is good news. It has calculated that such a system would cost about £350 million. I have no means of knowing, and I accept what the Home Office says. I believe that it would be the biggest bargain that we have ever had. One need only consider how much we are losing through social security fraud and all sorts of other fraud, such as tax evasion. Money is also lost through fraud because of the inefficient operation of other computers connected with finance. A national insurance card is issued to anybody over 16 which has a name and number on it—those of us who are more than 16 years old also have such a card on request. We can have three replacements before any questions are asked, and if that is not an open invitation to defraud, I do not know what is.

Mr. Cryer: As the hon. Gentleman is so keen on this matter, I wonder whether he can tell us whether Lloyd's, of which he is a member, and other financial institutions in the City of London have introduced such cards to stop the fraud that he has talked about? He knows that the City has been rocked by fraud and scandal month after month. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman and his cronies would like to set an example for the nation. Have they done so?

Mr. Howell: I am here to advocate a Bill that I hope will help to stop fraud and tax evasion generally. I should have thought that the hon. Gentleman would applaud my efforts.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department has said that a voluntary system might be best, but how do we legislate for such a system? What possible sense could there be in it? My researchers and I contacted the French embassy to find out about the French system. Everyone from the ambassador downwards insisted that there was a compulsory system in France, but we eventually persuaded them that the system was voluntary. Everyone knows that the French identity card system is far more rigid than anything I am proposing. I think that it is ridiculous to argue that a voluntary card might be all right, but not a statutory one. The possession of a card would not take any rights away from law-abiding people. It would simply make things slightly more difficult for the rest.

In conclusion, the Bill would be the first really positive step to galvanise the whole nation into joining in a major attack on crime. Until we are all involved with reducing crime, it will never be reduced. The Bill would give tremendous hope to those who live in fear. It would improve our national security. Above all, if the Bill were passed, it would provide a great psychological uplift and the country would feel that it was doing everything in its power to help to improve the position. I commend the Bill to the House.

10.20 am

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I congratulate the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing his Bill. It will be extremely useful if the House has a thorough debate on the idea of identity cards because a lot of people feel—perhaps glibly—that they would solve many of the problems to which the hon. Gentleman referred. However, I believe that once people start to consider the full implications of the scheme, they will realise that such identity cards would do nothing to solve crime. Although they might—perhaps for only a brief time—reassure one or two people that it is safer to go out on the streets, once people realised what was involved they would lose that reassurance. Although the debate is useful fully to inform the House and the country, I very much hope that the Bill will be defeated when we come to vote on its Second Reading.

Mr. Cryer: Does my hon. Friend accept that the opinion polls that have been referred to would change radically after the first few cases of 12-year-old children being prosecuted because they had lost their card or because some other person has defaced it and they could not prove that they were not in breach of the legislation? The measure would potentially criminalise all children above the age of 12.

Mr. Bennett: I accept my hon. Friend's point, but opinion polls would change even more quickly once people had to complete the application forms for the cards.

Identity cards would be a nuisance to the vast majority of the public. As we have already heard, they would be expensive and a major invasion of privacy. The cards would have those three problems and, I suggest, no benefits. They would increase crime rather than reduce it. They would lead to increased alienation between the police and certain sections of the community, probably young people and people with dark skins.

The cards have the potential for a great deal of increased state control over the individual. The areas that the hon. Member for Norfolk, North mentioned as being nice ways of reducing crime, would lead to greater state control over individuals. The House should think carefully about that.

I shall deal briefly with the question of nuisance. We must accept that we all have a portfolio of identity cards at present. I checked last night and I have a trade union card, a card to get into Brinnington Labour club, a Labour party membership card, a savings book, a cheque book, a House of Commons pass, a National Trust card, a kidney donor card, an AA card, a driving licence, a Co-op book, a video shop card and a library ticket. I suspect that many hon. Members may have more cards than I do and that many people will have fewer.

The attraction of all the existing cards is that we have total choice about when we present the cards and about the services that we wish to get from them. If we happen to lose one of them, it is usually possible to use one of the others to establish one's identity——

Mr. Cryer: Unless it is a credit card.

Mr. Bennett: Yes, unless it is a credit card, but even then it is relatively easy to get——

Mrs. Maureen Hicks (Wolverhampton, North-East): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that we have no choice when it comes to using our identity cards to gain access to the Palace of Westminster and that that is a compulsory card? I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman has ever refused to enter this House because he had to use an identity card.

Mr. Bennett: I do not wish to get drawn into that. I do not think that it is a compulsory card—I believe that it is voluntary. I have seen many hon. Members enter the building without displaying their card. That makes it a little awkward on occasions for the policemen. It may be a little below the dignity of some hon. Members to be asked for their card. They assume that because they are on national television, they are well known and do not have to produce a card. As it is difficult to draw the line between someone who is readily recognised and somebody else who is not, there are often embarrassments about producing the card.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman's experience has been like mine. Although I do not claim in any way to be as instantly recognisable as many hon. Members, I have never once in my entire period of membership of this House—since 1983—been asked to show my card. The Bill claims that the possession of identity cards will aid the police and reduce crime, but the only possible way in which that could work would be if cards were asked for of virtually everybody on virtually every occasion. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that that is the only way that the cards that we carry would be of tremendous value to security.

Mr. Bennett: Yes, I accept that. I used to have rooms at Abbey gardens, and when I had to run across to vote, no policeman on the door ever stopped me to ask me to show my identity card to get in. I admit that I have lost my parliamentary identity card twice. On one occasion, I was changing my jacket and put the card down on the mantelpiece. It slipped between the wall and the fireplace. I had no intention of removing the fireplace to get it back so I simply reported its loss and got a replacement. On the other occasion, I was driving into the car park and can remember having laid the pass on the dashboard. I did not know where it had gone. So again, I simply asked for a replacement card. About a month later the other card reappeared from the bottom of the dashboard having slipped down.

There is no real problem in losing those identity cards because they are easy to replace. A problem with the system is that if the cards are easy to replace, there will be little inconvenience to anybody, but if identity cards are difficult to replace, they will be a considerable nuisance.

On one occasion my credit card was damaged by the machine that it went through in a shop. There was some inconvenience in getting it replaced. I have also managed to damage my driving licence because of a leaking biro in my pocket. I do not think that I am particularly incompetent, but I challenge any hon. Member who votes for the Bill to be absolutely certain that he or she has never lost any card and had to have it replaced. If they can demonstrate that, on occasions, they, too, lose identity cards of one sort or another, they must recognise the problems that some people will experience if a national scheme is introduced.

Another problem is that some individuals like to change their appearance from time to time. I went through quite a difficult period when I had a passport with a photograph of me without my beard. My passport used to be scrutinised carefully, with the immigration officials looking at me and at the picture in the passport for quite a long time. Having looked at my employment, however, they would usually quickly let me pass. However, I am certain that many people will, from time to time, want to shave off a beard, grow a beard, throw away a toupee or want to change their hair colour from dark to blond. Obviously, it does not help if the photograph on one's identity card presents a very different image. Simple things like wearing or not wearing glasses can produce considerable problems. I do not think most people would feel that they ought to have their card changed every time there was a detail change, small or substantial.

So far as I can see, the problem about cards is that if it is a cumbersome process to replace them they become a nuisance to individuals. On the other hand, if it is an easy process they increase the opportunity for fraud and for misuse. Let me put a question to the hon. Gentleman who is promoting the Bill. What would happen if one of my constituents came down from Manchester to work in London for three or four weeks and, fairly early on, had his card stolen? Would he have to return home to get the documents necessary for replacement, or could he be issued with a temporary card here? I suggest that it would be wholly unreasonable to expect someone to return home to get the documents necessary for replacement.

Mr. Skinner: I think it was established during the course of the speech of hon. Gentleman who introduced the Bill that there was going to be so much detail on the card that it would not be a card at all, but a Filofax, to be printed perhaps, by Rupert Mudoch and his friends.

Mr. Bennett: I am not sure whether it would be a Filofax, but one of the frightening things is that, while it might be a very small card, there might be a whole lot of computer-encoded information on the magnetic tape. In other words, although the card would not tell my hon. Friend an awful lot, it might well tell other people a lot of things—perhaps things that he did not know but that were convenient for other people to put on his card, identifying him as someone who should perhaps be treated very carefully by authority because he was likely to make a fuss.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Did the hon. Gentleman notice, as I did, during my hon. Friend's speech, how the purpose of this pass, or this internal passport, or whatever it is to be called, widened? It started off that a police officer was the only person required to see it. Then we got to the DHSS and a whole range of other people who are presumably going to be able to see it. A whole range of information will be on this card in one form or another.

Mr. Bennett: Yes, I can imagine all sorts of implications as to who should see it. Certainly there ought to be arrangements by which any encoded information on a card could be checked by the individual.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): What about the Data Protection Act?

Mr. Bennett: Obviously the hon. Gentleman is aware of the expense involved in that. All I want to say at this point is that the more information you put in, the more safeguards you provide, and the more you attempt to prevent people from misusing the cards, the greater will be the expense for the state and for the individuals.

There is also a major issue about privacy. How much information will go on the card? It is already accepted that details of appearance, national insurance number, address, car—if one owned a car—driving licence information, next of kin, blood group and so on would all seem to be sensible items of information to include. But ought a criminal record be included? Obviously, those concerned about cracking down on crime might consider that to be useful information. Where would we stop?

Mr. Cohen: That is a very good point. Has my hon. Friend considered another item of information that might be included is a person's poll tax number? Certainly, the Government are trying, under this poll tax, to take a lot of privacy away from people, and the poll tax officer, with all his powers, might be able to confiscate a person's identity card to stop him moving around the country, and might thus create all sorts of problems for individuals. Has my hon. Friend considered that point?

Mr. Bennett: I have not considered the implications of the poll tax for this Bill, but perhaps later on my hon. Friend will be able to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Cryer: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Bennett: No, I want to make a little bit of progress. It may be said that the points I made just now about what it is reasonable to include are all right—for instance, criminal convictions, if there have been any—but what about police suspicion about an individual? Ought that to be included? What about questions concerning an individual's health? It might be very helpful if various pieces of health information were encoded. But all of this starts to erode the rights of the individual.

Mr. Ralph Howell: The hon. Gentleman has reminded me of a little part of my speech that I had forgotten to include. This card, if it were framed as I have suggested, would have the information that I have spelt out, which would be readable by the individual carrying it. There could be a panel where information, such as blood group or allergies or next of kin, could be included voluntarily. But I am not advocating a card that would have information that was not readable by the carrier.

Mr. Bennett: I thank the hon. Gentleman. The trouble is that once an identity card system has been introduced, the pressure to put on all sorts of extra things, and to make all sorts of information available, will grow steadily. It will always be slightly more convenient for Governments to have information included than to resist having it included.

I want to pose this question: to what extent does an individual have a right to change his identity? The tendency is for most people to assume that it is only criminals who want to change their identity, but I do not accept that. There are occasions on which people may have very good reasons for wanting to change their identity. At the moment anyone trying to do so can find it a very difficult process, but I think people have the right to do so. Let me give two examples.

First, a constituent of mine came to me very distressed that, over the years, she had suffered a considerable amount of violence from her ex-husband. Almost every time he had a little to drink he would turn up at her house and be abusive. She got a court injunction, but it was not all that easy to enforce. In the end, she moved to the other end of the constituency. She changed her name, and for three years she managed to live at her new address with a totally new identity and without suffering any harassment or difficult. She was extremely relieved.

Unfortunately, her ex-husband was so persistent that, after three years, he managed to trick one of the very few officials who knew where she had moved into giving away the district. As a result, she found that he was going round that district regularly at the weekends asking if anyone knew where she lived. Fortunately, he did not know that she had changed her name, and so she was aware that he was looking for her before he had a chance to find her.

[Mr. Bennett]

What she was extremely upset about was the fact that some official had passed on information about where she was living.

Under this Bill would it be easy for someone to change his identity so that there could be a different name on the identity card? It seems to me that it was perfectly reasonable for the lady I have cited to want to change her identity. It was not a criminal thing at all; indeed, she was actually trying to avoid crime.

The other case I have in mind concerns a lad of about 13, who had been in a great deal of trouble in his local community. He had never been convicted of any crime, but the police had certainly come to the conclusion that he was one of the ringleaders in a lot of trouble on the estate. The community policeman very sensibly said to his father, "If this lad stays here, sooner or later he is going to be in the courts and in serious trouble. I suggest that you persuade him to go and live somewhere else. He might get a fresh start."

The lad moved to live with his married sister and he got into no more trouble at all. He grew up and came to me some years later about a different problem, and he mentioned this to me. When he moved and changed his Christian name information held by the police in Stockport passed to police in Tameside, and so he was able to start with a clean sheet. There are lots of teenagers who get a certain reputation in a particular neighbourhood and, perhaps rightly, they are picked on by the police. The big advantage to these young people is that they can change their identity. I could give other examples, but I believe that it is reasonable for someone to be able to change his identity for perfectly legal reasons.

The legislation will certainly increase crime.

Mr. Cohen: My hon. Friend made excellent points about people who legitimately want to change their names. Is he also aware that people might, quite legitimately, want to change their name and identity as a matter of personal choice because they do not like their name? I am aware of a former Minister whose brother did not like the name of his daughter.

Mr. Skinner: Was it Currie?

Mr. Cohen: No, it was Cohen actually. I think it is an excellent name, but the family did not like it, so they changed it—quite rightly, because that was their choice. We would surely not want to get people into trouble with their identity cards because they wanted to change their name for that reason.

Mr. Bennett: I accept that problem. Unfortunately one sometimes gets saddled with a name that suddenly becomes identified with someone who is daily hitting the headlines for criminal reasons. If one has that name, it can cause problems.

Mr. Ralph Howell: What, specifically, does the Bill contain to stop a person changing his name, as he can now?

Mr. Bennett: If the identity card carries a person's name and he changes his name so that he is commonly known by a different name, it is essential for him to change his identity card. If it is easy to change the identity card, people with criminal reasons for wanting to change their name will take advantage of that. The number on the identity card then becomes important and starts to count —not the name. If the number counts, the information held against it can cause problems.

If it is easy for people to change their identity, it becomes difficult to make the system stick. If it is made difficult to change identity, that will cause problems for some people who have every right to change their identity.

The Bill will increase crime because, quite clearly, stealing and forging identity cards for various purposes will hold attractions for some people. The measure will not stop terrorist activity and other serious crime. We know that terrorist groups can forge fairly complicated documents, such as passports, with considerable success. It will not be difficult for such people to produce forged identity cards and get round the legislation.

Mr. Beggs: I feel, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will agree, that there is more evidence of the illegal sale of legitimate passports in this country than there is of the manufacture of illegal passports.

Mr. Bennett: I do not think that that is very relevant. If people can get round the complicated problems of the forgery and illegal use of passports, a number of criminals will, fairly quickly, turn their minds to forging and reproducing identity cards. We are offering some entrepreneurial criminal the opportunity to set up in a new avenue of crime—the production of illegal identity cards.

Mr. Stern rose——

Mr. Bennett: I am conscious that I have been speaking for a long time but I want to complete my arguments.

The Bill will not solve crime, but increase it. It will increase alienation, too. If the identity cards are to be effective, people will have to ask to see them. I suspect that if a policeman sees a certain category of people he will be circumspect about asking to see their identity cards. Other groups of people, particularly youngsters and those from ethnic minorities, are likely to feel—even if it is not true —that they are being stopped much more frequently than others.

I could make much of the issue of state control. I was alarmed at the way in which Kent miners were, in my view, illegally stopped when going to picket in the north of England. I have also been concerned about the way in which people going to the summer solstice at Stonehenge have been stopped. If identity cards are introduced, police will be more likely to exercise that sort of state control.

I shall mention one or two specific problems: first, the matter of whether the Bill will solve under-age drinking. I do not think that it will. In my experience, it is a fair challenge to many youngsters to try to get round the present drinking laws and they will simply tackle getting round the identity card with the same enthusiasm.

In many pubs, at least in the north of England, youngsters have taken to carrying photocopies of birth certificates. The up-to-date landlord knows that photocopies of birth certificates are useless. Youngsters have developed two simple tricks. First, they copy a birth certificate, put a bit of Tippex on and then re-copy it. In that way they can changed their age by one or two years. The second common practice is to photocopy the birth certificate of an elder brother or sister. If identity cards are introduced some under-age drinkers will use the identity card of someone else in the family who looks reasonably like them.

Also, publicans meet problems because they often face groups of drinkers, some of whom are under age and some over age, and they are not sure who is drinking what. The hon. Member for Norfolk, North said that there would be a card of one colour for those under 18 and a different coloured card for those over 18. If someone ends up having to show the card as he puts the glass to his mouth, that will not solve the problem.

The Bill will certainly not solve the problem of football crowds. Some newspapers said that it would solve the problem of people who travel from door to door. However, I suggest that it would be risky for anyone to allow someone into his house merely because he showed a national identity card. If he wants safety, he must make sure that the card is one issued by a legitimate organisation such as the gas or electricity board. It would be dangerous for anyone to be lulled into allowing someone in simply because they produced a national identity card. The Bill would have no impact on terrorists and in some cases might even produce false security. The fine imposed on somebody for not having an identity card could cause considerable hardship.

How much has the hon. Member for Norfolk, North looked at groups of people who already carry identity cards? He should spend some time considering university campuses, on many of which identity cards of some sort are already issued. Most universities and colleges have a problem because they contain certain facilities that students are entitled to use and others that they are not. One hall of residence might provide meals and another might be self-catering. There may be many attractive facilities on university campuses that people outside might like to use.

I have talked to many students who have told me about many dodges to get round student identity cards, and to many people who administer the cards. They all admit that it is a nightmare trying to keep ahead of all the dodges. Perhaps students are particularly enterprising, but I suspect that the sort of problems involving identity cards that crop up in most universities and college campuses would also crop up among the general public.

Within a short time of the cards being introduced they will be totally discredited and all we shall have achieved is to spend a great deal of money to no effect. I hope that the House will defeat the measure when it comes to the vote because it will prove an expensive nuisance and an invasion of privacy. It will increase crime and alienate many people from the police and law enforcement. It has much potential for creating a big brother state to control us all.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. It will be evident to the House that there is a great deal of interest in the Bill, so I appeal for shorter speeches.

Sir Rhodes Boyson (Brent, North): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing the Bill. It will be the subject of discussion not only today but, I hope, when it goes to Committee and subsequently. Due to the attitude of the Home Office to a voluntary card system, this will be the first of many debates on the matter.

I listened carefully to the speech by the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett). The Bill is not ideal, but no Bill—even a Government one—ever is. We can improve the Bill in Committee and it will be the start perhaps not of a march but of a movement towards compulsory identity cards within a short time. Last year, my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) introduced a ten-minute Bill, which was defeated by 172 votes to 114. The payroll vote, as some people call it, was not used. That shows that the majority of Conservative Members are in favour of identity cards.

European integration and 1992, whatever our views on those things, have been mentioned. Only Ireland, the Netherlands and Switzerland do not have compulsory or voluntary identity cards. A card would bring us more into line with Europe, which has easier frontier controls and tighter internal controls. We have tight frontier controls but much slacker internal controls.

The card would do many things. First, it will assist in easier identification. We have a massive crime wave, especially of violent crime, and many people live in terror. I shall talk about that later. In introducing the Bill, my hon. Friend was right to speak about fear and violent crime. The card will help in that respect, especially if it has a photograph and a signature. Later I shall say how I believe the addition of fingerprints would help in other ways. A photograph and a signature would help to identify people who have terrorist or violent tendencies. As my hon. Friend also said, it would reduce credit fraud, which is estimated to cost £20 million to £25 million a year. Those who behave properly always suffer because of fraud, and I am old fashioned enough to be on the side of those who behave properly, and on that basis I favour the Bill.

There are also problems with social security fraud. The genuine social security recipient suffers when other people exploit the system. In my view, some social security fraud can be as high as 20 or 30 per cent., and that means that money is not going to people whose families desperately need it.

An identity card would also help in accident identification. I was told by somebody in the Strangers' Dining Room last week that American bodies in the Lockerbie air disaster were identified using fingerprints. One family suffered in London because they did not have fingerprints of their son who had been killed in the crash. The police and investigators had to go round the family's house and dust everywhere until they found the son's fingerprints. That is the first time that I have heard of such a case. Fingerprints can help better than anything to determine identity.

A person's blood group should be on the card. If somebody is involved in a traffic accident and is bleeding to death, it is necessary to know the blood group immediately. The card would also help to control illegal immigration, and we know that genuine immigrants suffer because of the illegal ones. The card would help to control under-age drinking. My hon. Friend has suggested different coloured cards for those under 18. Licensed victuallers have sent out 500,000 cards for completion and only 13,000 have been returned. Hon. Members will agree that we have a responsibility to keep an eye on what is going on in the public houses in our constituencies, and they know that it is difficult to determine whether a person is 18. People who are over 18 sometimes look younger and people who are under 18 sometimes look well above that age. That makes it difficult for licensees to comply with the law.

In Committee we could consider the use of the card to control truancy. It is estimated that in some London schools truancy in the fifth year can be as high as 70 per cent., and in ILEA there have been estimates that the average for the whole of London is 45 to 50 per cent. The card would identify children who are getting into wayward ways instead of being in school under some sort of discipline. There is no doubt that if we do not get things right in schools in the fifth year, we shall have major criminals later. The boredom of that fifth year could lead pupils to break the law and turn to ways of gaining money illegally.

I shall listen to all that is said in the debate because there will be continuous discussion on this topic until the matter is settled. The poll tax has been mentioned. In that context, identity cards would help to maintain electoral registers. In some constituencies those registers are appalling. I believe that they are worse than they have been for 100 years. What we now call our constituency agents were originally appointed to check the electoral registers, and before long they will have to return to that job, especially in marginal seats. Presumably all seats are marginal—even yours, Mr. Deputy Speaker, under certain conditions, though we would never wish that upon you. If I were in what is called a marginal seat I would be seriously worried about the state of the registers.

All the problems that I have mentioned can be eased by information placed on a card for everybody to see. We have heard about the possibility of secret information being put on the card. There will be a great divide there, even among supporters of a compulsory card system. Should the card carry only basic factual information or should it carry other information on magnetic tape? Instead of a kidney donor card, people might want to put on the identity card that they are willing to donate their organs in the case of sudden death. It is difficult to put all that information on the card unless magnetic tape is used, and that will need to be discussed. I have not made up my mind about that, but I am suspicious of it and it is not intended as the Bill stands. I would put more on the identity card than my hon. Friend suggests in his Bill.

What rational person could oppose the Bill? It will be opposed by many Opposition Members. I find it astonishing that Members of the Labour party, many of whom I admire, should oppose compulsory identity cards. The old philosophy of Socialism was to take from the person with ability and give to the person with needs. That requires information—more information than Conservative philosophy requires. The Opposition would need to know who people are, their income and everything else. It is not my job to help the Labour party, and I draw attention to the fact that in Brondesbury, in Brent, the Labour party lost a seat yesterday. I am sorry to upset Opposition Members, but they may have lost that seat because they are losing touch with their people.

Mr. John Patten: I apologise for interrupting my right hon. Friend in full flow, but I am curious to know who defeated the Labour party candidate in Brondesbury.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I am sure that the Minister would like to know the party more than the name, but I can give him both. I will give him additional information, just as additional information can be put on identity cards. The party that won by nearly 400 votes and took the seat from the Labour party was the Conservative party, of which I and my right hon. and hon. Friends are proud to be members. The Liberal party came second and the Labour party, which has fallen on evil days—I am trying to help it to return to the purity of its early beliefs—came third, just ahead of the Green party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman will return to the Bill.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: How wise you are, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to call me to order.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for giving way, particularly as we pair with each other——

Mr. Skinner: What about a double identity card?

Mr. Sedgemore: As the right hon. Gentleman is so worried about what is going on in the Labour party, may I report that I have just returned from Pontypridd and everything there is super, smashing, stupendous, wonderful.

Sir Rhodes Boyson rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This shows clearly that one temptation leads to another. Let us now get back to the Bill.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I do not want to be led astray by the hon. Gentleman. I wish to help him, but I must get back to the Bill. I have some other good thoughts which I can offer the Labour party on another occasion.

Some people oppose the measure on libertarian grounds. My hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) may do so. But what liberty? The liberty that I am concerned about in my constituency is the liberty to travel safely on the Northern Line after 9 pm, to visit tower blocks and for the people inside them to leave them in safety, and to walk the streets in safety. That liberty is under threat in our society.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend makes the same point as my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell). No hon. Member who supports the Bill has yet told us how identity cards will help to improve freedom and individual liberty by supporting law and order. There is certainly no evidence of that from 1952.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: My hon. Friend is probably more aware of what happened in 1952 than I am. Perhaps he will enlighten me as to what happened then. The fact that everybody will have to carry an identity card with their name on it will in itself deter. Deterrence is much better than punishment. I offer that to my hon. Friend as a title for a speech.

I will explain why I feel so strongly on this issue. As recently as 1 February the headlines in the Evening Standard were:

"Women in Fear on City Trains."

That is why the Guardian Angels have come on to the Tube. Vigilantes move in when security disappears. People give the Government the right to provide law and order in society, but once that breaks down they will take their defence into their own hands, and rightly so. It is an old political philosophy and we are near it. There is a strange coincidence in the arrival of the Guardian Angels and the number of police that I have seen on the Tube in central London. In the past fortnight I have seen six, whereas in the past year I have seen none, so the Guardian Angels have already done something for law and order. I have never met any of them and I have no designs on becoming one, although I am a guardian angel to my constituency.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I give way for the last time.

Mr. Bennett: Will the right hon. Gentleman explain how a card will solve the problem? Does he expect a mugger to stop and show his identity card?

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I have tried previously to explain this to the hon. Gentleman. I have a high regard for his intelligence, and he, too, is a northerner. I always find his speeches fascinating and interesting in every way. I pay him every tribute, although it may damage him in his constituency.

The fact that people know that they carry a card which identifies them will deter. My research suggests that 10·14 per cent. will never go on the streets again once they have a card. That is a major statistic. It is a personal one, as nobody has done the research but myself, but I have no doubt that that would be the case.

On 12 January the Evening Standard said that more than one third of women in one area of Tower Hamlets are now carrying weapons for self-defence, as are many men. I will tell the House of three incidents in Brent. An 81-year-old woman returning from the sales in January this year was mugged, left with two broken limbs and died. A disabled spastic 23-year-old with limited use of his legs had his special bicycle broken for the third time while he and his father were paying their weekly visit to the grave of his mother. On Christmas eve, an 83-year-old woman was kicked and punched and had her £15 taken from her when she visited her husband's grave, as she always has done on the eve of Christmas. Even her posy of flowers was taken.

Those are just three incidents, but they bring horror to everyone living round about. If we ignore this great concern, we shall ignore something that is strongly felt, certainly in inner-city areas. My hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North has already referred to the mother and daughter who died in Camden because they had literally made their home into a castle. Two people in Stockwell died because of the defences built into their home to stop other people getting in.

Mr. Cohen: Such cases are horrendous and appalling, but I cannot see how an identity card would make any difference because criminals would not carry an identity card. Identity cards could make the position worse. A criminal could steal an identity card and gain access to peoples homes on false pretences. Those cases would be made more rather than less likely.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: The hon. Gentleman talks about people changing their identity. Both he and I have done it in a hairy sense in our lives from time to time. The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) is also part of the secret hairy club in the House of Commons. A criminal would have to be clever to steal a card with a photograph which looks exactly like him. He would have to search for a long time and that would keep him out of mischief for many years. Obviously, there would be a line across the photograph to authenticate it. Perhaps that would be the answer. A criminal would have to spend his whole life going round the country. By the age of 65 he would have a free ticket to do that, and perhaps only then would he find somebody with an identical photograph. The hon. Gentleman raises an interesting point.

What do the people at the bottom of the pile think about this? There is no point asking people who are driven around and live in salubrious areas. We need to ask what the grass roots think. I understand that a survey on truancy in schools is being carried out by a member of the noble House. I do not mean noble House in the Chinese sense, but the House that approximates to ours. If that survey asks not class teachers but headteachers what is happening, it may as well be burnt. Headteachers hoping for promotion will never say that there is trouble in their school until the day after they retire. We must ask the classroom teachers.

It is the same with the police. It is no use asking the chief constables. We must ask the constables on the beat in downtown areas. The 120,000 members of the Police Federation overwhelmingly want identity cards. Like me, they believe that this will help. Indeed, the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) may ultimately come to believe that himself.

We should also ask women. The Townswomen's Guild passed a resolution at the last general meeting for identity cards to be introduced to combat increasing problems of law and order. Mrs. Jean Ellerton, the national chairman, said:

"We had to have identity cards during the War because of the danger of Fifth columnists. The malaise of violence in our society is like a Fifth column, another enemy within the state."

Old-age pensioners suffer more than anybody from the fear of going out as they lose the ability to defend themselves. Mrs. Dorothy Rhodes—that is a good name and I shall repeat it in case any hon. Members missed it —[Interruption.] I will speak to the hon. Gentleman privately. I must not interrupt my speech because of his sedentary remarks. I will save the time of the House by telling him afterwards if there is any relationship. Last year, Mrs. Dorothy Rhodes, president of the Conference of Old Age Pensioners, said:

"Crime for the elderly is a very great fear. Fear is a killer, and imprisons pensioners in their homes, and something must be done to make them feel safer."

All of us carry credit cards—indeed, some people carry them like medals that they have won in the war. The wife of one self-employed building contractor told me that those contractors have to carry cards containing a photograph, signature and national insurance number. Those cards are issued by the Government and have to be renewed every three years, having been signed by two inspectors. I know that I must not go into the issue of which of us change our appearance or whether we may lose our identity, but if one of those contractors grows a beard or his whiskers fall out because he sits up too smartly in bed he has to get another card signed by two inspectors. The regulations covering those people are tight.

[Sir Rhodes Boyson]

If that is done to ensure that we are not exploited for our money, surely something must be done to ensure that we are not exploited by crime.

My case is not based on the idea that secret information may be held on an identity card. Throughout Britain there is a great fear of sudden violence being inflicted on people going about their business. That fear is felt especially in inner-city and downtown areas. The legislation is one attempt to help. Right hon. and hon. Members who oppose the Bill, as is their right—I recognise the integrity of their views—must propose alternative legislation to lessen people's fear. The opponents of the Bill have asked us what it will do. I wait for any of them to tell me what magic formula they can produce to bring safety to the people who come to my constituency surgery about the problems on the Chalkhill estate and in other areas.

I welcome the Bill because it offers the beginning of a debate on safety and on law and order in inner cities. Hon. Members on both sides of the House have experienced the problems. We believe that identity cards will assist considerably, and I welcome the beginning of a debate that will continue for several months.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): I oppose the Bill on grounds of principle and utility. I do not believe that my hon. Friends who support it have looked into the background to the previous two national registration schemes as closely as they might have done and seen the problems then.

It surprises me that Conservative Members—we are united in our philosophy—who opposed and scrapped national registration in 1952 and who belong to a party which had a bonfire of controls and wanted to set the people free, should lead the campaign to bring back such restrictions. National identity cards are a profoundly unBritish idea which would lead to increased power of the state over the citizen. We must start from that position and ask ourselves whether what is suggested in the Bill is likely to improve law and order. If it is, is the price that we will pay in individual freedom worth paying? If it is not, should we have the Bill?

The history of national registration started, not in the second world war, as my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) said, but in 1915 during the first world war.

Mr. Pawsey: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Bennett: I should like to progress a little into the history of national registration.

Compulsory registration for people between 15 and 65 was introduced in 1915 and affected some 25 million people. The legislation made it clear that it would lapse as soon as the war ended, and it did. During the second world war, similar legislation was given a Second Reading in one hour and 18 minutes on 4 September 1939, and 46 million people came under the subsequent regulations. The legislation remained in place until 1952, when a Conservative Government, freshly elected to office, scrapped national registration and the national identity card as one of their first actions.

One can get a flavour of the period from reading the debates on the issue in 1945, 1947 and 1950, when Conservative Members repeatedly tried to pass Bills to scrap national identity cards. Aneurin Bevan, the Minister of Health, said:

"The National Register also renders valuable services to the Ministry of Food and the Board of Trade in connection with rationing of food and clothing, and to the Ministry of Labour in connection with the administration of National Service (Armed Forces) Act, 1939, and the Registration of Employment Order, 1941. Considerable use will also be made of the National Register for the purpose of bringing into operation the new scheme of children's allowances. The register has also proved valuable in re-uniting families which had been separated owing to evacuation and other incidents for the purpose of tracing individuals whose claims under the War Damage Act, 1941, have not been satisfied owing to their whereabouts being unknown, and in various other ways of benefit to the individual concerned."—[Official Report, 6 December 1945; Vol. 416, c. 2497-8.]

One can almost smell snoek and spam in that justification. I especially like the reference to using the card after the war "in various other ways of benefit to the individual concerned."

Not one of the reasons why we had national identity cards during and after the war is now valid. I cannot believe that we wish to set up a bureaucracy of the size expected and made necessary under the Bill merely to ensure that some people feel free from fear. They would be no less likely to be attacked.

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): My hon. Friend has given a fascinating history from 1915 to 1952. Would he like to continue that history into the next 37 years, with the serious social and economic problems created by the crime wave? Of course that did not just happen in this country. The Bill must relate to the history of the past 37 years, not to the history of the years between 1915 and 1952.

Mr. Bennett: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I shall return to the issue of the card's utility and the grounds on which I feel that it will not do any good in improving law and order. The evidence of the crime wave, which continued after the war, shows that national identity cards did nothing to prevent crime. There is no evidence from other countries that it did.

Mr. Ralph Howell: How can my hon. Friend say that, because the cards were abolished in 1952, no good could have been done? My hon. Friend cannot prove that. We do not know whether the crime rate would have been as great as it is now had we continued to have those cards. Will my hon. Friend address himself to what he would do to stop the increase in crime—or does he feel that it is at an acceptable level?

Mr. Bennett: My hon. Friend says that the fact that the crime rate continued to rise during the second world war and in the 1950s and 1960s is not evidence that national identity cards did not work. I cannot see from the figures that those cards had any effect on the crime rate in those years, because it continued to rise. All the evidence from countries with national ID cards shows no diminution in crime.

I should be happy on another occasion to debate with my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North the nature of crime and law and order. There is a plethora of measures that we might take, and which the Government have already taken to combat crime. I do not think that the national ID card had any effect on law and order. The bureaucracy involved and the cost of the measure are out of all proportion to the effects of the card on crime.

Mr. Waller: Was it not significant that our right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) said that he would wait with interest to hear about some magic scheme from those who oppose the national identity card? Does that not reveal that the Bill's proponents see this is a magic scheme which will in some way solve all the law and order problems about which so many people are worried?

Mr. Bennett: My hon. Friend is right. That is why hon. Members who oppose the Bill have questioned the Bill's proponents about how they envisage old ladies living in council blocks in Camden being made more free and safe because they have to have a national identity card. For a start, we know that the first thing that criminals will do is to find a way around it. We will have a black market in identity cards. It is important to detect the criminal. We can carry all the cards we like in our pockets, but, if we cannot catch the criminal, it will not make any difference. Detection is all important.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Bennett: I shall not give way at this point. I wish to continue my remarks.

I shall examine the principles underlying the Bill and where we should start. I start on the presumption that the state does not have the right to force the citizen to register his or her movements and that the citizen has the right to privacy.

It is up to the proposer and supporters of the Bill to come forward with such compelling and overwhelming reasons why the basic, long-held and cherished liberties of the individual and of English and Scottish law should be removed. The state—that is, the legal embodiment of society in the form of the Executive, the legislature and the judiciary—must be seen as a system of restraints on the activities of the individual, justifiable only insofar as it protects his or her freedoms and rights. The law should aim to provide a system of restraints which, although limiting freedom in some respects, maximises overall freedom. John Stuart Mill, who was not a Conservative but a classical liberal, in "On Liberty" in 1859, wrote:

"The sole end for which mankind are warranted, individually or collectively in interfering with the liberty of action of any of their number, is self-protection."

Later, I shall deal with how the Bill measures up to the principles of liberty and how effective it will be in practice in achieving what its proposer has claimed. Would its overwhelming utility justify an increase in the power of the state? From what I have heard from him, I do not believe that my hon. Friend has made out that case.

It is worth reminding ourselves of the reasons the Conservative party fought so hard to abolish the wartime identity card. W. S. Morrison, who was later a Speaker in the House, in the debate on the Emergency Laws (Transitional Provisions) Bill 1947—that has a nice period flavour about it—said:

"On general principle, and without going into the overriding temporary necessities, the idea should be that a free-born member of the community is entitled to go without let or hindrance in his own realm. He should not be under the necessity of proving his identity or of producing a document to vouch that he is an ordinary British citizen."

He concluded:

"We should do as much as we can to simplify life, and restore it to its ancient freedom, and absence of formality. We should restore to the citizen the dignity of his rights and privileges, without the necessity for the production of a piece of paper to prove who he is."—[Official Report, 20 November 1947, Vol. 444, c. 1429-31.]

That was the view of the Conservative party after the war, when the national emergency and the reason for having identity cards had gone. In 1950, Chuter Ede, the then Labour Home Secretary declared:

"The National Register and the identity card are something alien to the English way of life and I hope also to the Scottish way of life".—[Official Report, Standing Commitee A, 27 June 1950; c. 55.]

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary brought the argument up to date in his speech to the Conservative political centre conference last week, when he said:

"I am sceptical of the State pushing too far in seeking to restrict individual liberty. There have been calls to ban completely the private ownership of firearms, or to legislate against amusement arcades in the hope that this will somehow induce financial responsibility amongst teenagers. The latest fashionable medicine for our social ills is the compulsory identity card. There are some arguments in favour of it, though its usefulness would depend on what sort of information was included. The more information you include, of course, the greater the dangers of error, abuse and excessive State power."

Having discussed the underlying principles, I will refer to the Bill and examine what is proposed. The 57 per cent. of the population who my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North said were in favour of the Bill will get the greatest shock. I suspect that this will lead the majority to revise their opinions about the usefulness of the Bill.

The Bill proposes that everybody aged 12 years or over ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom shall be in possession of a valid identity card.

The Bill applies to first-year pupils in secondary schools. They will be required to possess and carry an identity card and be subject to the criminal law if they do not do so. Also, 48 million people, if they are not in possession of a valid identity card, will find themselves

"guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3"— that is, £400—

"on the standard scale."

That is in clause 1(3). Clause 1(4) states:

"A constable, if he has reasonable grounds for doing so, may require any person who is in a public place to produce his identity card for examination so as to enable the constable to ascertain its validity."

No sign is given of what constitutes reasonable grounds. The proposer of the Bill has failed to give any guidance on that point. There is no schedule listing the grounds that might constitute reasonable grounds. Are we to await case law or internal police or Home Office memoranda? It is difficult to think of any ground that could not be made reasonable under the clauses of the Bill.

Mr. Ralph Howell: I explained that the intention behind the Bill as drafted, whether or not it is properly drafted, is that the law will remain the same as it is now. If he has reasonable cause to do, a constable may ask any person to identify himself. That is an easier means of identifying oneself than at present.

Mr. Bennett: I do not agree with my hon. Friend; I challenged him on that point earlier.

I now refer to present police powers. The Bill will increase such powers, which we got rid of in 1982 when we abolished the sus laws. One has only to look at the way in which some high-profile chief constables use the road traffic Acts to operate in effect, random breath tests. The constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk,

[Mr. Bennett]

North is a classic example. Between 19 December 1988 and 1 January this year. Norfolk police administered 2,872 breath tests on "reasonable grounds", and achieved a success rate of 1·1 per cent. Having tested 2,872 people, they caught 33 drivers.

Mr. Pawsey: What about the deterrent effect? People know that checks are taking place. That reduces the amount of drinking. That is an important point which my hon. Friend should take into account.

Mr. Bennett: If my hon. Friend compares the accident figures for Norfolk with those of Northumbria, where there is a 65 per cent. success rate in apprehending drunken drivers, he will see that there is no difference in the accident rate in counties in which the police breath-test thousands of innocent people and in those where they test people who they have reasonable grounds for believing are committing an offence of some sort. We must be careful how we extend police powers when we already see high-profile chief constables who want to make a name for themselves already using the law to its maximum, and sometimes appearing to go beyond their powers.

The police in Norfolk managed to get it wrong in 98·9 per cent. of cases over Christmas. What confidence can my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North have that they will not operate similar swoops on pedestrians doing their Christmas shopping in Norwich to check the validity of their identity cards?

Mr. Pawsey: That is over the top.

Mr. Bennett: We have seen chief constables going over the top in setting up road blocks around the country and breathalysing people. Clearly, with the 98·9 per cent. failure rate, they are not doing so on reasonable grounds. I do not have my hon. Friend's confidence that, if the Bill is enacted, chief constables will not use the powers in the Bill for all sorts of things, such as swoops on supposed burglars. We already see it in car stops, and we can see it being done to pedestrians.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: Breath tests are presumably to stop drunken drivers. My hon. Friend drew a parallel with Christmas shoppers and said that the police will stop them. Presumably Christmas shoppers will not knock people over because they are drunk; if they do, behaviour in his part of the country must be very strange.

Mr. Bennett: My right hon. Friend misses the point. Norfolk police, who have the worst breath test success rate, are stopping thousands of innocent people. Northumbria police are managing to stop more drunken drivers, despite having breath-tested only just over 200 people. If Norfolk police did their job more effectively, they might catch more people. The breath test figures show how different police forces use their powers.

Mr. Ralph Howell: My hon. Friend's figures are nonsensical. He has not mentioned the success of Norfolk police in reducing accidents over Christmas.

Mr. Bennett: I have read the accident figures and there is no truth in what my hon. Friend says. The accident rate in Norfolk is no better than the rest of the country. I asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport a question about the figures specifically to ascertain what they showed. Clearly the methods of the Norfolk police are not a deterrent.

The powers of chief officers and police constables are being abused by some for high profile purposes. Whether they are effective is another matter, but I fear that under this Bill the same abuses will occur.

What will happen if Mrs. Bloggins does not have her card when a constable wishes to ascertain its validity? What questions will he ask to ascertain its validity? Will he ask, "Is this your photograph, Mrs. Bloggins? Were you really born in 1941? Are you sure that you still live at this address?" If Mrs. Bloggins does not have her card when a constable stops her, under clause 1(5) she will be not only guilty of an offence but a constable in uniform may arrest without warrant if he reasonably suspects that she has committed an offence under clause 1(3). I remind the House that clause 1(3) forces Mrs. Bloggins to carry her card.

Supporters of the Bill may argue that I am being unfair to Mrs. Bloggins and that she has a get-out in clause 1(5) should she be foolish enough to forget her card. Clause 1(5) says:

"Provided that if within seven days after the production of his identity card was so required a person produces the identity card at such police station as may have been specified by him at the time its production was required, he shall not be convicted of an offence under this subsection."

"Hold on," says Mrs. Bloggins, who is a qualified lawyer and unlike her friend, Mrs. Sniggins, has followed the Bill through its meandering subsections. "What about clause 1(3), which makes it an offence not to be in possession of a card? Is that not still an offence, even if I have been relieved of my criminality in not producing it for a constable under clause 1(4) if I go to the police station within seven days?"

We are putting thousands of people at risk. For the technicality of possessing an identity card, we shall be making them into criminals and liable to fines of £400 and the option, under certain subsections of the Bill, to up to six months' imprisonment.

Mr. Whitney: My hon. Friend is painting a harrowing picture of the harassment and persecution of Mrs. Bloggins under clause 1(4) and other subsections of the Bill. My hon. Friend fears that Mrs. Bloggins would be harassed, but has he any evidence that in France Mme. Leblanc has been similarly harassed? I suggest that there is no evidence of that.

Mr. Bennett: It is not compulsory to carry an identity card in France. A person merely has to give an officer his identity. Many abuses occur in France—the French police are not noted for their gentleness. If my hon. Friend thinks that the French police deal with the French public courteously and tactfully and demand their identity cards with complete correctness, he has another think coming.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: My hon. Friend is making grave accusations about the police. Is he saying that the police will stop Mrs. Bloggins irrespective of whether they genuinely believe that she may have committed a criminal act?

Mr. Bennett: My hon. Friend has obviously led a sheltered life. I have been stopped when driving my car on a number of occasions—I cannot claim to be such a fine, upstanding member of the community as my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) or my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson). The police operate road blocks to stop motorists and say, "Is this your motor vehicle? May we have a look at your tax? Would you mind getting out of the car, sir, and may we look in the boot?" They do not have reasonable grounds when they stop the motorist, but they will be prepared to justify afterwards their "reasonable grounds" for stopping him.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): That is highly unlikely.

Mr. Bennett: I do not object to occasional road blocks to try to track down burglars. My hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) is implying that road blocks do not take place. My hon. Friend must live in a different world from the rest of us, who experience this from time to time.

It is right that the police should have certain powers, but Parliament and the public should ensure that they do not overuse them or use them in a way that Parliament did not intend. Anyone who believes that, from time to time, individual officers do not abuse their powers and that officers do not go over the top is kidding himself. We must be careful to ensure that we do not give opportunities to the bullying policeman to use powers on members of the public for no good reason.

What bureaucracy will be needed to implement the provisions in respect of cards on Mrs. Bloggins and the rest of our constituents? Clause 2 says that the Home Secretary will make arrangements for the preparation and issue of the necessary forms and instructions to comply with them. I hope that he does not employ the author of the explanatory notes for income tax forms. He is instructed to issue cards, to give out new ones on production of a fee for lost cards and will prescribe the particulars to be put on the cards. Mrs. Bloggins's age will appear on the card. Do my hon. Friends remember the problems with people's ages appearing on drivers' licences? The Bill will make it compulsory for people to show their age on an identity card.

Mr. James Lamond (Oldham, Central and Royton): The poll tax legislation comes into operation in Scotland this year. Everyone who fills in the poll tax form will, unlike the position in England, be required to give their date of birth. That has caused concern and trouble to the Scottish authorities. No one can understand why it is necessary, and not only women but men have objected strongly to having to give their date of birth.

Mr. Bennett: I take the point that the hon. Gentleman makes. The community charge information will be private and will not be published under the identity card system, people's ages will be public knowledge. Great care has been taken to disguise people's ages on their driving licences.

Some of my hon. Friends are suggesting that the community charge information should be on the identity card. The Government have given specific promises that that will not happen. Information given about the community charge will be privileged and kept confidential. To place that information on an identity card would be a breach of the undertakings that have been given.

The Home Secretary will prescribe the material to be used in the fabrication of the cards and will give information for dealing with cards of deceased people.

An enormous state bureaucracy will have to be set up to administer the scheme, presumably involving local offices. Some 48 million people will be required to register initially. In an answer to a question that I tabled, my hon. Friend he Minister of State, Home Office said that it would cost £350 million to set up the system. Quite a few district hospitals could be bought with that money. It is further estimated that it will cost between £50 million and £100 million to run.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Can the hon. Gentleman tell us how many policemen on the beat we would get for that sort of money? Many Labour Members have been pressing the Home Office that in areas such as Greater Manchester there should be more policemen. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that more patrolling policemen would be better than having identity cards?

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Working on the basis that one police officer costs about £20,000, 50 police officers would cost about £1 million. The hon. Gentleman can work out how many police officers £350 million would buy.

Some hon. Members may claim that the Home Office has inflated the figures. Let us look at the costs and staff of the National Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre and the Passport Office. Neither registers as many names and addresses as would be required under national identity card registration. The annual running costs of the DVLC, with 6·6 million valid licences issued in the last year for which we have figures, was £21 million and there were 915 staff. The total number of licences issued is 27 million, which is over 20 million fewer than would be necessary under the Bill. The number of passports issued is 2,418,000 and there were 2,100,000 visitors passports. The cost for that was £42·9 million. The number of staff in post is 770 and the establishment is 923. One can see that the Home Office figures are not far out on the Bill. We are considering £350 million to establish the system and £50 million to £100 million to keep it running.

Mr. John Patten: Is my hon. Friend aware that the Home Office's calculation of the total cost of approximately £350 million for a compulsory registration scheme is based on comparative costs drawn from the Passport Office, where about £7·50 per passport unit is generally the cost?

Mr. Bennett: I had noticed a similarity in the figures when I was looking at the passport figures and I am glad that my hon. Friend can bear out that assumption.

Clause 2 requires the citizen to notify changes of address. The average person moves every seven years and 10 per cent. of the population have been in their present home for less than a year—that is 4·8 million people. A further 6·7 million people have been at their present address for between 12 and 36 months and another 5·7 million, or 12 per cent. of the population, have been at their present address for between three and five years. If one adds the number of new cards that would have to be issued on change of name, and if we assume a 2 per cent. loss rate, which is lower than that experienced by the clearing banks, one can see that there would be almost another 1 million cards that would have to be issued.

[Mr. Bennett]

One can see the enormity of the Bill. We are considering the issue of 6 million or 7 million cards a year. An enormous bureaucracy would be required and there would be great inconvenience to the average British citizen. Nor would the Bill achieve the aims and utility that it proclaims. Far from assisting with law and order, it would positively hinder it by creating new offences and police powers. It would clog up the courts at great cost and low benefit. It would divert scarce police resources for the enforcement of the regulations. With a loss rate of 2 per cent., there will be almost 1 million cards floating ownerless and many of them will find their way on to the black market, as the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) said. As surely as night follows day, such a market will rapidly be established by the criminal fraternity. Does anyone seriously believe that those who wish, for whatever purpose, to possess fraudulent cards will not be able to do so? The evidence of war-time and post-war Britain suggests that they will be able to possess them. In a Britain of national registration, conscription and rationing of food and clothes, 20,000 deserters remained undetected for years. They lived without difficulty, presumably with black market documents.

The evidence of other countries suggests that identity cards have no effect on law and order. The police have never expressed any difficulty in discovering the identity of individuals whom they have stopped. The evidence is that police officers have no difficulty in discovering the identity of people whom they stop by one means or another. The idea that we have to set up a system costing £350 million and £50 million to £100 million a year to run and a state bureaucracy employing 4,000 or 5,000 people with local offices everywhere, with great inconvenience, merely so that police officers may find it slightly easier to find out who the person is they have stopped is extraordinary.

The implications of the Bill are worrying. It will unnecessarily increase police powers. At present, a police officer can only stop and require a member of the public to give his name and address if the officer has reasonable grounds to suspect that that person is committing or has committed a criminal offence. A police officer can require the driver of a motor vehicle to stop under the Road Traffic Act 1972 or, in the case of an individual arriving at a port, under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984. Police officers are not entitled to go up to a member of the public and to ask for his identity without having reasonable grounds. The Bill will give police officers the right to stop a member of the public to check whether his identity card is valid. That would be a new offence and a new right will be given to the police. Whatever my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North may say, we would be giving the police a new right.

In the Willcock case, Lord Chief Justice Goddard said:

"From what we have been told by Counsel for the respondent, it is obvious that the police now, as a matter of routine, demand the production of national registration identity cards whenever they stop or interrogate a motorist for whatever cause".

He went on to point out the damage that such laws do to police-public relations—a point that must be borne in mind when my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North talks about public opinion polls and the public reaction. Lord Goddard also said:

"To use Acts of Parliament passed for particular purposes during the war, in times when the war has passed, except that technically a state of war exists, tends to turn law-abiding citizens into lawbreakers which is a most undesirable state of affairs. Further, in this country, we have always prided ourselves on the good feeling that exists between the police and the public and such action tends to make people resentful of the acts of the police and inclines them to obstruct the police instead of to assist them."

We should not go down that road of creating more offences and more reasons why the police will challenge the public and the public will challenge the police.

According to The Independent of 23 January, that view is now shared by most chief police officers. The powers in the Bill to stop an individual in a public place take us back to the sus laws of 1824, which were repealed some years ago as a result of their misuse by a small minority of police officers. Do we want to turn the clock back?

Another major implication of the Bill to which I referred in passing earlier is the attack on the right of the individual to privacy. Privacy, as J. W. Eaton has observed, is one of the personal attributes that most people cherish. Why should British citizens be forced, as citizens, to register with the state and to carry a card containing personal details that they must show to a police officer on demand? It will not stop at police officers. My hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North admitted as much, as have other hon. Members. Police officers will be the first. Soon it will be traffic wardens and then 101 council officials and other people who have the right to statutory entry to our homes. The information will be passed on to them. I do not believe that people will want to see such officials being given the right to see a national identity card on demand.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) who is a sponsor of the Bill said in the debate on his ten minute Bill on 21 June 1988:

"Clearly the Revenue and the DHSS will be able to assist on its—

the identity card's—

"production to help eliminate fraud . . . it will be up to the holder to decide whether he shows the card to private individuals. If he does not, the person asking to see it will be able to draw his own conclusions in the absence of a reasonable explanation."—[Official Report, 21 June 1988; Vol. 135, c. 976.]

That underlines the nonsense of those who argue for a voluntary system. How long before the attitude of mind, "What have you got to hide?" takes hold? The individual will find it impossible to be served in shops or to carry on normal business. Does the fact that a date of birth or residence of an individual is nobody's business count as a reasonable explanation?

The Data Protection Act 1984 was passed to protect the rights of an individual whose personal details are on computer. It was passed because of the increasing practice of recording personal data on computer. The Act says that such data cannot be used by unauthorised persons or be transferred between computers. In a letter today, the registrar has warned hon. Members of the serious consequences of the Bill. The Lindop committee on data protection described the use of a universal personal identity system and reported:

"It would . . . present a considerable threat to the privacy and perhaps the freedom of the private citizen."

It is recommended that UPI should not come in unless there has been special legislation and a committee to examine its purposes.

Finally—[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] My hon. Friends may cheer, but I have spoken for less long than my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North and others. The Bill needs to have a reasoned case put against it on grounds of principle and utility. If my hon. Friends want to examine the utility of the Bill they may do so; I propose to do the same. [HON. MEMBERS: "When?"] If my hon. Friends had been listening, they would have heard me.

The Bill, with its machine-readable, computer-coded cards and national register would place in the hands of a Government less benevolent than this Government—or even a Government who thought that they were motivated by benevolence—the power to control the basic rights of the individual. The fact that that is unlikely to happen in the United Kingdom is no reason to provide Governments with such an opportunity.

Edmund Burke declared:

"To innovate is not to reform."

Civil liberties are easy to remove but difficult to restore. The Bill is wrong in principle and would be dangerous in practice. It would create a large bureaucracy at an enormous cost to the taxpayer, increase the power of the state to no good purpose, invade the privacy of the individual and create a new criminal offence. It is a thoroughly illiberal and unnecessary Bill and I urge the House to vote against it.

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): I am grateful for this opportunity to join others in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing this important Bill. In an ideal world very few of us—certainly not those of us who regards ourselves as free-born Britons—would tolerate for a moment the idea of identity cards. I therefore have the greatest sympathy with the starting point of the opponents of the Bill. Sadly, however, we do not live in an ideal world. We cannot merely argue that unfortunate foreigners are plagued with identity cards and officious bureaucrats. My hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) mentioned the French police, for example. Today's world is very different from the world that we lived in in 1952, when the Conservatives were proud to have a bonfire of controls. Among the things that we got rid of was the wartime national identity card. We need to take account of the changes that have taken place in society and in attitudes. There is no doubt that the views expressed in today's opinion poll in The Times are widely felt. Any of us who regularly speak to our constituents realise that.

First, there is deep concern about crime. None of the supporters of my hon. Friend's Bill can prove that it would result in a significant improvement, but it must be resonable to presume that it would be a major step in the right direction. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) suggested, the deterrent effect must be of great importance in the fight against crime. The Police Federation supports the measure, and I understand that it has now been joined by the Association of Chief Police Officers, which has moved from opposition —or at least, serious doubt—to a position of support for the principle of a national identity card. There is an overwhelming case for taking action that would help in the struggle against crime. My hon. Friends are right that the Government have taken other measures in the fight against crime, but we must recognise that not only in this society but in all western societies crime is increasing, and we must do something about it. We must not ignore the promise that the Bill offers in that regard.

I shall not dwell on terrorism, because I know that many other hon. Members wish to speak and the point has already been made by my hon. Friends. In addition, there is the fight against drugs. The case for the Bill in the fight against crime, terrorism and drugs seems overwhelming.

I fully appreciate, and am sensitive to, the civil liberties arguments against the Bill. But nowadays we all carry numerous cards and means of identification and they are of benefit to us. Such means of identification would also be of benefit to young people if they had them. Whereas in 1952 we were not accustomed to documentation, we are now completely accustomed to it. No serious, law-abiding person regards it as an infringement of his liberties or a curtailment of his civil rights; he regards it as a benefit and a help, and that is what a national identity card will certainly be.

I entirely understand the sensitivity about police action. As with most things in life it is a question of striking a balance. We do not live in an ideal world, and some compromises have to be made. We must therefore accept a commitment to carry an identity card with the necessary conditions and potential sanctions available should we refuse to do so.

In the application of my hon. Friend's Bill—or a close approximation to it—absolute safeguards would be essential. The police must certainly not be allowed the powers that have been referred to. We cannot have Mrs. Bloggins being bullied by an officer of the law to produce her identity card or else. It would be up to the courts to establish a body of case law, and only with the greatest care would an officer of the law, with "reasonable cause" in the terms of the Bill, require a citizen to show his identity card.

There are many other advantages to my hon. Friend's proposals. I emphasise the importance of identity cards as we move towards a single market in 1992. This country has enough problems and difficulties in moving towards a single effective European market, such as VAT and all the other issues of which we are well aware. We do not need to construct or leave in place yet one more obstacle, particularly since, if that obstacle were removed, all the other benefits to which I have referred would accrue. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, who is at best agnostic on the questions of the national identity card, has said that while the rest of Europe can have open frontiers we must retain frontier control because of terrorism, crime and drugs. That is a nonsensical approach. The cause of law and order and the smooth working of the single market in 1992 with all the economic and political benefits that that will bring must be advanced by the implementation of the Bill.

It is worth emphasising, too, the importance of a national identity card scheme for immigration arrangements. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North, pointed out, we have hitherto worked with a system of high external barriers and virtually no control inside the country. That has created a panoply of entry clearance officers and the immigration appeals system that is painfully familiar to the Home Office. Hon. Members on both sides of the House with large ethnic minority communities in their constituencies are also painfully aware of those arrangements.

I accept that recent changes in immigration practice have improved matters but I am still deeply unhappy about the present state of affairs. When the nephew or aunt of a member of one of our ethnic minority communities wants to come to this country for a genuine three-week holiday, phenomenal problems are often caused simply because we know that, once under net, a person may be in the country for good. If we had an identity card, that problem would be removed. I can say with deep knowledge of my own ethnic minority community that those who are well established here—and, fortunately, more and more members of the ethnic minority communities are firmly and happily established nowadays—realise the benefits of an identity card system, whereas before they did not.

My experience—indeed my knowledge—is that one of the reasons why officials of the Home Office have had for decades a deep seated resistance to an identity card scheme has stemmed from fear of the reactions of ethnic minorities. That fear is no longer justified, and identity cards would be a positive benefit for ethnic minorities. The Government fear, however, that they would be accused of being authoritarian, which critics from the Opposition would be quick to latch on to. I believe that the Government should show courage and not be frightened of being called authoritarian. This scheme is a move in the right direction and will improve our fight against crime.

If I had had any doubts about my hon. Friend's proposals when I came here this morning the pathetic arguments against his proposal would have convinced me that he is right and his critics are wrong. We have heard objections on financial grounds, the difficulties for people wishing to change their name, and allegations that the documents could be forged. Such points cannot stand up to scrutiny. Those were demonstrations of the principle that hard cases make bad laws. They confirm that my hon. Friend's proposal is right. I would be prepared to consider a properly promoted voluntary identity card scheme if a compulsory scheme was too much to swallow. It would remove the Government from their problems with regard to the national football identity scheme.

I have pleasure in supporting my hon. Friend's Bill.

12.2 pm

Mr. James Lamond (Oldham, Central and Royton): I can remember the time when it was fashionable to say that we should not introduce so much legislation. We met 35 weeks a year, five days a week, and we were churning out enormous quantities of legislation, and it had to be halted. That was the view which was strongly held by Conservative Members. I must admit, however, that in recent parliaments that appears to have been forgotten, because we are churning out more and more legislation, even under a Government whose party has complained about the amount of restrictions continually being placed on individuals and on companies. We have a duty to look carefully at any proposals for new laws and new restrictions.

Although this Bill has only three pages and six clauses, it requires positive action by every citizen over the age of 12 years. We have heard that 48 million people will be required to do something positive if this small Bill becomes an Act. That is different from most other laws. Sadly, the poll tax legislation requires action, but not, perhaps, by so many people, because the responsible person in a household would complete the form. Before we embark on such a course, we must be satisfied that some benefits will flow from it.

I have listened carefully to discover the arguments in favour of a national identity card scheme. Most hon. Members who support the Bill rest their arguments on crime prevention. They claim that this scheme will help to prevent crime, about which we are all concerned. I cannot believe that. The right hon. Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) gave some examples of what has occurred recently in his constituency. Of couse, we were appalled by them, and most of us, even representing constituencies a bit further away from the centre of London, can cite similar examples. We are concerned that elderly ladies are mugged in underpassess, for example, and we want to do something positive about that.

Looking at it with sympathetic eyes., I could not understand what difference identity cards would make in the fight against crime. My hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) asked if we could expect a mugger to show his identity card. Of course, we could not. Before we can do that, we must catch the mugger. he will not stand around waiting to be asked for his identity card. Indeed, if we caught him, we would not need to ask for his card. He would be taken into custody right away.

Mr. Stern: Does the hon. Gentleman not regard it as slightly illogical that the proponents of this measure, who are claiming that it will reduce crime, begin by introducing an entirely new crime?

Mr. Lamond: That is a point, but it is not one that is important in my argument. If I believed for one moment that it would make some difference of reasonable significance to the level of crime, I would accept the hon. Gentleman's proposal. I do not believe, however, that it will help at all.

The right hon. Member for Brent, North said that those who do not believe that this measure would reduce crime had to put forward some alternative "magical" solution. There is no magical solution—certainly this is not one. I believe, however, that there is a straightforward solution. I do not want to go into it at length, but I support the view of those in my constituency and in Greater Manchester—including the police authority, which has written to me asking for my help in persuading the Home Secretary—that an increase in police officers, so that officers will be available to go out on the beat, would be a solution. There has been an increase in the numbers, and I am grateful for that.

Mr. John Patten: There has been an increase throughout the country.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: There are still not very many.

Mr. Lamond: I understand that the Home Secretary has tried to help, but that help was not sufficient. It never is. It is, however, a step in the right direction. That is the proper way to stop the crimes of which we have heard, and the sort of crimes that have caused so much anxiety in my constituency and surrounding areas that several newspapers used my correspondence with the Home Secretary as a basis for their articles. People strongly believe that more policemen on the beat—being seen in the community—would be a deterrent to crime. I do not accept that 48 million of us carrying identity cards would help to prevent crime.

It was said that we had identity cards during the war. It was said that they were to prevent fifth columnists. It would have been interesting to see how effective this scheme was. Presumably a fifth columnist was someone who came into the country secretly in a submarine in the north of Scotland. If he was ever stopped, the fact that he did not have an identity card would immediately reveal him as a fifth columnist. To suggest that any enemies—in this case Germany—would land spies on our shores fully equipped for their activities, but would forget to give them identity cards is nonsense. It is also nonsense to say that if we had identity cards crime would be reduced. One might as well tie that to the fact that, now many years later, when rationing ended, there was an enormous crime wave. One could argue that if he had kept rationing on until today that crime wave might not have occurred. There is no sensible connection between identity cards and a reduction in crime. I do not believe that it would have any effect on the crime rate. If I thought it would I would be more inclined to listen to the argument.

It has also been suggested that the ethnic minorities and the immigrant population will be helped by the introduction of an identity card. In common with the hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) I have a large immigrant community in my constituency—more than 9,000. That community encounter problems over bringing spouses to this country, but the main problem arises when relatives want to visit.

If somebody came and stayed on in the community, how would an identity card help? Let us suppose the police visited one of the areas of my constituency which is largely made up of immigrants and swept through the whole area asking to see identity cards. If the police stopped somebody in the street at random and asked for that person's identity card, and that person—providing that he managed to get the point across—said that he had left it at home, what then? He would have seven days to produce it. He would go off and that would be the last that the police would see of him. That is what happens. I confess that someone came to my constituency after I had persuaded the Home Office to let him in. Within the week the police were in touch with me because that man had been picked up working. I do not want to give away any secrets, but presumbably he got all the papers he needed to obtain a job. If people can do that, they would certainly get an identity card without much trouble.

I do not see any practical purpose in supporting the Bill as it will put tremendous pressure on the population. One can imagine trying to get 48 million people to understand exactly what is required. There would be problems when people changed their name, although I accept that that happens only occasionally. But consider all the hassle involved when people change their address, which happens far more frequently. A study of the poll tax legislation and what is required of people when they change their address illustrates the magnitude of the problem. All of that hassle would be gone through for no purpose or benefit, and for that reason I shall vote against the Bill.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): I believe that, following the speech of the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond), it would be helpful if I outlined the Government's views on this matter.

So far this has been an excellent debate and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) not only on his success in the ballot and on the eloquence with which he commended his Bill to the House, but on the topicality of the subject, which is much due to my hon. Friend's efforts in recent weeks. There has been a great deal of interest recently in the House and elsewhere—one only need look at this morning's press—about the idea of a national identity card. My hon. Friend has given the House a welcome opportunity to debate this issue and we are grateful.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have had this matter under review for a number of months. Many people have firm views on this subject, as we have heard during the course of the debate. We have received and are continuing to receive many representations on this issue. When considering those representations we should start afresh and we should not have any preconceived notions. We need to examine the merits, the advantages and disadvantages of the scheme, with, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) said, the clarity of a balance sheet. My right hon. Friend gave an excellent and fascinating speech.

There are many elements, for and against, that must be weighed up carefully. In looking at any proposal for a compulsory system of identity cards, there are some general considerations—general considerations is a more pragmatic phrase to use than general principles—to which we must pay regard. On the one hand, in the balance of consideration there are the possible benefits to the state through enhanced security and immigration policy, and enhanced anti-crime activities by the police and society. There could also be benefits to the private citizen, who could acquire a convenient and certain means of easily proving his or her identity for a range of purposes—not just those restricted to police activity on the streets. We must balance those considerations against the disadvantages, such as the cost. We must judge whether it is good value for money to spend upwards of £350 million to set up such a scheme and upwards of £100 million to administer it. Given the problems that the police face we must also consider the additional burden on them caused by enforcing this scheme, as my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North is seeking to introduce a new criminal law.

There is also the possible negative reaction from some members of society to having such obligations imposed upon them. We must balance individual liberties with the needs of the state.

The proposals outlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North must be judged by the considerations I have outlined. I shall attempt to weigh up those considerations when I answer his speech and the other speeches made in favour of the Bill. I note that all those speeches have been made by my right hon. and hon. Friends, but such a speech may come from the Opposition Benches later. Heaven only knows, perhaps the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) will stand up and tell us that it is Labour party policy to be in favour of compulsory identity cards. I hope that he catches your eye shortly, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Although I shall consider the details of the merits and problems of a compulsory scheme, the first aspect to which I want to refer and to which a number of right hon. and hon. Friends have already referred, is the practice in other European countries. My hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North gave us an account of his telephone conversation with the French embassy and apparently embassy officials thought that the practice in their country was to have a compulsory scheme. I am told that my hon. Friend was given inaccurate advice, and I am not sure to which officials he spoke. There is certainly a school of thought on this issue that asserts that an identity card scheme must be a good thing for this country because so many of our European neighbours have such a scheme.

Identity cards are compulsory in the following countries; Belgium, Germany, Greece, Luxembourg and Spain. There are voluntary schemes in Austria and France —to which my hon. Friend has alluded. In France, the voluntary scheme is, de facto, a compulsory scheme in many circumstances. There is also a voluntary scheme in Italy where the identity cards are hand-written, and in Portugal. Denmark, the Republic of Ireland, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands have no identity card system. There is, however, a lively parliamentary debate currently taking place in the Netherlands about whether to have such a scheme.

Outside Europe, the same is certainly true of Australia, where the issue of whether to have identity cards to help with revenue fraud led to vigorous debates and the eventual withdrawal of a Bill by the Government when it fell in the Senate. There are no identity cards in New Zealand, Canada or the United States of America. Although there are compulsory schemes in Europe, they are not the norm.

Mr. Ralph Howell: Is my hon. Friend aware that Denmark has a national register of all residents and that there are identity cards in Sweden—I have seen them—on which it is possible to have a credit card number included voluntarily? When the Minister says that identity cards are not the norm, I must advise him that far more countries in the EEC have a card of some description than do not. Only Holland, Britain and the Republic of Ireland do not.

Mr. Patten: I was referring to the fact that compulsory schemes were not the norm in western Europe. I was recording those countries that do and those that do not have voluntary or compulsory schemes—I hope for the advantage of the House—so that we can have the facts before us.

I should like to make two general points to those who urge us to follow the idea of compulsory schemes, such as exist in some European countries, like Belgium and West Germany. First, I am aware of no evidence to suggest that identity cards have been of substantial benefit in tackling crime. That surprises me but I must report it to the House because, needless to say, it was something that we wanted to go into.

Secondly, there is the matter of geography. As we can all appreciate, immigration control at the point of entry presents particular problems to countries with land frontiers. In such countries there is a clear argument for the maintenance of some form of fairly vigorous internal control, in which I freely admit that an identity card system could play an important part. It may be different for us as we have only one land boundary with a foreign state—between the Province and Republic of Ireland.

During the debate much has been made of the benefits that might flow from the introduction of compulsory identity cards. We have heard from my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North and others that enabling the police to establish people's identity quickly and accurately with such a system would be a useful weapon in the battle against crime in everything from terrorism to mugging.

I shall deal with each of those arguments in detail later but shall now give a list of the major arguments that have been put forward so far——

Mr. Whitney: I understand that my hon. Friend is, as it were, leaving the international scene——

Mr. Patten: I was exiting.

Mr. Whitney: Well, before he does so, will my hon. Friend comment on the European angle of this issue, which a number of us have raised? It must be faced by the Government because they will run into real trouble in 1992 in a number of areas and this would be an unnecessary trouble. My hon. Friend seems to make much of the fact that not all the identity card schemes in European Community countries are compulsory, but the fact is—if he does not know this, his officials should tell him—that the voluntary schemes in, for example, France, are universal in effect. One could almost say that no Frenchman would be seen dead without his identity card. Therefore, my hon. Friend's point is without validity. The reality is that continental European Community countries have identity cards and that has enabled them to move towards open frontiers. If we cannot move towards open frontiers, there will be serious implications for us. Will my hon. Friend comment on that aspect of this issue?

Mr. Patten: I welcome the intervention of my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney). The fact that the voluntary scheme in France is de facto compulsory is something that I specifically stated a few moments ago to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North. There will indeed be continuing problems—some still to be resolved—about what we shall do at our own frontier ports after 1992. There is an argument about proper freedom of movement within the Community, but there is also the equally proper argument about the fact that a sea barrier, a land port or an airport is a good place at which to try to operate against illegal immigrants and terrorists. My right hon. Friend has considerable problems still to resolve in connection with the European Community on that point.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): Will my hon. Friend give way before he leaves Europe?

Mr. Patten: Of course. I will stay with Europe for my hon. Friend.

Mrs. Gorman: Does my hon. Friend know whether, in countries with compulsory cards, there has been a marked reduction in crime, drug abuse or illegal immigration and all the other things that we are given to understand are the reasons that the cards would be a good idea in this country? Does my hon. Friend really think that emulating France—renowned for its bureaucratic structures from Napoleon onwards—would be good for us?

Mr. Patten: I rather like France so I shall not comment —[Interruption.] No, that is not a statement of Home Office policy, it is a personal statement to the House of Commons. I shall not follow my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) down the road of Anglo-French relations and am unable to answer her question about whether the introduction of identity cards —compulsory or voluntary—in a number of European countries has had an effect on either immigration or drug issues. I did mention crime earlier in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North. Much to my surprise, I found no evidence that identity cards had reduced crime levels. I would, prima facie, have expected to find some evidence of that, but we have not found it so far. I must report that fact to the House.

Turning from Europe to the United Kingdom it is also claimed that compulsory cards would curb under-age drinking because licensees could demand to see cards in cases of doubt. It is also claimed that they would help to prevent social security fraud and it has been suggested that an identity card would help us in travelling at least within the European Community as it could be used as a travel document.

However, we must consider how useful identity cards would be in achieving the sorts of things that would be expected of them. It would doubtless be quite possible to devise a card that could be used as a travel document. If such a card were to be available to all British residents, and not only to those eligible for a British passport—that is an important point—it would need to state the bearer's nationality or at least his immigration status. It would certainly have to be issued on more or less the same checks and evidence as are required for a passport. The idea of using an identity card as a travel document is interesting. Indeed, the Select Committee on Home Affairs has recommended that a page from the new Euro-passport could be put to that end.

Such a document could also be used as proof that its holder is old enough to drink in a pub, probably more accurately than the apparently forged birth certificates to which the hon. Minister for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) referred as being a problem that is rife in public houses in his constituency. I do not think—and I have taken advice from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security—that it would be much use in trying to prevent social security fraud, because false claims are generally based not on identity but on misrepresentation by individuals working and signing and claiming at the same time.

Mr. Whitney: Not always.

Mr. Patten: Not always, as my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe, with his experience of these matters, quite correctly observes. [Laughter.] For the avoidance of doubt, as Mr. Speaker would say, I was referring to my hon. Friend's distinguished past ministerial career rather than anything else. My hon. Friend is very quick this morning.

Mr. David Atkinson (Bournemouth, East): My hon. Friend has just mentioned that he has been advised by our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security that identity cards would not be helpful in this respect. But surely when people are asked to act for others in claiming benefit they are required to provide proof of identity. In this respect, a card would be extremely helpful.

Mr. Patten: That is a good point, if I may say so. Pensioners suffer in the same way. When they want to make use of other benefits, such as bus travel vouchers, they are asked to produce evidence that they are in receipt of the state pension. They do not always like to carry their pension books with them—understandably, I think.

Mr. Stern: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Patten: Yes, if it is about pension books.

Mr. Stern: It is indeed. I do not know whether my hon. Friend has had reason recently to go to a post office sorting office to collect a letter that has been impossible to deliver. If he were to do that, he would find a list of about 20 documents, any of which is acceptable as proof of identity. I accept that an identity card could be used, but there is no need for one.

Mr. Patten: Different organisations tend to have different criteria. That can have its own problems.

I think the most important consideration for a compulsory system funded by the state is whether such a system would help the state, help the police, help society, to deal with crime. Whilst my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North and others quite rightly pointed to the crime problem facing all west European countries, the good news is that in the last 12 months the crime rate overall in this country has begun to fall. That is because 95 per cent. of all crime is related to property, and property crime, thanks to the efforts of so many active citizens in this country in supporting the police, is going down fast. However, violent crime, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North has pointed out, has continued to increase. I think it is correct to say, for the record, that crime is going down, and not up, and long may that trend continue.

Mr. Ralph Howell: The fact is that crime has been increasing year by year. The latest figures are for 1987, and they are higher than those for 1986. Although my hon. Friend is correct in saying that there has been some reduction in such crimes as burglary and theft, the fact is that violent crime is still increasing. A lot of crime is not reported, simply because the detection rate in the case of burglary and so on is so low. Those people are demoralised and are disinclined even to report incidents.

The Home Office is making a very serious mistake if it believes that crime is declining. As I have said, violent crime is increasing, though other types of crime are declining. That is not a very desirable situation, and I must ask my hon. Friend what the Home Office intends to do to solve the problem. I would put the question even if crime were not rising at such an unacceptable rate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Interventions should be brief.

Mr. Patten: I must not get drawn into too wide a discussion lest I fall foul of your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I would say only two things in response to my hon. Friend. Clear-up rates for violent crime are very high. Ninety-six out of every 100 people suspected of homicide are, in fact, found. In the case of crimes such as robbery and rape, the rate is between 70 per cent. and 75 per cent.

My hon. Friend puts forward an important point about possible under-reporting of the true amount of crime. I think we shall have to rest our argument until we have the results of the British crime survey, which attempts to go into these issues in great detail. We shall have those results within the next three or four months.

I shall now try, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to make a bit more progress in looking at the importance of compulsory schemes in dealing with crime, and whether we think it a good idea to introduce them.

[Mr. Patten]

I am not aware of any evidence that the abolition of identity cards in 1952—my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) took us through the history of that—made the work of the police more difficult. Historically, there is no clear evidence that the crime rate increased, either. One might expect some empirical evidence of that, but it is not shown by the statistics of the time. That may be because, as experience suggests, the main task of the police lies in apprehending criminals, not identifying them once they are apprehended. This is an important issue and one that my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North was quite right to raise.

It was for this reason that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote to the Association of Chief Police Officers towards the end of last year to seek an up-to-date opinion. Its view was that, although a compulsory scheme would have some advantages for the police, there would also be disadvantages. There would only be a real advantage if people were required not merely to present identity cards but to carry them at all times and produce them on request.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: If chief constables were given a choice between a national identity scheme and all the cost that that would involve, and extra policemen, I can almost guarantee that they would settle for the money being spent on extra policemen.

Mr. Patten: We did not put that question to the association and I am not sure that all chief constables always have the same attitude to every issue.

It may be argued that if the introduction of identity cards is of any use at all, however marginal, we should introduce them because of the problems of crime. However, that would be to ignore some cogent contrary arguments.

We must not forget that we are talking not about the introduction of an identity card scheme but the reintroduction of a scheme that lapsed well within living memory. The national registration system adopted on the outbreak of war in 1939—as my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke said—included a requirement that an identity card should be carried and produced to a police officer on demand. The system survived the war, but, in time, the power of the police to demand that citizens should show their identity cards came to be resented very strongly. The resentment of one citizen led to the celebrated case of Willcock v. Muckle, in which the divisional court strongly criticised the police for demanding to see cards purely as a matter of routine. My hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke referred to what Lord Chief Justice Goddard said on that occasion. Not long afterwards, identity cards were abolished.

It is true that many people, including some who have written to the Home Office, take the view that as respectable citizens they would be quite content to carry identity cards. It is entirely reasonable to say that, but it is illogical to attempt to move from that to the idea that only those with something to hide will object.

If I were a criminal with half my wits about me, going out bent on crime in the evenings, I would make certain that I had my identity card with me. If I were stopped, I could then prove my identity and move on, apparently lawfully, down the street to carry out illegal pursuits.

As at least one of my hon. Friends has shown today, it is likely that some people who value their liberty as British citizens to move unimpeded throughout the United Kingdom would resent the imposition of compulsory cards. Others, including members of ethnic minorities and young people, might feel that if they were asked to produce an identity card on demand the state would look at them with unwarranted suspicion. I am sure that the police service would not gratuitously seek—as I think my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North thinks and I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North feels—to require the production of identity cards. However, it would not be surprising if the fact that they were around fanned the flames of suspicion—often unnecessarily—that that would happen. That could have a rather corrosive effect on relations between police and some sections of the community, however wrongly based the fears were.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Would the Minister not agree that some years ago research that was highlighted in the debates leading to the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 showed that the law of sus, the casual stopping of people which happened several hundred thousand if not a million times a year, caused great resentment against the police? Would that not occur again if we had national identity cards and police stopping people and asking questions?

Mr. Patten: The hon. Gentleman is correct. That research showed that there was resentment.

We have gone as far as we need to go with the cost argument. I have laid the costs of the compulsory scheme in front of the House. Many people would think that those costs produce uncertain benefits and their uncertainty means that the scheme would face vigorous and sincere opposition. Some Members have spoken about a poll produced by Public Attitude Surveys Research. I hope that the people interviewed in the poll mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North and who are recorded as being in favour of a compulsory scheme, will reflect on those uncertain benefits.

A survey published today by Public Attitudes Surveys Research shows that some groups would resent having to carry identity cards. The survey showed that groups among whom the opponents of national identity cards outnumber supporters are

"ethnic minorities, people in Scotland and inner London, readers of the Guardian and, to a less marked degree, readers of the Independent."

Many of my hon. Friends would regard the last two facts as a clinching reason for voting in favour of the Bill. It is significant that the survey says:

"Among those interviewed from an Asian or Afro-Caribbean background, 65 per cent rejected the idea of a card."

That shows the difficulties and it would be foolish not to recognise them.

Mr. Atkinson: The Minister has said that cost is one of the reasons for not introducing an identity card scheme. What thought has been given to inviting those who already issue plastic cards, principally the banks, to discuss whether the kind of information in the Bill could be included on those cards together with the bank's own information? That could be done at no cost to the state.

Mr. Patten: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have given considerable thought to that matter and I shall come to it later when I look at the pros and cons of voluntary identity cards.

Mr. Michael Shersby (Uxbridge): My hon. Friend spoke about the police view and said that the Association of Chief Police Officers has said that cards would be advantageous only if they were carried all the time. What is the Government's view of the possibility of carrying cards all the time as I understand that that is not proposed in the Bill? Under the terms of the Bill a citizen would be required to produce his card within seven days, as he is required to do in, for example, the case of a driving licence.

Mr. Patten: My hon. Friend raises an important issue. The Asssociation of Chief Police Officers said that it would only be helpful in the battle against crime if people had to carry compulsory identity cards all the time and were obliged to produce them. The association did not think that a system that allows someone to say, "I will produce it later at the station, guv", would help the police in the battle against crime.

I shall now deal with representations that we received about a voluntary scheme. That may assist my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson). The basis of a voluntary scheme would be an official identity card that would be issued on request. Since there would be no obligation to carry one, there could be no plausible objections to it on civil liberty grounds. The civil liberty argument, which I respect, is against being compelled to carry a card. On the other hand, there can be no such argument against the freedom to carry such a card if one wants to.

I have pointed out that a compulsory system would cost the taxpayer a lot of money. The viability of a voluntary scheme would depend on whether it is attractive enough to be self-financing and for financial institutions to put their money there. We would not want to run such a scheme with a substantial Government subsidy.

While a voluntary scheme is unlikely to have much to offer in the way of improved efforts against crime, for immigration control or even as a travel document it may bring some benefits to the private citizen. I have already mentioned that a compulsory identity card could be used in a suitable format as a travel document. A card introduced under a voluntary system could serve the same purpose and in principle replace the British visitor's passport, as the Home Affairs Select Committee suggested.

Then there is the matter of under-age drinking. The Licensing Act 1988 tightened control by making it a strict liability offence to serve people under 18. I am pleased to report that, as a result, many more publicans are demanding proof of identity. Both the Home Secretary and I welcome local voluntary card schemes which have been developed under the aegis of the National Licensed Victuallers Association, the Morning Advertiser and the National Association of Licensed House Managers. These schemes seem to be working well.

It has also been suggested that an identity card scheme, whether compulsory or voluntary, could help in banking and retail transactions. That may have been behind the intervention of my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East. That must be a matter for the commercial judgment of the banks and retailers involved. It is for them to decide what value any national voluntary scheme would have for the reduction of fraud. As yet they have made no representations to this effect, although I know that stamping out fraud is much in the mind of my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North and my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North.

Mr. Waller: Does my hon. Friend agree that it is interesting that credit card companies have rejected the idea of including a photograph on credit cards because of the difficulties involved? Does that not also show that the concept of having a photograph in a national identity card scheme will also involve difficulties, such as those mentioned earlier in the debate?

Mr. Patten: My hon. Friend is on to a good point. There may come a time when with the present rate of growth of credit card fraud it is no longer a business expense which businesses can bear. They may want to think about photographs. Hitherto they have rejected the idea of photographs on credit cards.

Mr. Bermingham: Does the Minister agree that to have an identity card which contains the photograph, residence, signature and everything would facilitate fraud? Bearing in mind that people age, the card could be used even more effectively in a fraudulent transaction.

Mr. Patten: That is an open question. I see the hon. Gentleman's point, but a tightly run scheme, which would be extremely expensive, could help. It is a matter of judgment. That is a reason why I welcome today's debate.

A voluntary scheme would not be successful and self-financing unless a substantial number of members of the public would find the cards sufficiently useful to be worth paying for. The key question—this is central to the whole issue of voluntary cards—is whether there are many situations in which people have problems proving their identity and would be saved difficulties or delays if they bought officially issued identity cards. The answer to that question resides in what is on the card.

Another question is what information could in practical terms be recorded on the card, as the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish pointed out. In that respect, modern technology issues a wide and ever increasing range of technological options. There are not just strips on the backs of cards; there are now smart cards—rather a good name, generally, for the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks). The hon. Gentleman is not in his place, but I hope that someone will draw that remark to his attention. Smart cards contain silicon chips, which can record an enormous amount of information. We need to take account of the opportunities without allowing what can be done to take precedence over what should be done. Whatever else happens, we should not allow any of the debate about identity cards to be driven by the availability of technology, because important matters of principle must be considered.

Mr. Shersby: My hon. Friend has referred to the existence of smart cards. Does he agree that they are the ideal cards for those people who voluntarily wish to carry cards containing details of their medical history and so on which can be made available in an emergency? This kind of card will appeal to many people who are interested in the idea of an identity card for that purpose.

Mr. Patten: I suspect that, in years to come, whatever happens to the debate about identity cards, some commercial companies will decide to offer to the public a smart card which can record all sorts of information on a voluntary, opt-in basis. My hon. Friend is right again.

I have said that the Government consider that the costs and penalties attached to a compulsory scheme outweigh its benefits. It would, however professionally and impartially administered, carry risks for police relationships with the public that they serve, and we must consider that point. It would be very expensive and the state would have to pay for it. The Government are not persuaded that a compulsory scheme should be introduced.

A voluntary scheme is another matter. Certainly, the less complete its coverage, the less useful it would be to the state. On the other hand, it might have some benefits to the public and, therefore, might well become self-financing. But, as Mr. Speaker says in this place, for the avoidance of doubt I had better make it clear that only a self-financing scheme would be of any interest to the Government at the moment. As The Times said in today's leader,

"a voluntary scheme is at least worth more intensive Home Office study and public debate."

Today's Second Reading provides a good opportunity for that debate to begin.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I would like to consider further the pros and cons of a voluntary identity card scheme—all the points which have been made by my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North and others during the extremely interesting debate held so far. We should like to report back to the House in due course.

Mr. Alistair Darling (Edinburgh, Central): This has been a useful opportunity to debate the issue of national identity cards. We should be grateful to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) for having given us that opportunity, if for nothing else.

The debate has not really started, although there has been growing interest in identity cards over the past couple of years, for two obvious reasons. First, with 1992 and the advent of the single European market, the concept of a Europe without frontiers has obviously been of interest. We have been told emphatically by the Home Secretary, however, that—whatever else happens—the United Kingdom will maintain its frontier controls, so the attraction of national identity cards in this country is obviously diminished.

The second argument seems to have taxed hon. Members' minds this morning. Crime has undoubtedly grown. In some ways, it is an indictment of the Government that so much criticism has come from their own Back Benchers about the fact that crime has been increasing. We have heard much today from the something-must-be-done brigade. Having listened to the contributions of many hon. Members, it seems to me that the idea that something must be done has led them to endorse this scheme.

I accept that the hon. Member for Norfolk, North is against crime. So is everybody else—I have yet to hear anyone say that they are in favour of it—but it is surely wrong to suggest that the national identity card scheme proposed in this Bill in particular is an aspirin that will solve the problem of rising crime. It is interesting that the Minister should say that in most countries in which national identity cards have been compulsorily introduced the crime rate has not diminished. That seems to kill the arguments of those who advocate the scheme today. I cannot understand that there could be any doubt about that. We should ask not what identity cards will do because the great problem is detection. Police officers will tell hon. Members that their big difficulty is not knowing whom they have caught, but catching somebody in the first place.

Mrs. Gorman: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of the police audit report that has recently been produced? It states that only 10 per cent. of our police are actually engaged in chasing and catching criminals, and that 30 to 40 per cent. are in motor cars driving around the streets. It is an extraordinary document and well worth reading.

Mr. Darling: I am not sure that the pattern is the same in every police force. Some chief constables, such as the one in my area, have taken substantial steps to put more officers on the beat and have fewer officers engaged in tasks that are not particularly productive.

Identity cards, whether compulsory or voluntary, will not assist the free movement of people in Europe or the detection of those suspected of having committed offences. We must look at the merits of the proposed scheme.

These days, there is a curious fascination with plastic cards. Much information can be put on a little card. As we have heard, to introduce a compulsory or voluntary identity scheme would be to open a door that would not be capable of being closed. The right hon. Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson), as his contribution wore on, added more and more to the list of what might be added to a little plastic card. Those who support the introduction of such a card would reduce every man, woman and child in this country to a number to be programmed at will. The idea that every individual would have his or her life story on a little metal strip on a little plastic card is objectionable. The universal personal indicator—that is what some people call such numbers—on a card could include an individual's medical history, work progress, financial status, what he did, where he did it, and where he was stopped. All that information could be revealed by passing a card through a computer terminal. That is a great step, and I should be reluctant to take it.

Mr. Pawsey: Despite what the hon. Gentleman said, the figures show that 57 per cent. of the population are in favour of the card. How does he reconcile that with the card that he is outlining?

Mr. Darling: I shall refer to that point in due course. As I said, the debate has only just started. I remind the hon. Gentleman that, when the Government introduced their proposals for the poll tax in England and Wales, the majority of people thought that they were a good thing. When they found out what they are about, the majority thought that they were a bad thing. As the debate on identity cards proceeds, more and more people will come to the view that their disadvantages will outweigh any advantages.

Mr. Ralph Howell: Why does the hon. Gentleman suggest that it must be a plastic card? Nothing in the Bill states that it is to be a plastic card. I have been at pains to explain that everything on the card should be readable by the person who holds it. If there is a space on the card for voluntary information, it would be filled in at the request of the holder.

Mr. Darling: The hon. Gentleman suggested that the card should be capable of being read. I am sorry that I misrepresented him. If the right hon. Member for Brent, North has his way, it will be a formidable card as more and more information is added. If the card is capable of being read and, therefore, the information is typed on to it or put on in some other way, the risks of fraud will be greater. The hon. Gentleman might like to visit the immigration and nationality department at Harmondsworth, which deals with cards that are suspected of having been in the hands of somebody who had committed fraud. I visited it earlier this week and saw six French identity cards, only one of which was genuine. The rest were clever forgeries, but it had taken a number of scientists a long time to establish that. The more one relies on traditional methods, the greater the risk of fraud.

Once one opens the door, it is easy to understand how abuses set in. At the press of a button, someone in Government can programme the card to be acceptable or unacceptable in any given circumstances. Doors can be opened and closed. We all know that if one presents an Access card to a garage it can be checked before credit is given. It does not take a great mind to realise that the same could happen with an identity card if it were decided that access should be denied to a certain category of people.

In Malaysia some years ago cards were colour-coded blue for nationals, brown for convicts and other colours for those who had offended against the political beliefs of the Government. It is not difficult to appreciate that the technology exists to programme cards in that way. I am not suggesting for one moment that that is what the hon. Member for Norfolk, North wants, but the imagination of one or two of his Back Bench colleagues might run riot at the possibilities open to them.

What is the problem with crime? Is it identification or detection? The police tell us that it is detection, so national identity cards will not assist.

The Bill proposes a compulsory scheme. I understand that the Government are not prepared to rule out a voluntary one, but both have their difficulties. There is a world of difference between choosing to carry bankers' cards or identity cards to get into libraries and the introduction of a compulsory identity card scheme. The difference is that we choose to carry those other cards. When one considers a voluntary scheme, one must bear in mind the example of bankers' cards. There is no legal requirement that one must present a bankers' card when cashing a cheque, but it might as well be compulsory because as far as I know, with the exception of the post office in the House, no-one will accept a cheque without a bankers' card.

If a voluntary scheme were acceptable, it would have to have all the panoply, complications and expense of a compulsory scheme or it would not work. No one would accept a national identity card unless there were confidence in the scheme.

Those in favour of the scheme say that people could be easily identified. That assumes that the police will stop people and ask them to produce identity cards. The police say that the scheme would work only if they were allowed to do just that.

Mr. Bermingham: Does my hon. Friend agree that clause 1(3) is rather silly? Suppose my hon. Friend visited the seaside to go swimming on a warm summer's day. Would he be expected to carry his identity card as he goes fom the car to the seashore? Perhaps his wife would be expected to carry her card. That is the sort of silliness that appears in the Bill.

Mr. Darling: That is a problem. If I were minded to swim in the river Forth, I might want to carry a card as I might not be confident of emerging from it because of the chill of the water and the pollution. Someone might nip out to buy a Sunday newspaper and be confronted by a constable asking for an identity card. That person will have to visit the police station within seven days to produce it, which is objectionable and will not lead to good relations.

It is instructive to consider the case of Wilcock v. Muckle. A motorist was stopped because he was suspected of speeding and asked to produce his driving licence. He was asked also to produce his identity card. He refused because he considered that the police did not need it and knew who he was. The constable wanted to see it because he had been used to asking for it. That is precisely the situation that I foresee arising if the identity card system is to work. The police say that if it is to work they will have to do just that.

The cases most commonly cited by the hon. Member for Norfolk, North and by the right hon. Member for Brent, North are those in which a group of young people gathers in the street and causes bother. The difficulty there is getting hold of the individuals concerned, not of finding out who they are. Most of us who have experience of such matters know that although a person detained on the street may initially refuse to say who he is, during discussions in the police car on the way to the police station he will generally come to the conclusion that it is better to say who he is. The police still detain him to check up because although they have the person's name, they want to be sure who he is.

The right hon. Member for Brent, North gave several harrowing examples of people who were the victims of terrible attacks, but he should ask in how many cases attackers have been detected and brought to justice. Speaking as a Member of Parliament in whose constituency 25 per cent. of the population are pensioners, the problem is not a question of identity. The most common problem is that somebody comes to the door and shows a card of some sort to the pensioner. The pensioner admits the person and is then robbed. The police never find the people concerned unless they stumble across them in some other circumstances because they do not know where to start looking. As the Minister has said, the assailants will carry identity cards because they know that if they are stopped they will get into trouble if they do not have them, but they will never leave their identity cards at the scene of the crime to assist in detection.

The Association of Chief Police Officers, whose members should know about this issue, readily recognises that there are pros and cons and that the case is not proven. The association said to the Home Secretary that if he wanted such a scheme he would have to make the case for having it. The example has been given of the sus laws and the difficulties and ill-feeling that can be caused. Public support is important.

Several hon. Members referred to a poll today. The debate has only just started, so it is not surprising that many people, when asked whether they would like identity cards, can see the advantages because they think about their own bank cards. It is interesting to note that there were two groups of people in which the majority were against identity cards. One group was the ethnic minority population. That is not surprising as a great deal of evidence shows that they are the victims of being stopped, searched and questioned by police far more than other people. Their experience has led them to believe that with identity cards the problem would continue and might become worse.

The second group is one that I know something about —people living in Scotland. The reason why they are against identity cards is simple. Because of the controversy about the poll tax, most people in Scotland are very much aware that the Government have attached to us all an individual identifying number. They are aware of the arguments, whether practical or relative to civil liberties. Because Scotland has been used as a laboratory for the Government's poll tax plans, public awareness there is far greater than it is in other parts of the country. But just as awareness of poll tax problems is growing in England and Wales, so, when the debate gets under way—if it ever does —on identity cards, public perceptions will change. If Scottish opinion is anything to go by, I hope that opinions will change in other parts of the country and will result in a change of Government in this country.

The case is not proved in respect of 1992. When speaking to immigration and nationality officers earlier this week, they told me that they preferred frontier controls because the alternative would be to go into areas demanding to see identity cards and that would cause difficulties, which we would wish to discourage. Another question to be considered is the status of the information on the cards. The Home Secretary is even now having discussions with his opposite numbers throughout Europe with a view to including common information on immigration and nationality statistics. I can imagine a situation in the future when an immigration officer in Greece might consider that somebody is not to be admitted to Greece and that refusal might be good for the rest of Europe, even though if the person presented himself for whatever reason in the United Kingdom a different decision might have been taken.

There are all sorts of different standards of information, and different prejudices and criteria are applied. While I was at Harmondsworth, I was shown a computer containing more than 3,000 names of people who had had some sort of adverse comment made on them by immigration officials. They are not people who have wrongly applied to come into this country or who have wrongly been refused; they are people who have merely come to an immigration official's attention. Hon. Members can imagine the sort of difficulties that we would have if we were dealing with 45 million people—and potentially 200 million people throughout the EEC.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Is my hon. Friend aware that the use of that information is a serious matter and that immigration officials have recourse to that computer? They can use it against individuals seeking to enter this country merely because an adverse comment has been made on an earlier visit although nothing illegal has been contemplated or done.

Mr. Darling: I can do better than that. When I visited terminal 3 at Heathrow the name of someone seeking to enter the country appeared on the computer screen. An officer kindly showed me how to key in the right information. The officials thought that there might be an inconsistency. I did not stay very long in that department. As I was leaving Heathrow so, too, was the gentleman, so it could not have been a permanent problem. He was admitted as a visitor, I understand. That illustrates the difficulties that are likely to arise when one is dealing with prejudice, or with the interpretation of a given set of facts by an individual who has the power to put information on to a computer. If that information can then be transmitted in connection with a compulsory identity card scheme further difficulties are likely.

Hon. Members have referred to terrorists and drug traffickers. Does the House seriously imagine that someone seeking to bring heroin or cocaine into the country or intending to blow up property or individuals would make the mistake of coming here without identification? Such people will have identity cards, and good ones at that. The cards might not belong to them but they will pass muster at most ports of entry and will be acceptable to a police officer seeking to ascertain whether an individual is who he says he is. In any case, under the Bill—even if the terrorist or drug trafficker does not have an identity card he can say, "If you bear with me, I will come back in seven days with one." Seven days later he will either have obtained an identity card or, more likely, have disappeared.

There is a risk of forgery and a flourishing black market. What price a little card that can tell the whole story of a person's life? I am sure that the Economic League and similar agencies would love to get hold of such information.

The scheme would create a vast bureaucracy—an industry of identity. The passport office is struggling to do its job, but there were delays last year and more delays are predicted this year. We know of the formidable problems at Lunar house, which deals with a comparatively small number of people. Apparently it will be 1990 before Lunar house clears the backlog of mail that it had accumulated 18 months ago.

Mr. Bermingham: Bearing in mind the fact that computer hacking has become a prevalent crime, my hon. Friend can imagine the type of information that fraudsters could extract from such records. That is a serious point.

Mr. Darling: My hon. Friend is right. It came as a shock to many of us to hear that even the Ministry of Defence computers had been penetrated on two occasions. Although the Minister of State told me that it was low-grade information and that security was not threatened, it was nevertheless information on a Ministry of Defence file. A computer containing information on 40 million people—goodness knows how much information on each—would be a paradise for hackers and for anyone who could get the information legally or illegally. What would happen if the system were privatised? Knowing the present Government, if it could be privatised it would be privatised. The temptation to sell or make available the information would be formidable. We must bear in mind that the police computer is also vulnerable and open to unauthorised use.

It is common knowledge that private investigators, many of whom are former policemen, can speak to their ex-colleagues on the old-boy network and discover information that ought not to be revealed. That is happening day in and day out, throughout the country. The police national computer will be a mere abacus compared with the computer required to administer the national identity card scheme.

The Minister has mentioned the experience of other countries, but I believe that it is sufficient to say that the evidence is that most other countries do not have a compulsory identity card scheme. A minority have some sort of identification scheme, but in most cases it is voluntary.

Perhaps enough has been said about this. The Bill has sufficient flaws to condemn it as it stands without going into the wider issues that it raises. For instance, on the one hand it makes it an offence for somebody not to be in possession of a valid identity card, but on the other there is a saving provision that one has seven days to produce it. I understand why there is that provision, but it appears to defeat what the sponsors of the Bill say that it is intended to tackle. For that reason alone, I believe that the Bill should not receive a Second Reading.

This is not a time of war or rationing. The scheme appears to be another example of interference in our right to choose to be private and not to be interfered with by the state. The supporters of the Bill have failed to prove their case. The disadvantages far outweigh any advantages. Indeed, it is difficult to see what the advantages might be. The supporters of the Bill have not tackled the question of crime detection. On that matter, I can do no better than to endorse the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who said that if £350 million were available to set up this scheme the money would be better spent employing police officers to go out on the streets and tackle some of the problems which have understandably been raised by hon. Members. The Bill is further evidence that some Conservative Members have a latent fear of the people of this country and that they would like further to extend controls on what those people do and where they go.

The Bill fails on its merits. I fear that it is a grand and useless gesture. For that reason, I urge hon. Members to vote against it, if it comes to a Division.

1.18 pm

Mr. David Evans (Welwyn, Hatfield): I congratulate the Minister on his balanced summing-up of the matter so far. Important and necessary changes can often be made in short Bills. The most significant arguments can often be most effective when put as concisely as possible. Contrary to some of my hon. Friends, I shall keep my speech short and to the point.

I believe that the arguments in favour of this Bill are compelling and can be simply put. Today, in virtually every sphere of our activity, we are required to produce some evidence of identity. As car drivers, for example, we can be required to produce our driver's licences. To obtain a passport—itself an international identity card—we must produce our birth certificates. To gain benefits, to collect parcels from the post office, or to cash cheques via a third party, we are expected to provide some form of identity. There are excellent reasons why proof of age should be presented, for example, by young people drinking in public houses or by youngsters attempting to buy cigarettes. It should not be left to landlords or shopkeepers to guess customers' ages. That is imposing on them an unnecessary burden. Many young people who are old enough to drink in a public house probably already carry some proof of age, so they would welcome this opportunity.

The need to carry some form of indentification has already been demonstrated. Most people already carry some form identity. I wonder how many hon. Members are carrying some form of identification—perhaps a driver's licence, a printed name card, a cheque guarantee card, a credit card or a kidney donor card. We require servants of the House to carry a House of Commons identity pass.

A requirement that each citizen should carry a national identity card would not be a dramatic shift from the present position. The right to privacy, which critics of the Bill regard as a basic right, is given up the moment that citizens become active members of society. I believe that the introduction of a national identity card scheme would be welcomed by most citizens. A telephone poll by TV-am last week showed that 69 per cent. would be in favour of the scheme. Nearly every newspaper has had a poll on national identity cards in the last day or two and it was found that the average number in favour has been 57 per cent.

Such a card would be extremely convenient. I have noted the arguments against having a smart card, but several cards are unnecessary. The information required could be on one bar code on a single card. The cost of issuing and maintaining that card would be offset by the savings derived from not having to issue so many other official forms and documents. I understand that £350 million has been quoted as the likely cost of issuing such a card. I believe that £7 per person is a cheap price to pay for the sense of security given to those who wish to go out at night who will then feel that they are properly protected against those seeking to make their lives thoroughly miserable.

Mrs. Gorman: Does my hon. Friend truly believe that people walking the streets with identity cards will no longer engage in mugging? Does he truly believe that such cards will stop such criminal behaviour?

Mr. Evans: My hon. Friend makes a good point, but I believe that it will be easier to catch such people. The police will be given a much more effective way in which to identify those they are seeking to apprehend.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Evans: No, I shall not.

I believe that we could have a commercially sponsored identity card and I do not see why it should cost the Government anything.

The Football Spectators Bill has nothing to do with a national identity card and there are fundamental reasons why the two are incompatible. On timing, there are no firm Government proposals for a national identity card and, first, important questions of principle need to be resolved. Football hooliganism, however, already exists and we must deal with it now. A national identity card is different from a football club membership card. A national identity card would be issued by a Government Department or an agency. Its purpose is to prove the carrier's identity, not to grant him admission to a football ground. A football membership card, unlike an identity card, can be withdrawn. A national identity card would not remove the need for most of the provisions contained in the Football

[Mr. Evans]

Spectators Bill. We would still need equipment to check membership cards, procedures for withholding or withdrawing such cards and for licensing the grounds. The commercial opportunities of the national membership scheme, for example the marketing of football membership lists, would not be available with the national identity card. A national identity card would not separate the bully, the coward or the criminal from the football fan but without a membership card, one would not be a football supporter. The criminal understands that.

The carrying of a national identity card would contribute to a more law-abiding society. We would find out how many illegal immigrants there are in the country. Almost immediately one would stop the thousands—contrary to what the Minister said—of people who draw social security benefits illegally. Publicans would be able to verify the age of drinkers and shopkeepers verify the age of cigarette buyers. The police would be able to check the identity of those they reasonably believe may have committed or are about to commit an offence. The carrying of such cards would also save lives as people could be asked whether they wanted their donor number placed on it.

Mr. Corbyn: Does the hon. Gentleman believe that people's political views should be added to their cards, together with information about their relationships, their friends and their marital status?

Mr. Evans: No, I do not.

Identity cards are extremely valuable. I believe that there are obvious dangers in making the carrying of that card voluntary, because those who refuse to carry it are most likely to be those with something to hide.

Mr. Stern: I assure my hon. Friend that I shall refuse to carry such a card.

Mr. Evans: Those who refuse to carry a card are those who are most likely to have something to hide or those who are under-age or intent on committing a criminal act.

Mrs. Gorman rose——

Mr. Evans: No, I shall not give way.

As the Association of Chief Police Officers has recognised, a voluntary scheme would have too few advantages to make it worthwhile. This is an important, clear and necessary Bill and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing it. I commend it to the House.

1.26 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): There are two ways of approaching this issue. One is the serious and philosophical side of whether identification cards are important. The other way——

Mr. Corbyn: The other way is to approach it like the hon. Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) did.

Mr. Bermingham: Yes, as my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) has just said, the other way is to approach it from the attitude of the previous speaker, the hon. Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans), who looked at the practicalities of this issue. I propose to look at both aspects.

I shall turn first to the philosophical side. We are supposed to live in a democracy and in freedom. We are supposed to have the right to choose. However, where people feel that the state knows best and that nanny knows all the answers—whether we approach this from the Left or the Right—the history of this century provides two ghastly examples of the results. There is the Stalinist approach, that the state must know everything about every human being, or the Fascist approach of Hitler, that the state must know every single thing about every human being. Extremist Left and Right always seem to meet at that point philosophically. The circle is squared at the point at which it is decided that there must be a national identification system so that every citizen is registered. Everything would be recorded: where one lives; where one went to school; who one's mother and father were; where one went to university; where one has worked and one's record of work. All would be recorded on the state's computers. Of course, in the past, there were no computers so the information was kept on files, but it would be on computer now.

That Orwellian sense—that 1984 concept—where the human being is not an individual but part of the machinery of state, to be ordered, checked and spied upon—is, in a philosophical sense, what identification cards are all about. I am sure that no hon. Member would agree with that sort of philosophical approach to members of society. Whether we are on the Left or the Right of the political spectrum, I am sure that none of us want that Orwellian concept of the ultimate state control. It is anathema to all of us. Therefore, if one approaches the Bill on that philosophical level, one says no to it because it would be one more step down that road. In this day and age we must be careful that we do not go down that road, because in a world of computers and electronic recording, it is all too easy for information to build up slowly and for the Orwellian concept of lack of freedom to develop. We must guard against that at every touch and turn.

I do not want to delay the House for long, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because I know that many hon. Members wish to speak. I shall turn now to the purely practical side of this issue. The more I listened to the hon. Member for Welwyn, Hatfield, the sadder I became because every reason that he gave for a card was totally impractical. Am I to understand that a card would stop the mugger in his tracks? Would he approach his intended victim, card in hand, saying, "Gosh, it's me. Here's my identification card number."? Of course not. Would a card stop a thief breaking into a house and would it somehow make him leave his number behind to aid his identification? Of course not. The only thing that a thief would use his plastic card for would be to open one's Yale lock. The card would be efficient in that respect—that is, if he had the card with him. As has already been said, the position would be similar to that for driving licences—one would have seven days to produce it.

If someone is going out to be a naughty boy in the dark of the night the last thing on earth that he would do would be to put his card in his pocket. He would not put anything in his pocket that could identify him, because if he were to leave a jacket or any piece of clothing behind, that is the sort of thing that the police would be likely to find.

Let us be realistic. Will the card stop fraud? I intervened earlier—it may have appeared amusingly—to suggest that the photograph on the card would be the easiest way to increase fraud. No matter how much we do not like it, nature has a cruel trick it plays on all of us: we get older and as we get older we may begin to look uglier, or more beautiful, depending on how age takes us. Certainly we change, and, as the French have found, for the purposes of forgery, changing photographs is really quite easy. Of course, a forged card could be created in no time at all. All the details suggested for the card, such as address, sex and date of birth, would make it very easy to go to a bank and pretend to be somebody else. An ordinary photograph could quite easily be made to look like an identity card photograph of somebody else. This would facilitate fraud, not hinder it.

On the question of photographs, consider the purely practical side. As we age, we will naturally want to have our photographs changed. For example, Mr. Deputy Speaker, have you ever looked at a passport—not your personal passport, but somebody else's? The number of people who deny that the photographs in their passports are good photographs of themselves—the passports having been issued perhaps 10 years ago—is enormous. We all change with the passage of time.

As someone who many years ago served on the Committee that dealt with the Police and Criminal Evidence Bill, I know, from the very detailed investigations that were carried out, the response of citizens to stop-and-search proposals. It was found that across the Metropolitan area there were, I think, one million stop-and-search cases in one year. Intense resentment built up amongst the younger community against the police force—something that was totally counter-productive. One can just imagine how many people are going to be asked for identity cards and be told to turn up in seven days. Think of the enormous waste of police time. Are we going to get little slips like the ones that are issued when driving documents have to be produced? Just think of the cost in terms of manpower.

What would happen if one were to lose one's means of identification? Again, think of the cost. What would happen if one changed one's address, or if one changed one's looks? There are people in this world who change the colour of their hair artificially. All of that would mean that cards would come and cards would go.

The more one reads this Bill—the more one looks at the practical side—the more one realises how costly the scheme would be, and the less useful it appears. I cannot see a single valid reason for the introduction of these cards. If a publican wants to know somebody's age, let him ask that person. The same thing applies to a shopkeeper. If a police officer wants to know somebody's address, let him ask that person. That does not take very much time. We do not need £350 million of expenditure. Above all else, we do not need to start going further down that philosophical road to the point where the citizen ceases to matter and only the state counts.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks (Wolverhampton, North-East): I start by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on his chosen subject. Though I do not think he is here at the moment, may I say that this is an important private Member's Bill. He has provided us with an opportunity to debate an important and topical issue and, in so doing, has shown the country that he recognises the widespread feeling in support of his measure. He has also obviously given the Government great encouragement to look rather more closely at the subject than they may have done so far. I have to express slight disappointment that we have had to resort to a private Member's Bill because of the reluctance of the Government to introduce legislation of their own. I am quite sure that, in time, they will amend that situation.

This is a controversial subject, and one of increasing national interest, but regrettably today we have heard evidence of an awful lot of negative thinking on the subject. In advocating the need for a national identity card, I am not acting out of some deep-rooted desire to play at being big brother—or even big sister—as those opposed to this Bill may try to imply. It is quite simply a practical response to the constant need in modern society to identify ourselves for whatever purposes.

I listened with interest to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), who presented a fictitious scenario involving a Mrs. Bloggins. I could not help thinking that I could see nothing in his argument. I cannot, for the life of me, see how a request that I carry a card stating my name, address, and what I look like, is in any way whatsoever a restriction of my individual liberty.

Judging from the numerous representations that I have received from my constituents who live with the daily stresses and strains of inner-city life they see no restriction either. They say, shrugging their shoulders, "An identity card for us—so what's the big deal?" Such is the attitude of normal, peace-loving and law-abiding citizens, the 57 per cent. of whom The Times leader writer speaks today. They recognise that identifying ourselves in 1989 has become a way of life which most of us accept without question.

We live in a sea of identity cards and can do increasingly little in society without using some form of identification. I used to think that it was only Americans who suffered from that problem, but we have followed suit. Our wallets and purses are positively bulging with little cards, but no one queries that. However, simply suggesting one more little universal card has all the freedom fighters up in arms—that is madness.

The point has been made several times this morning that from morning until night we can do virtually nothing without a card. I cannot drive my car to work unless I have a compulsory driving licence. I cannot fill it with petrol unless I have a cheque card to cover the cheque. I cannot —along with 10,000 other employees—enter the Palace of Westminster unless I have a photo-identity pass. I cannot go to the doctor without a medical card. I cannot even pay for a dress—hon. Gentlemen cannot pay for a suit—that costs more than £50 unless I have two forms of identification.

Mrs. Gorman rose——

Mrs. Hicks: I shall not give way to my hon. Friend, who had an opportunity earlier to make her point. We are short of time.

The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) —who is no longer here—and my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) said that they would object to carrying identity cards. However, it is interesting that they do not object to carrying the card they need to get into Parliament. We are in danger of creating double standards. By adding one simple universal card to our wallets, we could eliminate the need for many of the rest. Some may jump up and down and argue that the card will be an invasion of our privacy and will restrict us. However, today, the restrictions are already in place—whether out of choice or necessity.

Across the water, where many of us take our holidays, I am sure that we would agree that we have never been conscious of any dictatorial regime. As we move towards 1992, which is less than three years away, and we pride ourselves on removing barriers and encouraging greater freedom of movement—that could lead to drug-running and terrorism—we find ourselves in the United Kingdom in a distinct minority.

We are one of only four of the 12 member countries of the EC who have no official identity scheme. That makes a mockery of what the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) said when we discussed this matter in connection with a ten-minute Bill last year. He suggested that:

"The introduction of identity cards is a wholly undesirable practice, far more associated with dictatorships than with democracies."—[Official Report, 21 June 1988; Vol. 135, c. 977.]

Does the hon. Gentleman know something about Belgium, Greece, Luxembourg, Spain, West Germany, France, Italy and Portugal that we do not? I suggest not.

In recognising that five of the European schemes are compulsory and three voluntary, I am mindful of the Home Secretary's consideration of a voluntary scheme. But I regret that, for once—I hope that the Minister will convey this message to him—I cannot agree with my right hon. Friend's sentiments. If the national identity card scheme is to work successfully, it must be comprehensive. The very people who need to be identified are the ones who would choose not to participate in the scheme. Those of us who have been teachers know that that is a little bit like the voluntary open evening at school. Parents of good children tend to come but parents of naughty children, the ones who need to be seen, do not turn up. Does any hon. Member genuinely believe that the lady in Brent who this week was given £20,000 of taxpayers' money by Brent council to open a burger bar would have applied for a voluntary identity card knowing for 13 years that she had been an illegal immigrant? I am sure that she would not.

Mr. Bermingham: What has that got to do with the Bill?

Mrs. Hicks: People who have most to hide would not apply for a voluntary card. If we do not act now in favour of a universal approach we shall be in great danger of having piecemeal legislation to control football hooligans, under-age drinkers, under-age users of gaming machines and goodness knows who else. Costly separate schemes could in time be rendered completely useless by one comprehensive national scheme.

Already in the west midlands publicans have had to take the law into their own hands, and on 6 March 200 pubs in Brierley Hill, Stourbridge, Halesowen and, soon, Wombourn, near my constituency, will have a scheme to identify under-age drinkers. Both the police and the licensees say that the scheme will save aggravation. I can see it snowballing. In an emotive debate such as this there is a danger that those who oppose the Bill will engage in scaremongering. We have had some of that in the debate and it is done to try to sensationalise the powers of the police and to make them sound like our natural enemy. People use phrases like "police state" to try to put the fear of God into us all.

The case for ID cards should be kept in perspective. It is interesting to talk to people who have held identity cards and who speak from first-hand experience of their days in the war. Recently, one of my constituents spoke to 40 such people at the annual general meeting of the Stafford branch of the Dunkirk veterans' association. They all agreed that they would love to see a compulsory identity card scheme. Many of them said that they would feel safer carrying cards and thought that the only people to complain would be those who had something to hide. It is interesting to note that some of those veterans still carry their wartime identity cards. They do so, because, they say, if anything happened to them they could be easily identified. That was an interesting remark in view of the recent tragic spate of transport tragedies. Much time and heartbreak could be avoided if, as a result of carrying a universal card, every victim could rapidly be identified and the next of kin notified. I would go further and suggest that cards should contain not the metal strips that the scaremongers talk about, but details of blood group and indications of a willingness to donate organs.

The flag-waving civil liberties fraternity is not truly representative of the interests of the majority. The Opposition will probably vote against the Bill. I should like to see more interest by the Opposition, and I say to those who oppose the Bill that they should not let their suspicions misguide their appraisal of the benefits of such a scheme. Civil liberties groups tend to look with great suspicion on the subject of identity and see it as somewhat sinister, with cloak and dagger overtones, as if everyone is out to trap them. They talk of restricting the rights of the individual, but it is precisely because I want to protect the rights of the majority of my constituents who want to live in peace and harmony that I support the Bill.

The carrying of a small innocuous card will help us all to prevent crime and terrorism. At the same time it will convey practical everyday benefits and the majority of law-abiding citizens will have no objection to that. They would believe that we as Members of Parliament were acting responsibly in representing their best interests, and they would applaud our initiative.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I, too, congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing the Bill and stimulating debate on a subject which is of intense public interest. The proposal certainly has a sizeable majority of public support.

I agree with what my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) has said. Those who have nothing to hide have nothing to fear from the proposal. I find nothing to quarrel with in the first two subsections of clause 1. That identity cards should be issued does not seem offensive. We already have a national medical card, a national insurance card and several other documents such as a birth certificate. One more in the form of an identity card does not seem offensive. However, there I part company with some of my hon. Friend's proposals.

In recent months we on the Home Affairs Select Committee have had the opportunity to talk to many police officers of varying ranks, not only chief constables, but senior police officers and constables on the beat. I can speak only for myself, but it is my impression that, while the police generaly see advantages in a national identity card scheme—there are advantages—many draw the line at the sort of proposals—almost stop-and-seach proposals—that my hon. Friend suggests. There is a grave fear that the imposition of this request may lead back to the bad old days when the police undoubtedly lost the genuine support of the public, which they need to do a difficult and dangerous job. They were simply carrying out the duty that we in this House had imposed on them. That would be sad and we need to think carefully before we return to those days. There is a considerable case to be made for a facilitating document.

It has already been said several times that everybody in this House carries an identity card. When I was working for the BBC I carried my identity card. Members of the written press carry National Union of Journalists members' cards. In a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement made it clear that not only all members of the armed forces but all civilians working within armed forces' bases carry identity cards. Many people working in private industry carry indentity cards. Indeed, to get into a Labour party conference one must have an identity card.

We are now talking about introducing identity cards for entry into football grounds. Pubs are introducing identity cards to identify, not under-age but over-age drinkers. We frequently need an identity card for the Departments of Health and of Social Security, and some form of identity is needed to acquire a student travel card. Before long we shall need some form of identity card to travel even within the European Community.

In its fifth report the Home Affairs Select Committee addresses the subject of the British visitor's passport and I should like to place on record what we said.

"We continue to have grave doubts as to the security of the British Visitor's Passport. Despite the new precautions against forgery mentioned by Home Office officials, the BVP is widely regarded as a low-grade identity document. In the United Kingdom, it is not recognised as proof of identity by the Department of Social Security, for instance, and overseas it is regarded with disfavour by the immigration services of many countries, not least in the European Community. Although it may not be practical to withdraw or replace the BVP at present, due to its obvious convenience at a time when standard passports cannot be obtained without some delay, we recommend that the Home Office give urgent consideration to the withdrawal of the British Visitor's Passport as soon as the computerisation programme, which will allow for a five-day service for issuing standard passports, is fully operational."

"We further recommend that consideration be given to the issue of the back page of the new United Kingdom passport as a voluntary identification document to facilitate travel within the European Community. Such a document might also serve to replace the growing number of cards now being issued by football clubs, public houses and other private establishments for the purpose of identification."

The Chairman of the Select Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler), asked:

"Would it not be better, both in the interests of the travelling public, in the wider interests of the country as a whole, to have a travel document that was universally well regarded and paid for in any event by the consumer who purchases that document and one in which we could all have confidence?"

The deputy secretary responsible for immigration and nationality, Mr. Hyde, said:

"Yes; those arguments are powerful."

The Home Affairs Select Committee was driving at this: the back page of the new European passport, which will be issued to every Common Market resident, carries all the information that is necessary for all the purposes that we have discussed—a photograph, signature and means of identification. It already exists and it would be possible, if it were used on a voluntary basis, to issue it immediately.

The European passport is machine-readable. It has two strips on the bottom. It may interest hon. Members to know something that I found out some five years ago when I first started to take an interest in this subject. The European passport's machine-readability and design are dictated not by the British Government, Common Market countries or the United Nations but by the International Air Transport Association. I cannot believe that it would not be possible to prevail on that organisation to add a third strip to contain additional information. I do not share the view of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) who, in his doomsday scenario, took fright at the possibilities of such a card being used on a smart card basis voluntarily to carry medical information and any other information including, if one wished, details of membership of a football club.

I see a compelling argument for the use and issue of one officially recognised card, whether purchased voluntarily, like a British visitors passport, or issued universally, like a medical card, and free. I believe, as does the Home Affairs Select Committee, that there is a strong case for one national, approved card rather than a plethora of easily forgeable, semi-official cards.

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): I congratulate the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on introducing the Bill and on including Northern Ireland from the outset. The absence of a national identity card provides some anonymity for individuals with criminal intent, giving them the freedom to traverse the country at will with little likelihood of ever being challenged and to engage in robbery and serious terrorism, as occurs in Northern Ireland. I believe that a compulsory scheme is the best way forward and that the requirement to carry a national identity card will, perhaps for the first time, create another risk for those evil-doers operating outside their home territory, where they are recognised and known. I believe that it can greatly help our police and security forces and I must agree that additional policing would be helpful.

The Bill poses no threat to law-abiding citizens in this country. Since I publicly voiced my support for the identity card scheme, I have not received one objection from more than 60,000 constituents, all of whom are eligible to contact me as their Member of Parliament. From that I assume that the support in the mainland press will also be forthcoming in Northern Ireland. Many of my colleagues from Northern Ireland constituencies have other commitments today and greatly regret being unable to be present to lend their support. The requirement for a national identity card could instil in our young people a greater respect for citizenship and a recognition of the responsibility that goes with it.

Hon. Members have commented on the attitude of ethnic minority groups. Those who have allegedly been harrassed by the police in the past would be protected by the production of a national identity card. National identity cards would also put another obstacle in the way of illegal immigrants, and I welcome that. I recently spent considerable time endeavouring to get extended permission for an overseas visitor to remain in Northern Ireland. I endeavoured to arrange appropriate educational courses and so on for that visitor. Much to my annoyance, that person jumped ship or took the boat one morning from Larne to Stranraer and disappeared somewhere in London. The absence of national identity cards makes life easier for the countless thousands of illegal immigrants.

National identity cards might assist in controlling the great incidence of social security fraud in Northern Ireland. I do not accept the massive unemployment figures that are published even in Government documents. No Government officials or anyone remotely connected with Government will investigate at first hand what is happening in many parts of Northern Ireland.

I have reported allegations of people doing the double. They travel 50 miles to work in my constituency. They are unemployed when they register. If there just happened to be the need to produce a national identity card, it would be quite possible that a check would be made. Those who are doing the double and benefiting from state benefits which should rightly go to the disabled, to young widows and to pensioners, would think twice about the risks in what they are doing. At present, the absence of national identity cards enables them to move freely and to do what they like, with little risk of being picked up and challenged.

Mr. Tim Janman (Thurrock): I have heard rumours in my constituency about council workmen removing from empty council houses polling cards belonging to people who have died or moved a long way away and impersonating them at the polls. I believe that this has been a long-standing problem in Ulster. Can the hon. Gentleman say how identity cards will help to solve the problem of the dead voting?

Mr. Beggs: The Government have attempted to overcome those problems. Abuse of polling cards is not so bad as it was in the past, but many citizens do not have either of the documents required for voting. Some pensioners have their pensions paid directly into their bank accounts and do not have a pension book to present when they vote. The Bill would be one way of ensuring democracy and preventing abuse. My hon. Friend the Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) experienced the problem of impersonation and at considerable personal expense was involved in a court action. If national identity cards had been in operation, the problem would never have arisen. For that reason, I would welcome an identity card system in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I appeal for very brief speeches. More than one hon. Member wishes to speak.

2.1 pm

Mr. James Pawsey (Rugby and Kenilworth): I congratulate the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) on his speech. He spoke with the sincerity to which the House is becoming accustomed. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on his good fortune and choice of Bill. There is growing concern about violence in our towns and cities. This Bill will provide positive assistance in reducing crime.

The idea of identity cards is not new. Significantly, my right hon. and hon. Friends have caused a measure to be introduced in the other place requiring one group—football supporters—to carry clear means of identification and to be members of a membership scheme before gaining entry into football grounds. The principle of requiring identity cards to be carried is already accepted by the Government. This Bill seems somewhat fairer than the one being proposed in the other place because it is not discriminatory. It does not seek to legislate against just one section of the community. My right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) reminded the House that self-employed building workers have to carry identity cards bearing the signatures of no fewer than two inspectors. My hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) said that the population had become more accustomed to carrying means of identification.

Many benefits spring from the Bill. It would save police time in identifying suspects and people in custody. It would be a positive crime prevention measure. It would help to remove the scourge of under-age drinkers from pubs and clubs and would assist the identification of those involved in road traffic accidents. Above all, it would be a disincentive to crime because the culprits would no longer have the possibility or illusion of being anonymous. Impersonation such as that which occurred at Heathrow by two journalists could no longer take place.

Another point that my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North made in his excellent speech is that identity cards would also result in the reduction of credit and cheque card crime. There is a distinct possibility that identification cards will, in any case, be required by 1992, for it is inevitable that as the Single European Act comes into force it will require the dismantling of all frontier barriers in the Community. When that happens, some form of identification will undoubtedly be required.

My hon. Friend the Minister made several international comparisons, which I should like to pursue. I was delighted to hear him make those points and they were extremely helpful to the House. If I may elaborate, all Danish citizens are provided with an identification card and much the same principle applies in Germany. As my hon. Friend rightly said, it is not necessary for German citizens to carry identification, but the police have the power to request proof of identity and address and maintain the power of arrest if proof is not readily available. As my hon. Friend said, in France it has long been customary for every citizen to carry identity papers and the police have the right to demand proof of identity from any person reasonably suspected of being about to commit or having committed a crime. If the person concerned cannot produce appropriate identification, arrest will follow and the citizen then has four hours to prove identity. That is clearly a strong inducement to carry the identification papers required, and that is why I support my hon. Friend the Minister when he talks about a voluntary scheme. It is, perhaps, not an ideal answer but a route that could be explored. I know that he is actively considering that idea and I congratulate him on the breadth of his vision in this case, as in so many others.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Pawsey: No, because time is pressing.

Identity cards would also assist in the control of international crime because they would make it harder for people to enter illegally or to remain in a particular country. They would also reduce and control illegal cross-border activities, which is a point that the hon. Member for Antrim, East made, and they would help to curb the activities of terrorists and drug-traffickers.

I appreciate that time is rattling on, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I want to make the point that the principal objection to ID cards is, understandably, likely to come from those involved in law-breaking. To repeat the point that other hon. Members have made, honest citizens have nothing to fear and will have a great deal to gain because identification cards will assist in reducing the current level of crime and will have the effect of making it safer for law-abiding citizens to go about their lawful business. I find it significant, though not surprising, that 57 per cent. of people in a survey published today said that they were in favour of the Bill and only 37 per cent. were against it. I also find it significant that the Labour party, as ever, is split down the middle with 47 per cent. in favour and 47 per cent. against.

The Bill has much to commend it and will be of positive assistance to the policed in combating crime. Law and order is, arguably, the single most important issue facing society at this time. There is a widespread view, which my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North expressed, that our streets are no longer so safe as they used to be. That point was underlined by my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North, who mentioned the growth of vigilantes. Vigilantes flourish when the existing forces of law enforcement are seen to be inadequate to protect the ordinary citizen. The recent formation of vigilante groups on the London Underground underlines that point. It is difficult to avoid the view that as the incidence of violent crime increases the ordinary citizen may feel entitled to take such steps as he thinks necessary to secure his own and his family's safety. I am worried about where that route will lead because eventually it leads to anarchy. People will undoubtedly take the law into their own hands if they believe that the state is no longer able to protect them fully. I do not argue that identity cards will banish crime overnight—they will not—but as my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North, said, they represent a further weapon in the armoury of law enforcement. In my view, they will be widely welcomed as a genuine attempt to uphold the law.

My hon. Friend's Bill has much to commend it but if for any reason it falls I hope that the Home Office will introduce a similar measure, albeit using a voluntary rather than a compulsory sanction. I would regard that as second best, but it would nevertheless represent a considerable step forward and would show the people of this country that the Government are determined to get to grips with crime. A clear signal would be sent out and I believe that that would be right. Having said that, I wish my hon. Friend all good luck, and I hope that he will be successful today.

2.10 pm*

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on initiating a debate on this important subject by introducing the Bill.

I shall not dwell on the question of violent crime, which was handled so well by my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson). Instead, I shall concentrate on the important question of unique numbering for all our citizens. We start off in life by being registered by the registrar and with that registration goes the reference number on our birth certificate. When we are cared for or overseen by the social services department of a county council, or by the National Health Service, another number is applied to us. When our performance at school is monitored through the new school profiling system, yet another number is applied.

All the reference numbers are different. The reference number applied to us by the Inland Revenue for tax purposes refers to our principal place of employment if we fall within the PAYE arrangement, or to the source of our pension or widow's pension. The Department of Social Security keeps separate reference numbers in a computer along with a vast amount of detail which could, I suppose, be construed as an infringement of civil liberties. Borough and district councils give us yet another number for housing benefit purposes.

The existence of all these reference numbers leaves the door wide open for fraud and there is nothing more corrosive to our constituents' morale than to hear of the fraud and social security fiddling that goes on as a result. The potential to make money out of the non-standardisation of records exists not only in the state sector but in respect of our credit institutions. Our great mass of credit sources—banks, finance houses, stores and card issuers—have no standardisation of reference numbers. That, too, allows fraud, and means that there is no way that the institutions can cross-reference. One problem that would be solved by the introduction of an identity card is the problem not of impersonation but the various institutions' lack of knowledge of the facts in respect of their clients' other sources of funds.

The card should carry no more than an individual's name, address, reference number and photograph. There is no need for a smart card providing large amounts of the 1984-style information about which the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) was so worried, and the card would not be an infringement of human rights.

The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)—who is chatting happily—could no doubt get out of his top pocket the House of Commons identity card which he carries at all times, as do I. That contains his photograph and his name, which is no great innovation. Every hon. Member is no doubt carrying a credit card, a charge card——

Mr. Skinner: Those are not compulsory.

Mr. Arnold: —and a driving licence, all of which identify. In fact, the hon. Gentleman's driving licence would even give away his date of birth.

A further advantage of the identity card, which would have a magnetic strip recording the facts to which I referred earlier, would be that we could get rid of the Football Spectators Bill. Every citizen would have a card with a unique reference number and the clubs, either separately or together, could keep a note of the reference numbers of those whom they wish to bar. The visiting spectator would put his card through the reader and, if it was the card of someone whom the club did not want, that person would not gain admission. We could easily dispose of all the present traumas surrounding that Bill.

[Mr. Arnold]

An identity card would also assist the victims of accidents. It would reveal an individual's blood group, whether or not he wished to give away his organs in the case of death, and whether he had medical conditions which required specific treatment. All that information could be rapidly identified by the emergency services after consulting by radio the already existing database of medical records.

The Home Office has apparently established that it would cost £350 million to set up this identity card scheme and a further £100 million to run it. I would argue that it would not cost anything like so much for the minimum of data that I propose. Such figures, I believe, are more typical of the response of civil servants who are always too ready to drive a Rolls-Royce at every opportunity.

Those who gain from the current situation are those involved in frauds and other crimes. Those who would gain from identity cards would be the law-abiding public, who have given their verdict through the poll already mentioned which showed 57 per cent. in favour. If we had such cards, the losers would be the fiddlers, the fraudsters and other criminals.

2.17 pm

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): Hon. Members have been naturally concerned throughout this debate about the level of crime in our community. What I believe is a great mistake, however, is to go on from there and to think that there is some kind of magic solution. The debate on this proposal represents an attempt to find a magic solution to a problem. I believe that there is no magic solution.

This scheme, which, of course, relates to a compulsory card, would be costly to implement and would require enormous bureaucracy to establish and, as my hon. Friend the Minister said, there is a potential for damage to police public relations. It is up to the Bill's supporters to show conclusively that identity cards would have such a beneficial effect that it would be worth incurring the cost and administrative burden needed to implement them. That has not been demonstrated in this debate.

No supporter of the Bill has put under proper scrutiny the advantages to be gained from the introduction of identity cards. A number of hon. Members have said that intending offenders would be deterred because of the fear of being identified. Of course that must be nonsense. What would deter them would be the fear of being caught and punished. There has been no evidence that the police regard identity as a major problem in combating crime.

Considerable reference has been made by hon. Members to public opinion, and the fact that it appears to show that the majority of people are in favour of such a measure. Although my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) had said that there had been an absence of protest, I would contend that there has also been an absence of support. The fact is that, apart from the editorial columns of a number of newspapers, this has not yet become a public debate. There is little doubt that, as the debate developed, a great deal of opposition would emerge. If the Bill ever came into effect no doubt there would be enormous opposition when cases came before the courts involving children, perhaps vagrants, because they were carrying no card. Vagrants have no money so therefore the deterrent effect of a fine would mean nothing to them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North said that people already carry a number of identifying documents that may be referred to by number. He seems to suggest that another card would do no harm. It would only do any good, however, if it were linked to some kind of data base which would hold a great deal more information about the card holder, or if the card contained a great deal of computer-encoded information, perhaps in the form of a smart card, which has already been mentioned today. I believe that issues of civil liberty would arise if the same number appeared on several documents. If the document relating to the community charge carried the same number as the document relating to the Department of Social Security, the Inland Revenue and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, such problems would occur.

It has also been suggested that the good citizen has nothing to fear. That was also said when such a measure came before the United States Congress. The idea that the good citizen has nothing to fear begs all sorts of questions. It was that suggestion that killed off the possibility of such legislation in the United States. In a libertarian society, I hope that we would all believe that that notion—the idea that the good citizen is somebody who would support the Bill, law and order and all the rest, and would have nothing to fear and would therefore apply for the card—is a dangerous proposition. I hope that we will firmly reject that.

Identity cards were introduced when we were at war and no doubt the autocratic punishments that then existed were suitable for that time. They are not suitable in peacetime, nor are they suitable to a country that values freedom.

I am not suggesting that such a measure should be opposed on the grounds of civil liberties at all costs. If the advantages for its introduction were so great, I would be prepared to weigh them up——

CERVICAL CANCER (TESTING AND TREATMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 17 February.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I did not hear anyone shout "object" to the excellent Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray). I heard some muttering from the hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones). Can you confirm that he made a late objection, or was there no objection?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I heard the distinct sound of an objection from an unidentified part of the House.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There certainly was muttering from the corner alluded to by my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). It may have been the Whip, the hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), or Conservative Members behind him who have been engaged in political skullduggery to do with the Abortion (Amendment) Bill and who are sitting in the places usually reserved for Ministers. What if the Whip——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have dealt with that: I heard the word "object".

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [27 January].

Hon. Members: Object.

Debate further adjourned till Friday 17 February.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Ordered,

That Mr. Andrew Smith be discharged from the Social Services Committee and Mr. Ian McCartney be added to the Committee—[Sir Marcus Fox, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

EMPLOYMENT

Ordered,

That Mr. Lewis Stevens be discharged from the Employment Committee and Mr. Tim Janman be added to the Committee—[Sir Marcus Fox, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

EDUCATION, SCIENCE AND ARTS

Ordered,

That Mrs. Maureen Hicks be discharged from the Education, Science and Arts Committee and Mr. Jacques Arnold be added to the Committee—[Sir Marcus Fox, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. If an hon. Member has an interest to declare, should he not declare it before shouting "object"?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House knows that hon. Members are obliged to record their interests in the Register of Interests. I have no power to require them to comply with the hon. Gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. Barry Porter (Wirral, South): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and following the remarks of the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones), I do have an interest. Sadly, I was unable to declare it or to outline my objections to his Bill in debate. The hon. Gentleman knows as well as I that there is some conflict between the industry and the idea that he wants to promote—but that is not irrecoverable——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I cannot allow the hon. Gentleman to make the speech that he might have made had we been debating the Bill. For him to enter upon a contentious matter like that would place an obligation on the Chair to allow contrary points of view. I cannot allow that to happen.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance. If an hon. Member has an interest is he allowed to object?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no Standing Order or convention of the House that requires an hon. Member to declare any such interest.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that the point of order has been made clear.

Mr. Corbyn: Two hon. Members have raised points of order, from which it seems that there is a great deal of unfinished business and unstated remarks on matters that have started. Are you prepared to allow the hon. Member concerned to express his interest in this matter.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I thought I had made it clear that was just what I was not prepared to do, nor could I allow it.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Perhaps you could assist newcomers like me by saying how we are to know, in the heat of debate, what an interest is if we are not allowed to be told?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman knows the rules about the register of interests, and that is the limit of the obligations.

Traffic (East London)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

2.42 pm

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): I was pleased to hear the roars of approval as I rose to my feet. I shall begin by thanking the Minister's civil servants for providing me with the documents for which I asked at the beginning of the week. There is no need for the Minister to look frightened as that is probably the last time we shall agree during the debate.

The debate arises from the crisis in London's transport system. The system is in crisis because the roads are jammed, tubes and trains are overcrowded and unsafe and there is a shortage of buses which as often as not are stuck in the capital rather than moving. The Government's response has been irrational to the point of being perverse. For several years I worked in urban planning for the Government and was secretary to the joint urban planning group. I was astonished to see this ill-conceived plethora of unconnected piecemeal studies relating to different aspects in different areas of the transport system. Among those unconnected studies are the so-called London assessment studies. It is the east London assessment study that I wish to consider.

The 12 "stage 2A" options cover the area from Highgate to Tottenham, down to King's Cross and east to Hackney, and on to the Isle of Dogs. In the studies, that area is criss-crossed with road schemes—so much so that the map looks like a half-eaten plate of spaghetti. In Hackney, South, there is hardly a square yard of the constituency not covered by one or other of the road proposals. They extend from Graham road to Victoria park and from Shoreditch to Dalston. It is amazing to find that there are tens of thousands of homes within 200 metres of one or other of the road proposals in the 12 options set out by the consultants.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): What my hon. Friend is beginning to outline is absolutely right. The Department of Transport is obviously keen to encourage cars to come into inner London when it should be reducing the volume of traffic. Even more worrying, the Department has now enlarged the area of the east London assessment study to include the area immediately around King's Cross in relation to development proposals now coming forward for King's Cross. Does that not increase the danger that my hon. Friend outlines?

Mr. Sedgemore: My hon. Friend is right to raise that matter. By coincidence, I have here a newspaper cutting referring to "M-way mayhem for King's Cross" and quoting the wise comments of my hon. Friend on that issue.

We do not want debate to be narrow and parochial. I have mentioned Hackney, but in the neighbouring borough of Haringey, which is not in the east London assessment study, 13,500 homes are within 200 metres of one or more of the proposals. In the whole area of ELAS more than 100,000 homes are within 200 metres of one or other of the proposals. Those homes are occupied by real people who see their houses threatened or foresee the environment ruined by noise, congestion and pollution. I am not alone in the House in being deluged with letters, many from pensioners desperately worried about being caught in the blight trap. It is astonishing that the Minister should have allowed the studies to take place in such a way that more than 100,000 families are concerned about the blight on their homes. Even Hitler never blighted that number of homes during the war.

Sir Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Sedgemore: I am sorry, but I know that one of my hon. Friends wants to speak. I shall educate the hon. Gentleman and I am glad that he is here. I invited him so that I could educate him.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): Give way.

Mr. Sedgemore: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be able to intervene in the Minister's speech.

The concept of this study has been wrong from the start. It looks at an artificial corridor but not at its place in the whole of London. Its terms of reference and the way in which it has been conducted are biased towards road building as a solution. The Government should put together a comprehensive long-term transport strategy for London.

That strategy should recognise that building new roads in London is environmentally disastrous, counterproductive and cannot conceivably meet the levels of suppressed demand for car use, as West Way has shown us all too clearly. It should also recognise that new road building is the most expensive option in both environmental and financial terms. If we look outside ELAS at the four major studies, we see the likelihood of ending up with no fewer than £3,500 million worth of tangled lunacy in terms of roads to be built in London. Hon. Members will appreciate that London is the first great city of modern times. It developed as villages coalesced, with the whole served first by canals, then railways, then buses, then trams. We must therefore accept that London cannot be transformed into a car-accessible city without knocking down most of what makes it attractive to live in.

There is a further conundrum. If London is to be a successful world city of the 21st century, as some of us in the Labour party wish, it must have an efficient transport system. The only way to make London a successful city of that kind is through a high level of investment in public transport, and traffic restraint. That investment must take place, not over one or five years, but over 10 years and more. We must spend not millions of pounds, tens of millions of pounds or hundreds of millions of pounds, but billions of pounds on public transport. That is what was done in Paris and that is what we should be doing.

Even New York has spent £1·4 billion a year to rehabilitate its underground sytem, not to mention sending us guardian angels to teach us about safety. We do not want the nonsense of 22 separate studies, and no doubt more to come, with all sorts of questionable criteria designed to produce arguments in favour of road building. With great respect to the Minister's boss, we do not want silly statements from the Secretary of State that improvement in public transport in London should be paid for by passengers in London and not taxpayers in Newcastle. That is a fatuous argument which shows no understanding of the taxation system, or of who pays or who benefits. It is clear that London is financing Newcastle's public transport system, not vice versa.

[Mr. Sedgemore]

London needs more than a plan for public transport. People and goods do not move about for the sake of it. London needs a transport plan which is integrated with a land use plan. My first major question to the Minister is this. Where is he getting the strategic advice for a sensible land use transportation survey? It looks to me as though Ove Arup had never seen a transportation survey and has no idea of the proper way to plan a road system.

It is also worth remembering that in order to streamline the city the Government abolished the Greater London Council—a major body which could have produced that transportation and land use plan. In spite of the difficulties, all the London boroughs and the City of London corporation have come up with unanimously agreed strategic planning advice for London. The agreement was made on 19 October 1988. I do not claim that that is a perfect solution, but it seems to go in the right direction. Certainly, it seems more intelligent and better than anything that the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment have offered.

It is clear that all Members in the area affected by the east London assessment study are united in opposition to road building solutions for London's transport problems——

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): All?

Mr. Sedgemore: All but the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), so I am delighted to see the hon. Gentleman in his place.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Will the hon. Gentleman give way now that he has named me?

Mr. Sedgemore: I give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Sir Hugh Rossi: I am restricted by parliamentary convention as to the term that I can use to respond to the hon. Gentleman's statement. What he has said is as far from the truth as anything can be. That will be proved by the file on ELAS that my hon. Friend the Minister has. My reference to the ombudsman proves it. A petition that I have drafted for my constituents requiring a decision on the abandonment of Parkland walk, the matter which most affects my constituency, is with my constituents and I intend to present it to the House.

Mr. Sedgemore: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman has got that off his chest as it allows me to respond in kind. I know exactly which arguments the hon. Gentleman has because I have some of his correspondence to his constituents. It becomes clear from those letters that the hon. Gentleman is prepared to oppose the building of roads in areas where there are Conservative voters and where Conservative homes will be knocked down and he is prepared——

Sir Hugh Rossi rose——

Mr. Sedgemore: I shall not give way again. The hon. Gentleman must take his medicine like the good parliamentarian that he is.

Sir Hugh Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for an hon. Member who does not know my constituency to make a statement about its political composition? Two thirds of Parkland walk runs through an area which has a Labour majority, whereas the Archway road is in a marginal area. If I wanted to gain anything politically, I would support the Archway road and not Parkland walk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): That is not a point of order for me.

Mr. Sedgemore: The hon. Gentleman has got that wrong. He is inventing a voting pattern for his constituency. It is extraordinary that the Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment cannot come out against major road building solutions for London which will cause massive damage to the homes of his constituents. [Interruption.] I have the letters. The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green may laugh, but I have his letters to Miss Sharon Litton and to Oliver Burton, and they are different from what the hon. Gentleman now says. It is no good writing one thing on paper and then denying it in the House. It is an astonishing way for the hon. Gentleman to treat his constituents. I attended a public meeting in his constituency at which hundreds of people were present. I am told that the hon. Gentleman was invited but, no doubt, he was too busy to go along. The consensus among his constituents at that meeting was that the hon. Gentleman was not doing the job that they expected of him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This is an Adjournment debate and it is the convention that the Minister and the hon. Member whose debate it is should agree to other hon. Members taking part. I was told that another hon. Member would formally take part. Is it possible to have some guidance or to develop a formal understanding on the division of time? At the moment we seem to be bogged down in a debate about a different constituency from the one represented by the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The usual convention is for the time to be divided equally. It is also a convention that Adjournment debates are not used by one hon. Member to make an attack upon another hon. Member because, clearly, the hon. Member who is the subject of the attack will not have an adequate opportunity to respond and defend himself. I very much hope that the conventions of Adjournment debates will be respected.

Mr. Sedgemore: I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I would always go along with anything that you say. The Minister's intervention was crass because this debate is about the east London assessment study, which covers Hackney, Haringey, Islington and part of Camden.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point—I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman understood it—was about the convention of making time available for another hon. Member to take part in the debate. I am not absolutely certain that insulting me before I have had a chance to open my mouth is quite the way to answer a point of order. The point is whether the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott) will have a chance to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Whether a third hon. Member is allowed to participate is a matter for the hon. Member whose Adjournment debate it is and for the Minister. I hope that the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) will bear that in mind.

Mr. Sedgemore: I am bearing in mind that this is the first Adjournment debate—I used to work in the Civil Service—that I have ever attended in which a Minister has tried to filibuster by making points of order. The hon. Gentleman might reflect on the properties of the constitution when he goes back to his Department. In my day, Ministers' integrity would not have allowed that kind of thing, and as a civil servant I should certainly have advised my Minister against it.

The people of Haringey need not worry too much. They are getting splendid back-up from councillor Nicky Gavron on their planning committee, who has done excellent work in putting forward Haringey's blueprint for transport. I hope that the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green will support councillor Gavron. Her concern to preserve all that is good in the local environment and to save the residents of Haringey from the death and destruction of urban motorways has been luminous, and her enthusiasm in explaining the problems to the people of Haringey unquenchable. The time and effort that she has put in has been a good lesson to us all. In the words of the poet Shelley, she is prepared and to fight to the last breath in her being for the residents and people of Haringey. I ask the Minister to watch her lips, for they say, "No more roads." What a pity it is that the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green cannot say, "No more roads."

While I am congratulating people—we are now getting into the harmony of the debate—I congratulate George Stern for his heroic efforts in opposing the Archway motorway proposals for the past 22 years. George has asked me to ask the Minister for a categorical assurance that the Archway proposals are dead today, and I do so. I also congratulate the campaigning zeal of the Haringey Gazette and the work of the Hackney public transport action committee, the Graham road neighbourhood association and the Hackney transport campaign.

I specifically ask the Minister, if he is in better humour, to answer some questions. When the final ELAS reports come out later this year, will he give a categorical assurance that there will be full public consultation? Will he give an assurance that he and the Secretary of State will be prepared to meet the people of Islington, Haringey and Hackney to debate these issues? I have a letter from the Secretary of State which says that if he cannot get to them all, perhaps he should go to no meetings. That seems to suggest that Ministers will not come forward and engage in the kind of public debate that we want.

Will the Minister give an assurance that there will be a full public inquiry and that the inquiry will not be rigged in the sense that the inspector will be expected to come to a road-building solution before the inquiry starts? Will the Minister give an assurance that there will be a full debate in the House of Commons after the public inquiry? I should like to watch the Minister's lips and hear him say, "No through roads."

2.58 pm

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington) rose——

Mr. Bottomley: Perhaps I should give way to the hon. Lady.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I apologise to the hon. Lady. Does she have the consent of the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) and the Minister to take part in the debate?

Mr. Sedgemore: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It will not be possible to answer all the hon. Gentleman's questions, but I will give way to the hon. Lady.

Ms. Abbott: I am grateful to my hon. Friend and to the Minister. There is much concern about this matter in my constituency, not just on the part of Labour voters, Conservative voters, council house tenants or house owners, but across the board. The Minister would do well to take seriously the feelings of the people of London.

Reading the east London assessment study, one is bound to come to the conclusion that it is designed with the Chingford commuter in mind. It is designed not for the people who live in Richmond, Hornsey or Hackney but for those who want to commute to and from the suburbs as easily as possible. That is all very well, but there is a community in London. I shall deal with the people who live in the path of this road.

Mr. Corbyn: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Ms. Abbott: I am afraid that I must get on.

The local community is concerned about the proposed road scheme. The M25 experience shows that increasing road capacity without a global plan for transport results in roads becoming more clogged. If the Government are considering only speeding commuters from the suburbs to the city centre, mere road capacity will not meet the need. If the Government are considering the lives and environment of those who live in London, the ELAS study is extremely problematical. The Minister will be aware of the threat to homes and shops. He will be aware that communities living in the path of the proposed scheme feel threatened by planning blight and want to be sure of their future. Above all, the Minister should be aware that the people who live in London—be it Haringey, Hackney, Islington, Richmond or Hornsey—want the House to produce a multi-dimensional plan that takes into account all transport needs. People, especially women and those on low incomes, want more investment in public transport. It is not sufficient to produce large roads on which surburban commuters can whizz into the city. We want a comprehensive plan and investment in public transport. If I may strike a partisan note, we would like a tube station in Hackney. I join my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) in hoping that when the plans are brought forward there will be genuine public consultation.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): As the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) used up two thirds of the debate and suggested that it would be convenient for the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott) to speak, I am left with little time to deal in depth with the east London assessment study.

I say to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch that never in my 14 years in the House have I heard an hon. Member so misuse an Adjournment debate. He could have talked about the general issues affecting east London or just his constituency, but he sided with those who will sink to any form of abuse or worse when dealing with my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi). Yesterday, we had a debate on the west London assessment study. If I had to choose which of the four hon. Members by whom I should wish to be represented, the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch would not be my choice. My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) spoke eloquently and forcefully for his constituents last night. The hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington showed that it is possible to advance the concerns of the borough properly. The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch was talking——

Mr. Sedgemore: Jolly good.

Mr. Bottomley: It is the hon. Gentleman's privilege to make noises. If it were not his privilege, he would still do so. I give way to his voice—it is one of the loudest in the House.

The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch wrongly suggested that he has made more representations on the east London assessment study than my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green. If he is trying to give the impression that he is being more difficult than my hon. Friend, he is failing. The amount of effort made by the hon. Gentleman appears to be a couple of letters and some questions in the past week. His approach to the east London assessment study, his duties to his constituents and his remarks about my hon. Friend were out of place.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Bottomley: I will not give way.

The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch has asked a number of questions over the past week, but has not mentioned the answer to one of them. The answer appears partly in the Hackney transport policies and programme. What was the cost of personal injury accidents in the east London assessment study area last year. The answer is £50 million.

The assessment studies have been going for four years and the results of stage one were generally welcomed. There were a number of issues in south London, north London and east London that helped to shape a number of people's prejudices. One issue that came out of stage one was the effect of traffic on residents. I agree with the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington that we should not be building roads in London especially for car commuters from outside London.

When I go back to the day of the launch of Auto Express, when I opened my mouth and put my foot in it, I said that I had no intention of using taxpayer's money to build extra roads so that commuters could come pouring in from the home counties or from outer London to inner London by car. [Interruption.] People criticised me, although I did not mention the word salmonella, because it was the next best thing. Did the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch say anything in my defence? No. He is a person who merely carps and criticises. I want the House to know that the cost of the assessment studies in stage one and stage two of the east London study, designed to find long-term solutions to severe transport problems in the area, is estimated at under £2 million. So the cost over four years is £2 million for long-term solutions compared with the road casualty cost of £50 million a year and if the hon. Gentleman has any criticism about that comparison, he is more hard-hearted than I thought he was.

I came to the House in 1975 and people used to point the hon. Gentleman out to me and say, "Here is the intellectual of the Labour party." I looked him up and found that he had worked for Bob Mellish. I understood then why he was called that. Given the choice, I should prefer to take the approach of Bob Mellish to defending the interests of people in London to the hon. Gentleman's. If I wanted to have an awkward Member of Parliament making representations to the Minister, I would choose my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green. He has been more difficult than I have sometimes found pleasant.

We still need to work on through the studies to get to the end of stage two. The subject of the debate is the studies, and their objectives are, first, to promote access and mobility, which the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington would agree is worth considering. Secondly, it is to see how it is possible to bring more employment back into London and to support employment, economic growth and regeneration. Much of the east London assessment study shows the need and opportunities for regeneration. The same need is felt in the constituency of the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith). The third objective is to develop an efficient transport system. There have been calls for increased attention to public transport. We published transport statistics for London very recently and if any hon. Member would like a copy I shall arrange to send him or her one. The figures show that the increase in the use of public transport has been faster in London in the past six years than in any capital city in the past 40 or 50 years, except for Hong Kong when the mass transit railway was opened. Clearly, many of London's transport needs will have to be met by more rail development. But to those who say that public transport alone is the answer, I echo a remark that I made last night to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes about Richmond. With a possible rail route to come through my constituency, I do not see the public transport enthusiasts, of whom I am one, saying, "Don't worry about the impact locally." Building a railway line can be just as threatening as building a road.

Fourthly, we want to improve the environment. If we look at the main spine road through the assessment study area, it goes through the most run-down part of the area.

Mr. Sedgemore: The Minister has blighted the properties.

Mr. Bottomley: The hon. Gentleman's voice is louder than anyone else's. We want enhanced safety, to identify the location of high access routes and to identify measures to improve safety. We had a bit of distortion, if not exaggeration, from The Guardian on 11 July, two weeks after I gave my answer in the House. We went into some detail on this last night. The Guardian produced an editorial in January 1989 saying that the Government should spend billions of pounds on more roads. There is no prospect of the Government spending extra billions of pounds on roads in London that do not have substantial benefits in excess of their costs—and that includes having an appreciation of the environmental impact as well as the economic cost benefit. We want London to go into the next century with the prospect of having necessary through traffic on through roads and traffic calming in other areas.

I have been out to dinner on several occasions with Socialist councillors in north London, where one almost needs a guide because councils have made it such a maze. One cannot get to the councillor's period house without having a guide.

Ms. Abbott: Name no names.

Mr. Bottomley: Gibson square is a good example but I shall not name the councillors. If one considers such areas, there is rat-running galore as stage one says. We hope to get through to the end of stage two as fast as possible because, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green keeps telling me, the uncertainty, as well as the threat, is difficult. My hon. Friend's campaign has hit television on occasions, which is more than one can say for the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch. The particular problem which my hon. Friend has referred to the ombudsman is one on which I do not believe that we have legislative authority to do as my hon. Friend wants. I have sympathy for his point of view, but I shall not argue the case and I am grateful that he has not.

We hope to emerge from stage two of the assessment studies with the uncertainty greatly reduced. At the moment, there may be three options in a given area, any one of which may be feasible. If it is decided that only one option is feasible, we can reduce the blight—or the feeling of blight—by two thirds. The blight itself does not come from the Department.

The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch kindly did not mention it but it should be pointed out that the Labour local authorities in the Association of London Authorities, which say that the Department has asked them to hide the fact that options have been suggested are wrong.

With a degree more openness and truthfulness, and perhaps better-humoured Adjournment debates, we might be able to throw more light on this issue. I do not think that the House will be particularly grateful to the hon. Gentleman for the way in which he spoke in his Adjournment debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at ten minutes past Three o'clock.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will invite Soviet Jews and refuseniks to attend the information forum to be held in London in April following the conclusion of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe meeting in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: In accordance with the Vienna concluding document, access to the open sessions of the London information forum will be assured, upon request, to any private individuals whether national or foreign, as well as to representatives of the media, non-governmental organisations and religious groups.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in the last year in regard to the problem of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received representations on all aspects of this problem, from Members of both Houses of Parliament, the voluntary agencies, members of the public, from a number of individuals in Hong Kong and from representatives of the Vietnamese community in the United Kingdom.

Namibia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We look forward to implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, which is due to start on 1 April. This will enable Namibians to take part in free and fair elections to decide their own future.

West Germany

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any plans for an Anglo-West German summit meeting.

Mrs. Chalker: Plans are under consideration, and an announcement will be made soon.

Nigeria

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what special programme will be arranged for the state visit of the President of Nigeria; and how he will seek to promote a fruitful exchange of ideas and of trade.

Mrs. Chalker: The details of the programme for the state visit of the President of Nigeria are still under discussion. The visit should provide ample opportunity to strengthen the full range of our bilateral relations.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Departments (Insurance)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments do not insure (a) their vehicles, (b) their buildings and (c) their employees with an insurance company but instead carry their own risk.

The Prime Minister: Normally, Government Departments do not insure unless it would be more economical for them to do so than to carry the risk themselves. Departments are responsible for reviewing their own arrangements, and there is no central record of all the cases where commercial insurance has been taken out. A number of Departments, including the Ministry of Defence and the Crown Suppliers, insure against third party motor risks; and the Ministry of Defence insures against employer's liability risks. As a general rule, Departments do not insure their buildings.

War Pensions

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 26 January to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) concerning war heroes, Official Report, column 1178, she will end the means testing of war pensions.

The Prime Minister: War disablement pensions and war widows' pensions are not means-tested, except in the case of an officer's widow who is widowed following remarriage. War pensions paid to dependants other than widows of which there are about 3,000 currently in payment may be means tested, and there are no plans to change this. The provision of such pensions predates the introduction of the present social security scheme, which has generally made the need for them obsolete.

"Death on the Rock"

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Prime Minister what briefing her press officer gave to journalists (a) prior and (b) subsequent to the screening of the television programme "Death on the Rock", and if she will name the journalists and newspapers concerned.

The Prime Minister: The practice is not to comment on lobby briefings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Affairs Committee

59. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he plans to have any further discussions on the setting up of the Scottish Affairs Select Committee.

60. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he intends to have any further discussions on the establishment of a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further steps he has taken to establish a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs.

63. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further efforts he is making to bring about the formation of a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs in the current Session.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Members to what I said on 19 January at business questions in reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), at column 484. I am not very hopeful about this matter—at least not in the immediate future—but I am having a meeting shortly with some of the hon. Member's hon. Friends in order to discuss the position and to see if there is any scope for progress.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civic Amenities Act 1967

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of successful prosecutions for offences committed under the Civic Amenities Act 1967 for each year of its operation in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible from the information held centrally to identify prosecutions under this Act.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now known to his Department; and how many of these have been established in the last year.

Mr. John Patten: There are now some 64,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, with approximately 20,000 having been established in the last year. The scale of this increase is very encouraging and reflects the public's growing commitment to the cause of crime prevention.

Crime (Greater London)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making against crime in Greater London.

Mr. John Patten: Data for notifiable offences recorded by the police for the 12 months to September 1988 show a fall of 1 per cent. in London (MPD/City). In the two largest categories, theft/handling and burglary, the fall was 4 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively.

Greater Manchester Police Authority

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the aplication by Greater Manchester police authority for an increase in establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has announced today that he has approved an increase of 45 police posts in the establishment of the Greater Manchester police.

Police Federation

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met officials of the Police Federation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met officials of the Police Federation at a social function on 10 January, when conversation ranged over a number of police matters.

Cambridgeshire Police Department

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the employment of additional civilian staff by the Cambridgeshire police department to deal with the administration resulting from the implementation of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. As I indicated in reply to a question by the hon. Member on 23 January at column 391, this is a matter for individual chief officers of police in the exercise of their responsibility for the administration of the Firearms Acts.

Guardian Angels

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the activities in London of the group known as the Guardian Angels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 27 January.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ascertain how many United States citizens, belonging to the group known as Guardian Angels, have been permitted to visit the United Kingdom in the last year to date.

Mr. Renton: As far as we are aware, three Americans representing the group 'the Guardian Angels' arrived at Heathrow on Sunday, 16 October 1988 and four at Gatwick on 24 January 1989. Others may, of course, have entered the United Kingdom as United States citizens coming here for visits.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will use his powers to deport those United States citizens belonging to the group known as Guardian Angels on the grounds that their presence in the United Kingdom is not conducive to the public good.

Mr. Renton: No. I am not aware of any justification for the use of the powers.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any of those United States citizens belonging to the group known as Guardian Angels and recently admitted to the United Kingdom have been convicted of criminal offences (a) in the United Kingdom or (b) elsewhere; what evidence was presented to show that they were not likely to have recourse to public funds in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) by whom the United States citizens belonging to the group known as the Guardian Angels and recently admitted to the United Kingdom are to be employed; and whether they have been issued with valid work permits.

Mr. Renton: The persons in question were admitted as visitors with a prohibition of employment. Work permits were not required for the purpose of the visits as stated. I am not aware of any reason for excluding these passengers under the immigration rules on the ground that they might become a charge on public funds, or on grounds of criminal record.

"Death on the Rock"

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of Lord Windlesham's inquiry report into Thames Television's programme "Death on the Rock."

Mr. Renton: The inquiry into the making of the programme was commissioned by Thames Television and not the Government. We are not in a position, therefore, to place a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

Metropolitan Police (Identikit Pictures)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the use of a photograph of Mr. Nigel Benn, the Commonwealth middleweight boxing champion, by the Metropolitan police in connection with trying to identify someone who had committed a criminal act;

(2) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether there was any racist motive involved in the release of an identikit picture of Mr. Nigel Benn;

(3) whether he will set up an immediate inquiry into the release of an identikit photo of Mr. Nigel Benn; and whether he will make the findings of the inquiry public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Metropolitan police have accepted that the publication of the photograph was a serious mistake, and have apologised to Mr. Benn. Steps are being taken to ensure that this regrettable incident does not recur. The Metropolitan Police Commissioner has already initiated an urgent inquiry into the circumstances of the case, and he has been asked to let my right hon. Friend know the outcome.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions photographs of white or black persons have been used previously by the Metropolitan police to make up identikit pictures; on what dates this occurred; and what was the racial breakdown of the persons involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that it is not normal police practice to use photographs of particular individuals to make up identikit pictures. Standard identikit packs, comprising photographs of specific facial features, are used.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of printing and distributing identikit pictures of Mr. Nigel Benn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Metropolitan police that it was £28·53.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has assessed the consequences for race relations of the sending out of thousands of identikit pictures of Mr. Nigel Benn by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am confident that this regrettable error will not be seen as undermining the Metropolitan police's firm commitment to good race relations.

Police Establishments

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is able to announce his decisions on increases in police establishments for 1989-90.

Mr. Hurd: I announced to the House on 14 November at columns 397-98 that I was able to approve 800 additional police posts for provincial forces in 1989-90 and that provision had been made for 300 additional police officers and 250 civilian staff for the Metropolitan police, subject to my being satisfied that earlier increases had been used effectively. That would make a total of 1,100 extra police officers for England and Wales. In addition, I can approve up to 130 posts where satisfied that the full cost would be reimbursed by a third party.

Applications from police authorities outside London have exceeded the number available for allocation and I have therefore had to set priorities. With advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, I have approved increases in police establishments with effect from 1 April 1989 as shown in the following table. The table also shows posts which I would be prepared to approve for stage II probationer training for constables, due for introduction in mid-1989, provided the police authorities apply formally for these posts and guarantee their readiness to meet their share of the costs.

[1] Includes approval for three posts at Gatwick airport, where the costs are reimbursed and which were previously held supernumerary to establishment.

Seventy per cent. of the posts approved will be deployed on operational duties identified by chief constables, mainly at constable level. I have also retained 20 posts for allocation to regional crime squads specifically for their work in connecton with drugs. I await consideration of the results of a review of the manpower needs of the drugs wings of the regional crime squads before I decide on their specific allocation.

In a number of cases, my approval of extra police posts for forces is conditional either on the police authority's confirmation that their share of funding is available or that the posts specifically identified for training will be so deployed by the chief constable. In some cases I require confirmation on both points.

I hope to be able to confirm the Metropolitan police posts before Easter.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amounts are included within the estimated outturn public expenditure figure for the Overseas Development Administration in 1987-88 in Cm. 288-II for (a) aid by way of grants and (b) aid by way of loans.

Mr. Chris Patten: In terms of the standard economic categories used for the analysis of public expenditure, the estimated outturn of £1,277 million in 1987-88 comprised £1,070 million of grants; £165 million of net lending and investment abroad and to the Commonwealth Development Corporation (including drawings from United Kingdom contributions to international lending organisations); and £42 million of other expenditure (mainly Overseas Development Administration running costs and associated capital items).

Nearly all our bilateral aid is provided as grants; gross expenditure from existing bilateral aid loans in 1987-88 was only £14 million.

Nicaragua

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much official aid has been given to Nicaragua via non-governmental organisations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Precise details are not available on a year-by-year basis before 1986-87. Amounts provided to non-governmental organisations through the joint funding scheme are as follows:

Financial Years	£'000
1980-81—1985-86	137
1986-87	24
1987-88	47

We have also provided some emergency aid to Nicaragua through non-governmental organisations. Total amounts provided for this purpose are:

Year	£'000
1986	83
1988	180

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing in ranked order the per capita contributions made by Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member countries to Nicaragua for the latest year for which figures are available including the total aid given by each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country for that year.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 19 May 1988 at column 516. Figures for later years are not yet available.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much bilateral development aid and how much emergency aid has been given to Nicaragua in each of the past five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

£'000s

	Bilateral Aid	of which Emergency Aid
1983	64	34
1984	9	Nil
1985	116	100
1986	86	83
1987	Nil	Nil

Official figures are not yet available for 1988, but Her Majesty's Government committed £260,000 in emergency aid to Nicaragua following hurricane Joan.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much development aid and how much emergency aid has been given to Nicaragua by the European Community in each of the last five years; and what the United Kingdom contribution to the aid has been.

Mr. Chris Patten: Net official development assistance to Nicaragua, as reported by the European Community to the development assistance committee of the OECD in the last five years for which figures are available, is as follows:

1983	4·52
1984	10·99
1985	9·76
1986	6·19
1987	8·72

Expenditure on emergency aid is included in the preceding figures and is not available separately. However, the European Community has indicated that commitments made were as follows:

	£ million
1983	Nil
1984	0·089
1985	Nil
1986	0·268
1988	0·78

In each case, the United Kingdom contribution was around 20 per cent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation Reform

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer in (a) 1989-90 and (b) a full year if (i) the starting point for national insurance were raised from £43 a week to £55 a week, (ii) the starting point for the 7 per cent. rate of national insurance were raised from £75 a week to £85 a week, (iii) income tax thresholds were raised by 10 per cent., (iv) the standard rate of income tax were reduced to 24 per cent., (v) each individual's capital gains tax free allowance were doubled, (vi) the threshold for inheritance tax were raised to £300,000, (vii) stamp duty on securities were halved but extended to gilt-edged securities, and (viii) any adult were allowed to save £1,000 free of tax each year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are as follows:

Direct revenue effect, at 1989-90 levels of income

	1989-90	Full year
(i) Lower earnings limit for National Insurance Class 1 contributions raised from £43 per week to £55 per week[1]	+80	+90
(ii) Starting point for 7 per cent. rate of National Insurance Class 1 contributions raised from £75 per week to £85 per week	−70	−80
(iii) Income tax thresholds[2,3] raised by 10 per cent.	−1,970	−2,540
(iv) Basic rate of income[3] tax reduced to 24 per cent.	−1,400	−1,530
(v) Capital Gains Tax exempt amount doubled for single people and married couples	0	−150
(vi) Inheritance tax threshold raised to £300,000	−350	−800
(vii) Stamp duty on securities halved but extended to gilt edged securities	[4] +200	[4] +200
(viii) Every adult allowed to save £1,000 free of tax each year	[5] —	[5] —

[1] Produces revenue yield because savings on contracted out rebates (which are paid on earnings between the lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit) are greater than the cost of contributions forgone from those earning between £43 per week and £55 per week.
[2] Main personal allowances and the basic rate limit.
[3] Estimates are partly based on a projection of the 1986-87 Survey of Personal Incomes. They are provisional and include the consequential effect on capital gains tax.
[4] Highly uncertain.
[5] Cost would depend on take-up.

Tax Avoidance and Evasion

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been lost to the Exchequer each year since 1979 because of tax avoidance and evasion; and how many prosecutions have resulted (a) nationally and (b) in the tax area covering Nottingham.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to say how much revenue is lost through tax avoidance and evasion.

The numbers of criminal prosecutions nationally for tax fraud in each year since 1979 are as follows.

Year	Number of prosecutions
1979-80	150
1980-81	188
1981-82	175
1982-83	142
1983-84	159
1984-85	238
1985-86	320
1987-88	213

The Inland Revenue does not keep records of tax prosecutions by locality and separate figures are not available for the Nottingham tax area.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school children of employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Brooke: My Department is taking part in a holiday play scheme for a number of Whitehall departments organised by the Westminster play association for children between 5 and 12. The scheme will run in the Treasury building in Parliament street.

Apart from small departmental contributions to start-up costs, the scheme currently in operation is self financing. Consideration is also being given to a similar scheme being operated at the Chessington computer centre.

Tobacco Tax

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from taxes on tobacco and tobacco products in 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that £5,766 million revenue was raised from taxes (excise duty and VAT) on tobacco products. Of this, £1,000 million is estimated to have come from VAT (based on consumers' expenditure on tobacco) and the rest from excise duty.

Bingo Duty

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what figures the threshold for small-scale bingo duty would need to be increased to take full account of the rate of inflation since the tax was introduced.

Mr. Lilley: The small-scale bingo exemption limits would need to be increased to around £420 (daily) and £1,400 (weekly) to take full account of inflation since the exemptions were introduced.

Duties and Taxes (Yield)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the tax yield for 1988-89 of (a) vehicle excise duty, (b) fuel duty, (c) new car tax, (d) value-added tax on new vehicles and (e) value-added tax on petrol and derv sales.

Mr. Lilley: Following is the available information:

	Tax yield 1988-89
(a) Vehicle excise duty	2·8
(b) Hydrocarbon oil duty	8·6
(c) Car tax	1·3

Estimates of the VAT yield from (d) value added tax on new vehicles, and (e) value added tax on petrol and derv sales are not available.

Written Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his practice when answering certain questions by reference to previous written answers to attach the answer so referred to.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Reference to written answers that have not been published in the Official Report will continue to be copied to hon. and right hon. Members.

Calendars (Germany)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when and why duty was imposed on calendars sent from Germany as gifts to persons living in Britain; and at what rate duty is charged.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 January 1989]: All goods imported into this country, including gifts, may be subject to duty or value added tax. This is because similar goods bought in the United Kingdom bear these charges, and different treatment for imported goods would be unfair on businesses making or selling competing products. Under EC law, which we are obliged to implement, calendars that originate in the EC or have acquired free-circulation status are not liable to import duty but are liable to value added tax at the standard rate of 15 per cent. Gifts between private persons may qualify for relief from import charges by post, but business presents sent to private persons are chargeable unless the import value is £7 or less.

Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimate of tax revenue expected to be raised by the higher rate of income tax in 1988-89; and what were the comparable amounts raised by the higher rates in respect of the years 1987-88, 1982-83, 1978-79, 1974-75 and 1970-71.

Mr Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Information is given in the table.

Tax liability at the higher rates of income tax

Year	Tax liability at higher rate £ billion	Tax liability at excess over basic rate £ billion
1970-71	—	[1]0·3
1974-75	1·5	0·6
1978-79	1·8	0·8
1982-83	3·4	1·4
1987-88[2]	8·2	3·9
1988-89[2]	[3]8·8	[3]3·2

[1] Between 1928-29 and 1972-73 Surtax, a deferred instalment of income tax charged at rates additional to the standard rate, was payable.

[2] Estimates are based partly on a projection of the 1986-87 Survey of Personal Incomes and are provisional.

[3] Includes estimated liability to Capital Gains Tax.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of reducing the higher rate of income tax from 40 per cent to (a) 35 per cent., (b) 30 per cent. and (c) 25 per cent. in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Available information is given in the table. Estimates include the consequential effect on capital gains tax. They are partly based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. The base for the comparison is the tax regime for 1988-89 indexed to 1989-90 by 6·8 per cent., the increase in the retail prices index for the year to December 1988. Receipts of tax in 1989-90 would be reduced by about half of the full year cost. Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Full year cost at 1989-90 levels of income and gains of reducing higher rate of tax.

Higher rate of tax reduced to	£ million
(a) 35 per cent.	1,200
(b) 30 per cent.	2,400
(c) 25 per cent.	3,600

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Funding

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has given to the proposals from university vice-chancellors to decentralise funding of universities and retain the links between university research and teaching.

Mr. Jackson: There is currently a wide-ranging debate on the funding of higher education, to which various vice-chancellors have contributed. The Government are watching with interest to see how this debate develops and matures.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the liability to pay 20 per cent. of the applicable community charge will be taken into account in assessing the level of student grant from 1989-90 onwards.

Mr. Jackson: The rates of student grant for 1989-90 were announced on 16 December at column 755. Students' discounted liability for the community charge was one of the factors considered in reaching decisions about those rates.

Examinations (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list in the Official Report the proportion of pupils in each Northamptonshire school who, in 1988, achieved GCSE grades A, B or C, listing the schools in descending order of proportion from the highest to the lowest;

(2) if he will list if the Official Report the number of A level examinations sat in 1988 by pupils at Northamptonshire schools and the percentage passed, listing schools in descending order of percentage pass rate.

Mrs. Rumbold: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of pupils at Northamptonshire schools obtained in 1988 GCSE grades (a) A, (b) B and (c) C.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not yet available centrally.

School Rolls

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools, other than special schools, have 200 or more pupils on their rolls.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In January 1988, there were 9,279 maintained primary schools and 4,010 maintained secondary schools, excluding special schools, in England with 200 or more pupils on roll. The number of pupils in primary schools includes those attending part-time.

Schools (Funding)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much additional funding his Department is providing to local education authorities in 1989-90 and subsequent years for introducing local management of schools in respect of (a) training of heads, governors and officers, (b) developing computerised information systems and (c) additional support staff for schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Targeted support for expenditure by local education authorities on activities relating to the introduction of local management of schools is channelled through education support grants and LEA training grants. The 1989-90 education support grants programme includes support for £4·9 million of expenditure on the training of school governors, including training on local management. It also includes support for £25 million of expenditure specifically to help LEAs with the introduction of local management of schools through the purchase of computerised management information systems, the appointment of central teams and the training of non-teaching staff. The precise division of expenditure between these heads is for LEAs themselves to decide. It is my intention that support should be maintained at least at this level for a further two years. Training for heads and senior teachers to implement LEA schemes of local management of schools is a specified element of a £10 million national priority area under the LEA training grants scheme. It is for LEAs to determine what additional support to devote to the implementation of the education reforms from block grant or from their own resources.

Science (Policy Statement)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn on 12 December 1988, Official Report, column 390, he is now ready to publish a policy statement on science in the light of discussions on the document "A Strategy for the Science Base" by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have nothing to add at present to my answer of 12 December 1988, at column 390.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage people to come into teaching from careers in industry and business; what initial support he has received for his proposals from the industrial and business sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's action campaign on teacher recruitment has boosting the number of mature entrants from industry and business as one of its main aims. The teaching as a career unit—TASC—targets older people from other careers with special publications, and in its national and local advertising. In conjunction with ICI, we are running a well-subscribed programme of taster courses for older people who are considering a career in teaching. We have funded special teacher training courses designed with those making a career change in mind. We also encourage and support partnerships between education and industry on teacher supply, notably with BP and British Telecom. In addition we have sponsored seven regional conferences to stimulate co-operation between education and industry over alleviating teacher shortage.

Single European Market

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent the further education sector is preparing for the impact of 1992 and the single European market; what resources are being allocated to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Employers need an adaptable skilled work force to increase their competitiveness in international markets. The Government have introduced a number of reforms which aim to increase the responsiveness of the further education service to labour market needs. As the message about the single European market is increasingly heard by employers, they will be seeking appropriate provision from the further education sector.

A growing range of initiatives, at both national and local level, are being taken in further and higher education to prepare for 1992. For example, a network of language export centres has been set up to support specific business needs by providing language training, briefings on culture and trade, and export consultancy. And several agencies are promoting exchange visits between students here and in other member states. Such exchanges allow students to pursue their subject interests while practising their foreign language skills and learning about another cultural context. It is not possible for me to quantify the resources allocated to the many relevant activities.

History Syllabuses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the content of history syllabuses in use in secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Various representations have been received over recent months mainly on issues such as bias and empathy. These will be further considered where appropriate by the national curriculum history working group whose establishment my right hon. Friend announced on 13 January.

Incentive Allowances

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the specific requirements for teachers to receive incentive allowances; and how many teachers applying for such allowances have had their applications rejected.

Mrs. Rumbold: School teachers do not apply for incentive allowances. Under the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1988, a local education authority has the discretion to pay an incentive allowance if it is satisfied that a teacher fulfils at least one of the following criteria:

(a) he undertakes responsibilities beyond those common to the majority of teachers; or
(b) he has demonstrated outstanding ability as a classroom teacher; or
(c) he is employed to teach subjects in which there is a shortage of teachers; or
(d) he is employed in a part which is difficult to fill.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers receive one of the five incentive allowances in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: On the basis of a recent sample survey of LEAs undertaken by the local authority conditions of service advisory board, we estimate that about 140,000 school teachers in ordinary schools are currently in receipt of an incentive allowance.

GCSE

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will call for a report from the GCSE boards on their methods of marking GCSE papers in order to establish which boards use criterion referencing as the basis for marking papers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE incorporates criterion-referencing to a greater degree than the former O-level and CSE systems. The School Examinations and Assessment Council, which is responsible for advising my right hon. Friend on such matters, is charged with ensuring that GCSE syllabuses approved under section 5 of the Education Reform Act 1988 conform to the objectives of GCSE, and that GCSE assessment arrangements are designed to provide consistent measurement of the standards achieved. We look to the SEAC to take forward work to improve the basis for awarding GCSE grades. My right hon. Friend has also asked for the SEAC's advice in due course on the incorporation of the GCSE within national curriculum assessment arrangements, which require criterion-referenced assessment.

Teachers' Working Hours

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what systematic information his Department gathers about the average working hours of teachers in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the average working hours of secondary school teachers (including work outside the classroom) was collected for the first time in the 1988 secondary school staffing survey. Results from this are expected to be available in the spring. Comparable data for primary school teachers are not available.

Medical Schools

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which medical schools are currently providing lectures alerting medical students to the dangers of benzodiazepines.

Mr. Jackson: As for other subjects, details of the medical curriculum are for individual institutions to determine. However, the framework for those curricula are set by the General Medical Council's recommendations on basic medical education, which draw particular attention to the need for teaching about adverse drug reactions.

School Libraries

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on school library provision.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to the reply, 23 January 1989, columns 382-83]: My hon. Friend's oral question when tabled referred to student library provision and was correctly answered on this basis. I regret that the Department failed to note when the question was unstarred that the word "school" had been substituted for "student". On this basis the answer is as follows:

The level of funding and organisation of school library provision are matters for local decision by LEAs and schools. In recognition of the importance of libraries in supporting the school curriculum, the Department's expenditure plans for 1988-89 allow for LEAs to spend an additional sum of £10 million on improvements in secondary school libraries.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Single Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in ranked order the latest available figures for the level of public awareness of the establishment of the single European market in 1992 among EEC member states.

Mr. Maude: Our single market campaign is targeted at business in the United Kingdom. The DTI does not therefore undertake regular monitoring of general public awareness of the single market. Limited research on the Department's behalf last August indicated that the general public's awareness of the single market at that time was over 60 per cent.

Marshall Aid Fund

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will raise with the EEC Commission the operation of the fund operated by the West German authorities known as the Marshall aid fund with a view to ascertaining whether the terms offered by the fund are consistent with the EEC rules on industrial aids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The operation by the West German authorities of a Marshall aid fund, known as the European recovery programme, was noted as an existing aid by the European Commission at the time of the creation of the European Community. I understand that the Commission has since policed the programme as an existing state aid which is subject to the state aid provisions of the EEC treaty.

Toyota

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the possibility of an investment in manufacture in the United Kingdom by the Toyota motor corporation.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 26 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell), at column 667.

Privatisation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is considering the introduction of a Privatisation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No decision has been taken to bring forward such a measure.

Assisted Management

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of his Department's assisted management were in place by 31 December 1988 on a regional basis.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 27 January 1989]: By the end of December 1988, 11,487 applications for assistance under the consultancy initiatives had been referred to independent scheme contractors for the appointment of consultants, as follows:

	Numbers
North East	602

CIVIL SERVICE

Scientific Collaboration

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what arrangements exist, or are planned, to give training to United Kingdom civil servants in the methodology of European scientific collaboration.

Mr. Luce: Arrangements for any necessary training are the responsibility of the departments involved in European scientific collaboration. No training is provided centrally.

Secondments

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether there has been secondment by members of the Civil Service to the equivalent services in the member states of the European Community, and vice versa.

Mr. Luce: For a number of years, a small number of exchanges between the United Kingdom Civil Service and the Civil Services of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of Ireland have taken place. Some of these have been under formal bilateral agreements between Her Majesty's Government and the governments of those other countries. A number of other exchanges have taken place outside the scope of the formal agreements.

Squash Racquets Club

Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will ensure that adequate provision continues to be made for the Civil Service squash racquets club when Thames house north is transferred to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Luce: Departmental occupancy of Thames house north is not yet fully settled, but the building is to be refurbished and the squash courts will cease to be available. No others are currently available on Departmental premises in central London, but possible alternative arrangements are being studied: I place importance on the availability of satisfactory sporting and recreational facilities for civil servants.

Pensioners' Alliance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley, Official Report, 13 January, columns 773-774 when the Civil Service Pensioners' Alliance can expect to receive the new payable order for £35,000; and if he will take steps to ensure that its repayment is treated as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Luce: My officials will authorise payment of £35,000 awarded to the Civil Service Pensioners' Alliance from the RPI error funds immediately Parliament approves a Supplementary Estimate that has been submitted for the funds.

THE ARTS

Museums (Admission Charges)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all national museums, showing for each the adult admission charges in (a) 1978 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 May 1988 at column 260. Since that date, the science museum introduced in October 1988 an adult admission charge of £2 (with concessionary charge of £1) at the museum in South Kensington.

In 1978, admission charges were made by the following museums:

Imperial War Museum:
HMS Belfast
Duxford Airfield

Victoria and Albert Museum:
Apsley House
Ham House
Osterley Park Museum

Music

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on what support he is giving to (a) classical music and (b) popular music.

Mr. Luce: I do not seek to make a distinction between classical and popular music; some classical music is extremely popular. The Arts Council's direct expenditure on music in 1987-88 was £23,708,211. The Scottish Arts Council spent £5,581,580 and the Welsh Arts Council spent £2,296,500. The regional arts associations also funded music organisations. Additional funds were made available for touring and festivals.

British Theatre Association

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many new texts have been purchased by the British Theatre Association library in each of the past five years.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the BTA that it purchased the following numbers of new texts in the past five years: 1,398 (1987-88), 755 (1986-87), 979 (1985-86), 1,088 (1984-85), and 1,131 (1983-84). Donations over the same period were in excess of 7,500 volumes.

ENVIRONMENT

Newmarket (Boundary Transfer)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 20 December 1988 to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds, Official Report, column 186, what is the estimate of the additional cost of converting the space released from the canteen that is to be remodelled at Brookslands avenue, Cambridge, for new offices to be occupied by staff transferred from Newmarket.

Mr. Chope: Plans are not yet fully developed, but the estimated cost is about £350,000. However, the anticipated income from the sale of the offices in Newmarket will be more than sufficient to fund this, as well as a refurbished canteen for 1,100 staff.

Housing Action Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the arrangements will be for the ballot in a housing action trust; whether each household will have one vote; and, in the case of joint tenancies, which of the joint tenants will be invited to cast vote.

Mr. David Trippier: We propose to ask the Electoral Reform Society to arrange for the conduct of ballots under the terms of section 61(3)(a) of the Housing Act 1988. Each secure tenant, including each joint tenant, living within an area proposed for designation will have a vote.

Customs and Excise (King's Reach)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the rental for the Customs and Excise building at King's Reach, Bermondsey, SE1.

Mr. Chope: The rental charges for privately owned buildings leased by the Property Services Agency are a strictly commercial and confidential matter.

Shopping Developments, Broadstairs

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his decision on planning appeal numbers, Department of the Environment reference numbers, SE2/5283/219/3, SE /5283/182/1 and SE2/5283/219/4, relating to shopping developments at Westwood road/Margate road, Broadstairs proposed by the Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society, Sainsburys and Argyle Stores (Properties) Ltd., following the public inquiry at Broadstairs in June 1988.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue his decisions shortly.

House Purchase (Interest Rates)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the impact of current interest rates on the rate of house purchase.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Parkway Stations

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria which would need to be satisfied before he would entertain a public inquiry into a proposal to establish a parkway station with its attendant car park in an area in which no railway exists at present.

Mr. Chope: If such a proposal were to come before my right hon. Friend by way of appeal or call-in, the scale and impact of the development, and the likely degree of public interest, would be among the factors considered in deciding whether to hold a public local inquiry, rather than by proceeding on the basis of written representations.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, he will set out for each available category of local government staff the numbers in (a) 1968 and (b) June 1988, showing the net and percentage change in each case.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Numbers of Staff Employed in Local Authorities in England

June figures

Local Authority Service	1968	1988	Change Number	Percentage
Education (Lecturers/Teachers)	488,749	650,651	+161,902	+33·1
Education (Other)	461,184	650,105	+188,921	+41·0
Construction	105,346	103,130	−2,216	−2·1
Transport Services	63,654	2,934	−60,720	−95·4
Social Services	215,275	335,632	+120,357	+55·9
Other General Services	528,284	579,404	+51,120	+9·7
Police (All ranks)	85,746	118,084	+32,338	+37·7
Total	1,948,238	2,439,940	+491,702	+25·2

Note: There is likely to have been some reclassification of staff between service categories over this period, so the figures for the two years may not be entirely comparable. Local authority functions have also changed over the period.

Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the locations of water quality sampling undertaken by South West Water for every day from 6 July 1988 until the latest available date.

Mr. Ridley: It is the responsibility of the South West water authority to take samples throughout its region in connection with its drinking water supply function: I am advised that it takes samples:

1. At raw water sources;
2. At treatment works at different stages of the treatment process;
3. Treated water at the exit from treatment works;
4. At service reservoirs;
5. Water in the distribution system at hydrants and customers' taps.

Between 6 July 1988 and 25 January 1989, a total of 25,544 samples were taken and analysed.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has held with the Water Authorities Association about stake-building by water authorities in statutory water companies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of the Southern water authority's announced need for an increase in charges is accounted for by the necessity to fund the purchase of stock in statutory water companies;

(3) if he has reviewed the agreement between the Southern water authority and AIPF Ltd.; and if he has assessed whether they are in the public interest;

(4) how much has been committed by the Southern water authority to the purchase of stakes in statutory water companies;

(5) what steps he is taking to assess whether the Southern water authority's acquisition of stakes in the Eastbourne, West Kent and Mid-Essex water companies are in the public interest;

(6) what discussions he has had with the Southern water authority about its acquisition of stakes in the Eastbourne, West Kent and Mid Sussex water companies; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what steps he has taken to (a) regulate and (b) influence the use of public money by water authorities to acquire (i) majority and (ii) minority stakes in statutory water companies;

(8) if he has discussed with the Southern water authority the rate of return on its recent investment in the Folkestone water company; and if he will make a statement;

(9) if he has discussed with the Southern water authority the purpose for which it recently acquired a minority stake in the Folkestone water company; if he has taken steps to assess whether the acquistion was in the public interest; and if he will make a statement;

(10) what criteria water authorities are required to observe in the application of public moneys to the purchase of (a) majority and (b) minority stakes in statutory water companies;

(11) what discussions he has held with the Southern water authority about its accountability for stake building in statutory water companies; and if he will make a statement;

(12) what place the acquistion of minority stakes in statutory water companies have occupied in the discussions on performance aim, financial targets, and external financial limits for the Southern water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly meets water authority chairmen, including the chairman of Southern water authority, to discuss all aspects of water policy. The general question of share purchase in statutory water companies has arisen on a number of occasions. It has been made clear to chairmen that there are three constraints: their statutory powers; their external financing limits; and mergers policy, including the special provisions for water mergers announced by my right hon. Friend on 11 January. It has also been made clear that we shall not increase external financing limits to accommodate purchases of water company shares. Against this background, it is for each water authority to decide whether, and under what arrangements, to purchase water company shares; and to justify its actions.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Southern water authority about its external financing limits.

Mr. Howard: None.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what direction he has given to the Southern water authority to reduce pollution to Chichester harbour.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has issued no direction to the Southern water authority in respect of pollution in Chichester harbour. Effluent discharges by the authority are controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and the inspectorate has powers to vary and tighten discharge consent conditions where appropriate.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investments in statutory water companies have been made by, or on behalf of, any pension fund to which water authorities contribute public money; if he is satisfied that any such investments produce a satisfactory rate of return for that pension fund; what instructions he has given to investment managers of such pension funds in connection with the purchase of water company stocks; and if he will place a copy of such instruction in the Library.

Mr. Howard: Investments by or on behalf of pension funds are the responsibility of the managers of those funds. Consequently, it is for them to determine, with reference to the appropriate regulations, whether a particular investment forms an appropriate part of their portfolio. The Secretary of State has no information, beyond what is publicly available, about such investments of this kind which may have been made.

Rates

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the level of increase in expenditure which could be set by the Leeds city council in 1989-90 if the increase in the rates was kept within 5 per cent. and the council made the same use of balances as in 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that, with a 5 per cent. increase in rates next year, Leeds city council could increase expenditure in 1989-90 by about 5 per cent. (£17 million), if it made the same use of balances as in 1988-89.

Development Plans

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make an announcement about the Government's proposals for the development plan system.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today published a White Paper setting out our proposals for the future of the development plan system in England and Wales (Cm. 569). These proposals, which reflect the outcome of the consultations undertaken in 1986-87, will improve the effectiveness of the development plan system by simplifying its structure and streamlining procedures for the adoption and review of plans. The strategic role of the counties will continue, but the present county structure plans will be replaced by statements of county planning policies, dealing with the key issues. The main feature of the new system will be a single tier development plan at district level. All district councils will be required to prepare development plans for the whole of their areas, consistent with national and regional guidance and with county policies. Similar arrangements will apply in the national parks. The necessary legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits. The White Paper proposes a five-year timetable from commencement to full implementation of the new system.

A sound planning system is essential if we are to make realistic provision for homes and business while meeting the growing concern for protection of our environment in town and country. I believe that these proposals are a further significant step towards getting that difficult balance right. They will enable the planning system to serve the needs of the nation in the 1990s.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his Department's public expenditure plans, following publication of the White Paper setting out the Government's expenditure plans for 1989-90 to 1991-92 (Cm. 609).

Mr. Ridley: The White Paper explains in more detail my Department's plans for expenditure for 1989-90 to 1991-92, announced in summary at the time of the Autumn Statement, and gives comprehensive information about what we have achieved through our programmes in past years, and about our targets for the future.

Housing

The Autumn Statement announced gross provision for housing capital expenditure in 1989-90 £441 million (12 per cent.) higher than previously planned. This increase has been made possible by the considerable success of the Government's right-to-buy policy. Receipts from the sale of local authority housing and land are on course to reach over £3,000 million, their highest level ever, with right-to-buy sales up by nearly 40 per cent. on last year, to an estimated 150,000.

This year's White Paper continues the trend established in previous years of offering more detailed information about the Government's housing programme. Particular emphasis has been placed on setting future targets for individual components of the programme, an emphasis which will be continued next year when the effects of new legislation have been absorbed. Information on the outputs already achieved has also been further developed, and should assist the reader in assessing public sector performance in the housing field.

Housing associations

Within the overall increase in housing expenditure, a major feature of the Government's plans is the increasing role of the Housing Corporation in supporting the provision of new rented accommodation by housing associations. Approvals for rented accommodation are set to rise from the current level of 16,000 to over 24,000 in 1991-92. The resources available through the Housing Corporation are being increased by £75 million in 1989-90, with further increases planned in subsequent years to reach over £1·3 billion in 1991-92 (80 per cent. up on the original provision for this year). This increased investment will be further augmented by injections of private capital. Details of the corporation's approved development programme were given by my noble Friend the Minister for Housing on 14 December. The increased resources being made available over the next three years together with the expanding use of private finance will allow many more homes to be provided for those in need.

Local authority programmes

The local authority programme is focused on renovation of their stock. In 1988-89 some 160,000 local authority dwellings will undergo improvement compared with 150,000 in 1987-88. The 1986 English house condition survey, published recently, confirms the successful use of housing investment programme resources to the extent that 92 per cent. of the local authority-owned housing stock is in good repair. Planned expenditure by local authorities on their own housing capital programmes in 1989-90 will be £353 million (13 per cent.) higher than provided for in previous plans. After taking account of the substantially increased spending power available to local authorities from higher levels of receipts, HIP allocations for 1989-90 have been set at £920 million. Individual local authority allocations were announced by my noble Friend the Minister for Housing on 8 December 1988. Local authorities continue to spend an increasing proportion of their resources on the renovation of their housing stock, in line with Government policy.

Estate Action

Estate Action's budget has been increased by 36 per cent. to £190 million in 1989-90. This programme continues to promote renovation and improved management, encouraging innovative solutions to the problems of physically run-down and difficult-to-let estates. Over 100,000 dwellings are now benefiting from Estate Action treatment.

Housing action trusts

Last year, the Government announced a proposal to establish a number of housing action trusts as a pilot programme to tackle the worst areas of local authority housing. Following the identification of six potential HAT areas, consultants were appointed to report on their feasibility. The Government are now considering the consultants' reports. Net provision for HATs in 1989-90 is £68 million.

Other environmental services

Inner cities

My Department's inner cities programmes remain a very high priority. The key to successful inner cities regeneration is partnership between the public and private sector. Both the urban development corporations and the city grant programme are having considerable success in attracting private sector investment in their areas.

Urban development corporations

There are now 10 urban development corporations in England, Bristol being the latest to be set up this year. Public expenditure provision for UDCs is over £250 million in each of the next three years. Total resources available to UDCs will be even higher as increased receipts from the disposal of completed properties and sites are reinvested in the programmes. Priorities for 1989-90 have been set for the first and second generation UDCs. For example, in 1989 a start is planned on the Limehouse link road, the eastern extension of the London docklands light railway and on the development of Newcastle business park at Elswick. New measures will also be undertaken in other UDCs to further progress in housing, commercial and industrial development.

City grant

Since 1982, some £200 million of city grant and its predecessors have generated more than £800 million of private sector investment in the inner cities creating over 34,000 jobs and some 9,000 homes. To build on the momentum already achieved. City grant resources will increase by £23 million in 1989-90 and £28 million in 1990-91.

Urban programme, and derelict land grant

Despite the increased emphasis on UDCs and city grant, planned expenditure by DOE on the urban programme and derelict land grant amounts to well over £200 million a year. In 1988-89 local authorities' inner area programmes supported by government grant, are forecast to create or preserve about 37,000 jobs and support about 55,000 training places. Since 1982 over 7,000 hectares of derelict land has been reclaimed with the aid of derelict land grant. The programme will continue to concentrate on the regeneration of urban industrial land thus also relieving development pressure on open land. Some 2,700 hectares of urban land are planned to be recovered for productive use in the next three years.

New towns

The new towns programme in England is now moving into its final stages. The three remaining corporations are making good progress with the development of their towns and target dates for their wind up have been set. The disposal of commercial and industrial properties is continuing successfully and capital receipts now exceed gross capital expenditure by a substantial margin. Compared with last year's White Paper (Cm. 288) some increase has been provided in the resources available for capital investment in 1989-90 and over the plan period to facilitate wind-up and the increased disposals programme.

Countryside, recreation and environment

The Government is providing substantial resources for countryside agencies to further the process of creating a healthy rural economy, an attractive environment and to conserve wild life. The support for the Rural Development Commission will enable it to continue to help in the provision of a suitable range of viable job opportunities and services to meet the needs of rural communities. Additional resources have been provided for the Countryside Commission to continue its tree planting programme over the next three years. There are also extra resources to help start up in April 1989 the new Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Authority. The support for the Nature Conservancy Council will help protect valuable peatland habitats in Caithness and Sutherland, and enable NCC to conclude further 465 new management agreements with farmers and land owners to protect sites of special scientific interest. Continued support for the groundwork initiative will help extend the community based environment improvement schemes to other priority regions. Support for the Tidy Britain Group experimental clean-up projects has been more than doubled. The modest increase for the Sports Council will enable it to increase the range and quality of opportunities to participate in sports and physical recreations at all levels and to seek ways of attracting private sector investment into sports.

Environmental research

My Department's environmental research programme will be increased by £2·5 million in 1989-90 and 1990-91. The additional provision will support in particular research into the North sea marine environment, waste disposal, climatic change and water metering trials.

Heritage

Planned expenditure on the heritage will be increased by £8 million in 1989-90, and £11 million in 1990-91 mainly for continued restoration of Hampton Court following the fire; the first phase of Albert memorial restoration; additional provision for Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission grants programme, and to provide for the cost of maintenance of the growing number of churches vested under the redundant churches scheme.

Local environmental services (current and capital)

An additional £110 million has been included in local authority current expenditure provision for 1989-90 for the costs of preparing for the implementation of the community charge; this will be supported by a specific grant of £55 million with the remaining expenditure supported by block grant in the usual way. Provision for capital expenditure by local authorities for 1989-90 has been increased by £192 million to £819 million. This includes a further provision of £135 million in addition to £110 million mentioned above to enable local authorities to prepare for the community charge. Capital receipts generated by local authorities on LES are buoyant, and forecast receipts for 1989-90 have been revised upward by £203 million to £745 million.

British Waterway Board

The BWB's external financing limit is increased to £48·3 million. The four-year action plan which the board has drawn up in line with its first and second responses to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on engineering operations will change BWB to a regionally managed, business-orientated organisation, seeking greater private sector investment.

Water authorities

As announced in the Autumn Statement, before the privatisation of their water supply and sewerage functions, the water authorities' responsibilities for the water environment will be taken over by the National Rivers Authority. £40 million has been allocated to the NRA in 1989-90 and £71 million in 1990-91. It is anticipated that increased receipts from direct charges will reduce the NRA's need for the Department's support to £65 million in 1991-92. The nine English regional water authorities will continue to require external finance in 1989-90 and provision of £10 million has been made, but their requirement will depend on the timing and cost to them of the establishment of the National Rivers Authority and of the privatisation itself. Investment by the regional water authorities has increased in constant price terms by over 50 per cent. since 1980-81 and is currently running at £1·1 billion. Further growth is assured to meet higher environmental and drinking water quality standards required by United Kingdom and EC legislation. The Water Bill will establish an independent director general of water services to protect the interests of consumers by ensuring proper standards of service and controlling prices. Provision has been made for the running costs of the water services offices of £2 million in 1989-90 and £4 million each for the following two years.

Property services agency

The PSA's civil accommodation programme is planned to increase by a net £8 million in 1989-90 and £9 million in 1990-91 compared with previous plans. Extra spending of £65 million and £109 million will be offset by increases in capital receipts from disposals, in rents and in payments by other Departments through the property repayment services system. The agency's provision reflects the need to meet unavoidable rent increases as well as to maintain its new building programme and the increased level of maintenance activity agreed last year. It has also been given additional funds to prepare for the change to fully commercial operation in 1993. On PSA's separate parliamentary works programme additional funds have been provided for restoring the Victoria Tower, and for various minor improvements to the Palace of Westminster.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Evironmnt whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I propose the following changes, subject to parliamentay approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

The cash limit for class X, vote 2 (central environmental services, etc) will be increased by £3·013 million to £253·196 million to cover increased grant in respect of the new towns development corporations' roads programme. This will be partly offset by savings within the vote.

The cash limit for class X, vote 4 (royal palaces, royal parks, historic buildings, ancient monuments and the national heritage) will be increased by £14·055 million from £91·201 million to £105·256 million mainly to cover a payment to the National Trust to terminate my Department's obligations under leases in relation to Ham house and Osterley house. This expenditure will be partly offset by savings within the vote.

The cash limit for class X, vote 5 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be increased by £0·733 million from £129·337 million to £130·070 million to take account of a receipt which will not arise in 1988-89 as originally expected. The Department of the Environment's running costs limit will be reduced by £0·182 million from £159·862 million to £159·680 million. This reduction reflects transfers of £0·017 million to the Cabinet Office: Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) for the costs of recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 competition 1988, and of £0·165 million to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (class XX, vote 16) for increased expenditure by OPCS on services provided to my Department. The reduction in the DOE's limit will be offset by increases in the gross running costs limits for the other two Departments.

The cash limit for class X, vote 9 (Sale of shares in the water services public limited companies, etc) will be increased by £0·300 million from £5·140 million to £5·440 million to cover increased costs of advisors.

The non-voted cash limit for the new towns (DOE/NTI) has been reduced by £90·257 million from minus £389·743 million to minus £480 million to take account of disposals of property which are higher than previously forecast. This reduction offsets the increases above which will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Capital Spending

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of gross and net public sector capital spending by his Department by both central Government and local authorities for 1988-89 and for each of the next three years at current prices and at constant 1987-88 prices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 January 1989]: The following figures relate to the Department of the Environment's public expenditure programmes, housing and other environmental services. The figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are rounded to the nearest £10 million. Expenditure by public corporations is not shown.

Housing Action Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to set up a housing action trust in the North Peckham and Gloucester Grove estates in Southwark.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to proceed with his announced plans for a housing action trust scheme for the Loughborough and Angell town estates.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 26 January 1989]: When he has had an opportunity to consider the findings of the consultants studying the proposed housing action trust areas, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will decide the next steps.

Government Offices

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans are there (a) to move Government offices to the north and west of the United Kingdom and (b) to relocate some central London office staff to docklands or south of the river.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Government's relocation policy which I announced on 31 March 1988, at columns 610-611, Departments are reviewing the location of their work with a view to finding locations offering easier labour markets and other advantages. Departmental Ministers announce the outcome of such reviews after decisions have been taken, and since last March firm plans to transfer 1,800 posts from London and the south-east to the north and west of the United Kingdom have been announced; target locations include Glasgow, Belfast, Wigan, Bath and Swindon. No similar announcements regarding moves within London to docklands and south of the river have been made.

In addition, a further 160 posts are due to be transferred to Glasgow under the earlier dispersal programme.

DEFENCE

United States Submarines (Discharges)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the release of coolant from United States Navy submarines into the waters of Holy Loch in Strathclyde;

(2) on what dates United States Navy submarines, moored at Holy Loch, released coolant from nuclear reactor systems into the waters of the Holy Loch; what was the total quantity of coolant released; what was the average amount of radioactivity per litre of coolant released; and whether any radioactive gases were released by United States Navy submarines on these occasions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January at column 555.

Royal Navy Submarines (Discharges)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any Royal Navy submarine had ever discharged any coolant from nuclear power systems directly into the sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January at column 554.

New Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what substitutions for nuclear weapons withdrawn under the intermediate nuclear forces treaty are planned for both British and United States forces within the United Kingdom, on land and on ships based or calling at our ports; and when it is intended to introduce these new nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to substitute for the missiles withdrawn under the INF treaty, which only covered certain specific categories of missiles. The process of modernising and restructuring NATO's nuclear forces, to ensure that they remain effective, responsive and survivable, will not undercut in any way the real reduction in the Alliance's land-based nuclear weapons resulting from the treaty. NATO will continue to maintain only the minimum level of forces consistent with credible deterrence. NATO's nuclear stockpile in Europe is now at its lowest level for 20 years, having been reduced by some 35 per cent. since 1979; it will reduce even further when the INF treaty is fully implemented. Decisions on modernisation and restructuring will be taken as and when necessary.

New Ships

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new ships the Royal Navy will order in the current year.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Newcastle-upon-Tyne East (Mr. Brown) and for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) 29 November 1988 at column 217 regarding frigate orders. The Government also expect to place an order for SSBN-07 later this year.

In addition, although orders are not envisaged for this year, tenders have also been invited for an aviation support ship and we are in the process of evaluating the results of competitive feasibility studies for a possible replacement for the assault ships Fearless and Intrepid.

Ships (Scrapping)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will delay the scrapping of HMS Arethusa and HMS Euryalus while HMS Penelope and HMS Southampton are out of action.

Mr. Sainsbury: The repair of HMS Penelope is expected to be completed before the disposal of Arethusa and Euryalus. As to Southampton, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 10 January 1989 at column 675.

Expenditure

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid by his Department in the year 1985-86 to (a) The General Electric Co. plc., (b) Rolls-Royce Ltd., (c) British Telecommunications plc., (d) Lucas Industries plc., (e) BTR plc., (f) Austin Rover Group Ltd., (g) Dunlop Holdings plc., (h) United Scientific Holdings plc., (i) Courtaulds plc., and (j) Massey-Ferguson Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: The payments made to each of these companies in the year ended 31 March 1986 in respect of headquarters contracts were as follows:

	£ million
The General Electric Co. plc.	800·0
Rolls Royce Ltd.	435·0
British Telecommunications plc.	8·5
Lucas Industries plc.	62·0
BTR plc.	19·0
Austin Rover Group Ltd.	60·0
Dunlop Holdings plc.	14·0
United Scientific Holdings plc.	21·5
Courtaulds plc.	9·0
Massey Ferguson Holdings Ltd.	3·5

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the figures for the value of headquarter contracts awarded to United Kingdom based Ministry of Defence contractors which were used to compile the list shown on page 15 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Vol. 2) included any payments made by the Ministry of Defence for goods and services which were exported from the United Kingdom; and whether these figures represent the value of contracts signed or the value of goods and services delivered.

Mr. Sainsbury: The figures in table 2·10 of volume 2 of the 1988 "Statement on the Defence Estimates" are based on an analysis of payments made directly by MOD to contractors in 1986-87.

The analysis takes into account payments for many goods and services exported from the United Kingdom. For example, it includes payments for equipment taken abroad for operations or training by the United Kingdom armed services; however, these exports (and the corresponding imports if the items are returned to the United Kingdom) are specifically excluded from the official trade statistics.

The workshare agreements for collaborative equipment projects invariably involve a considerable amount of international exchange of components and assemblies. Where the arrangements provide for HMG to make purchases on behalf of a foreign Government—as is the case for certain items of equipment for the Harrier GR5/AV-8B project, for example—the payments made by MOD to contractors are included in the analysis. However, where funds for collaborative projects are routed through international agencies, the amounts are not included in the analysis of direct payments.

Payments made under sales arrangements, where no MOD money is involved, such as those with the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, are separately accounted for, and are not included in the analysis.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid by his Department in the year ended 31 March 1988 to (a) Jaguar Cars Ltd., (b) Sandvik Hard Materials Ltd., and (c) Kalmar Climax Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: The payments made to Jaguar Cars Ltd. and Kalmar Climax Ltd. in the year ended 31 March 1988 in respect of headquarters contracts were as follows:

Jaguar Cars Ltd.	1·0
Kalmar Climax Ltd.	1·3

We have no record of any headquarters contracts having been placed with Sandvik Hard Materials Ltd.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the total value of headquarters contracts handled by his Department in each of the five years up to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: The value of headquarter contracts placed in each of the four years up to 31 March 1987 is shown at table 2-9 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988", (Cmnd. 344-II). The value of headquarter contracts placed in the year ended 31 March 1988 was £6,541 million.

Accommodation Charges

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply of 23 January, Official Report, column 452 (a) when he expects the armed forces pay review body to report on accommodtion charges for 1989-90 and (b) what information his Department has provided to the board as to elements of rates within existing charges for Scottish accommodation.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury during the public expenditure debate on 24 February 1988, at column 312. No evidence was submitted which related specifically to Scotland, although Scottish data were included in overall figures.

Opinion Polls

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department or any of the armed forces have conducted opinion surveys of service personnel on matters of general public interest.

Mr. Neubert: Attitude surveys relating to conditions of service are conducted as required, but I am unaware of any which might be regarded as of general public interest. If the hon. Member is concerned about a particular survey, perhaps he would let me know and I will be pleased to write to him.

Gibraltar

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to change the United Kingdom force levels in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: All force levels are kept under regular review, and as part of the continuing drive for cost-effectiveness, we are considering restructuring and rationalising our forces in Gibraltar and their supporting infrastructure. In particular, subject to the outcome of detailed studies, we plan to withdraw in due course all or the major part of the infantry battalion stationed there.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the low flying regulations permit farm buildings to be used as simulated targets during low-flying training sorties.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The regulations for the conduct of low-flying training in the United Kingdom do not specify particular types of features at ground level which might be used as simulated targets.

WALES

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school-age children of employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office does not at present provide any child care facilities directly, but the advice of welfare officers, flexi-time, part-time working, job-sharing and special leave are available to staff who have difficulties in arranging for the care of their children. A holiday play scheme is planned for summer 1989 and staff would be expected to contribute towards the costs.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report, on a district basis, the sites in Wales used for the disposal of hazardous waste; and if he will indicate whether they are council operated or operated by a private contractor.

Mr. Grist: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a record of 286 waste disposal facilities in Wales. These are listed by local authority area in the following table. Very few of these sites receive special waste. Details of the waste which each facility is licensed to receive can be obtained from the appropriate waste disposal authority, which is required to maintain a public register.

Nursery Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report figures to show the percentage of three and four-year-olds in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes and (c) infant classes in each local education authority in Wales in rank order of provision for three and four-year-olds as a whole.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not collected centrally in the form requested. However, data in respect of the percentage of three and four-year-olds in nursery schools and in primary schools is in the following table:

	Nursery schools	Primary schools
West Glamorgan	2·4	85·2
Mid Glamorgan	8·6	67·5
Clwyd	2·7	73·0
Gwent	10·4	56·1
Dyfed	3·1	60·9
South Glamorgan	7·2	48·8
Powys	—	50·8
Gwynedd	—	49·2

Pupil Numbers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of pupils in primary schools in Wales in classes of over 30.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During a particular teaching period of an enumeration date in January 1988 11·6 per cent. of secondary school children were taught in single-teacher classes of more than 30 children and 12 per cent. were in classes of more than 30 taught by more than one teacher. Comparable figures are not available for primary schools. However, in September 1987, 16·9 per cent. of ordinary classes in maintained primary schools had more than 30 children.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the percentage of pupils in primary and secondary schools in Wales in classes of 35 and over in each local education authority in rank order.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: For secondary schools, the percentage of pupils who were being taught in a class group of more than 35 pupils during a particular teaching period on the enumeration date in January 1988 was as follows:

	Classes taught by one teacher	Classes taught by more than one teacher
Mid Glamorgan	1·2	16·7
Gwynedd	0·8	14·8
Dyfed	0·5	13·0
South Glamorgan	0·6	11·9
Gwent	0·3	11·6
West Glamorgan	0·3	9·6
Powys	0·5	8·0
Clwyd	0·7	3·6

Comparable information is not available for primary schools. However, the percentage of ordinary classes in maintained primary schools which had more than 35 children in September 1987 is as follows:

	Percentage
Clwyd	4·8
Dyfed	1·2
Gwent	1·1
Mid Glamorgan	1·1
South Glamorgan	0·9
Powys	0·7
Gwynedd	0·6
West Glamorgan	0·6

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas of south Wales which he has submitted for consideration to the European Commission under its review of the European Economic Community's structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Decisions on the eligibility for support under the EC structural funds are being taken by the European Commission on the basis of criteria set out in the governing regulations. Her Majesty's Government have recommended to the Commission cases for all four south Wales counties and for the Llanelli travel-to-work area in Dyfed. The whole of the industrial south Wales area is also covered by an integrated development operations programme bid which seeks assistance for the period 1988-92 and transitional arrangements, also included in the funds' regulations, provide for this to be considered by the Commission as planned.

Welsh Water Authority (Land)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a further statement about the current total land holding of the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Grist: Land owned by the Welsh water authority is a matter for that authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State of Wales how much land currently held by the Welsh water authority is surplus to its requirements.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh water authority informs me that it currently has 4,421 acres of land in its ownership which it considers is surplus to requirements.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much land currently held by the Welsh water authority he expects to become surplus to its requirements during the next five years.

Mr. Grist: Such estimates are a matter for the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will take steps to ensure that any future sale of lands currently held by the Welsh water authority is at prices which reflect their full potential value.

Mr. Grist: These are matters for the management of the Welsh water authority.

Advertising

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of money spent by the Welsh Office on advertising for each year since 1978; and how much of that was spent on newspaper advertisements in (a) the Western Mail, (b) the Daily Post, and (c) other newspapers.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 24 January 1989]: The total spending on newspaper, television and radio advertising and other promotional activities (literature exhibitions and so on) is as follows:

1980-81	62,000
1981-82	100,000
1982-83	99,000
1983-84	108,000
1984-85	121,000
1985-86	227,427
1986-87	406,965
1987-88	576,500

The spending from 1979-80 to 1984-85 on newspaper advertising is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The sum spent on newspaper advertising from 1985-86 and subsequent financial years is as follows:

1985-86	98
1986-87	110
1987-88	140

The principal areas of advertising for each of these financial years is:

More detailed information on spending in individual newspaper titles is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made as to whether the 184 per cent. rise in notified cases of food poisoning between 1980 and 1987 results from (a) contaminated food; (b) poor kitchen hygiene, or (c) any other significant reason; and what is the estimated proportionate responsibility of these factors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the majority of cases of reported bacterial food poisoning the suspected vehicle or source of infection is not identified. Comprehensive data are available only from 1970 to 1982 on a number of outbreaks where a food vehicle was identified by the investigators. Some of main contributory factors were preparation of food too far in advance, storage of food at ambient temperature, inadequate cooking of food, inadequate reheating of food, inadequate thawing and under cooking of food. All these factors would have encouraged the growth of food poisoning organisms present in the food. My advisers believe that these contributory factors remain important.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what foodstuffs, other than eggs, were attributed to the cases of food poisoning notified in 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the majority of cases of reported food poisoning the suspected vehicle or source of infection is not identified. In 1987, in those reported outbreaks where the food vehicle was identified, the following foods were involved:

poultry or poultry mixed with other foods; beef; pork/ham; lamb; mixed meats and meat pies; fish/shellfish; rice; milk and desserts.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the cases of food poisoning attributable to chicken and eggs in 1988 required some form of medical attention or treatment from the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is not available.

Grading

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing and midwifery staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the clinical grading structure by each regional health authority and by each health district.

Mr. Mellor: The information the hon. Member requested has now been placed in the Library.

Psychiatric Patients (Accommodation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken into the relative standards of in-patient psychiatric hospital accommodation and that available to discharged former patients.

Mr. Freeman: Several research projects about alternative provision to mental hospitals have been funded by the Department, and I will send the hon. Member a list and place a copy in the Library when this is ready.

In addition, Ministers have recently set in hand work to get a clearer picture of the development of services across the country for people with a mental illness. The objective is to provide Ministers with a properly informed basis for considering whether there are any steps it would be right and practical to take to improve the care of mentally ill people.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior hospital doctors work (a) more than 80 hours a week, (b) more than 104 hours a week, and (c) more than 112 hours a week (i) in the Nottingham district health authority and (ii) in the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. White, the chairman of Nottingham health authority and Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of Trent regional health authority.

Mental Illness

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department has conducted or is conducting research into the reasons for the disproportionate numbers of blacks in mental hospitals;

(2) whether his Department has conducted or is conducting research into the disproportionately high incidence of diagnosed schizophrenia among blacks.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health directly commissions a range of research into mental illness pertaining to the general population. The Department is not funding research specifically into reasons for the occurrence of mental illness in ethnic minorities; but since 1985 it has been supporting NAFSIYAT, a voluntary organisation active in the field of ethnic psychiatry, to evaluate the effectiveness in providing a treatment service in the community aimed at ethnic minority populations. The Department has made available about £1 million in 1988-89 for research into the care and treatment of mentally ill people, including schizophrenia.

In 1987-88 (the latest year for which figures are available) the Medical Research Council, the main Government agency for the funding of medical and related biological research in the United Kingdom, allocated £10·4 million to research into mental health.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department intends to review mental health care among ethnic minorities in light of the particular problems faced by such groups.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health and social services authorities to identify and take account of the needs of all sections of the community when reviewing, planning and funding local mental health services. The importance of mental health care was emphasised at a seminar on ethnic minority health, held in November 1987 for health authority chairmen and managers, chaired by the then Minister for Health. The Minister drew attention to the difficulties which needed to be overcome when mentally ill patients and those treating them had different cultural backgrounds. In addition, where appropriate, Ministers are raising questions on improving health services for ethnic minorities through the review system.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review his decision not to place Waltham Forest in category A or B with respect to funding for AIDS treatment as set out in circular LAC (89) 1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. Our main aim in distributing the support grant for social services for people with AIDS is to help those local authorities that face the most immediate pressures in 1989-90. Category A authorities are those that are estimated to have by far the greatest concentration of people with AIDS and people at risk of infection. Category B includes those authorities which have smaller numbers and those which have fewer cases but which have located in their areas major regional treatment centres associated with which is an additional workload for local authority social services. The London borough of Waltham Forest does not meet these criteria, but, along with all other social services authorities in England, is eligible to bid for funds to assist the planning of services for the future. The Department will continue monitoring the distribution of cases nationally and keep the situation of all authorities under review.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution is being made to his AIDS campaign by organisations other than his Department.

Mr. Mellor: Health Departments in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have provided £495,000 for specific work to be conducted by their respective health education agencies and as a contribution to the National AIDS Helpline which provides a service to the whole United Kingdom.

Other Government Departments have financed specific initiatives related to their fields of responsibility. These include the provision by the Department of Education and Science of educational material for teachers and for use with secondary school pupils; development by the Home Office of educational material for use in prisons; and provision by the Department of Employment and the Health and Safety Executive of an information booklet for the workplace.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many AIDS patients are currently being treated in each London hospital where AIDS is treated; and if he will give his best estimate in each case of the number of foreign nationals involved.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated average annual treatment cost and total eventual treatment cost of (a) each AIDS patient from the time of being identified as HIV positive and (b) each drug addict seeking treatment.

Mr. Mellor: On current evidence, our best estimate is that the average cost of treating a person with AIDS from diagnosis to death is between £20,000 and £30,000.

Because of the wide variety in the amounts and types of treatment given to drug misusers, it is not possible to estimate average treatment costs.

Genito-urinary Clinic (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will direct North East Thames regional health authority to approve a genito-urinary clinic to be located in Waltham Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Planning of health services within a particular area is a matter for the health authority concerned, which is best able to judge priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what child care provision his Department providesfor pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how are these to be funded.

Mr. Freeman: At present no provision for the child care of the pre-school age children of staff is made in this Department, although preliminary discussions on such facilities have taken place. A holiday play scheme has been organised for the forthcoming Easter holidays for the children of staff working in HQ buildings in central London. Additionally staff working in the Whitehall area can make use of the centrally organised holiday play schemes.

Child care provision is one of the areas being examined in a review of opportunities available to women employees in the Department. We hope to base any further holiday play schemes on the experience we are gaining.

The schemes are intended to be self-supporting, but the Department has provided funding to prime them.

Cancer (West Ham)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will order an inquiry into the causes of the cancer cluster now identified in West Ham in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Freeman: Research into the epidemiology of cancer is undertaken by a number of cancer registries and research organisations funded both by Government and independently. Department of Health officials will ascertain whether any study into the incidence of cancer in West Ham has been or is being undertaken, and will discuss the matter with the district health authority.

Departmental Expenditure

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amounts are included within the estimated outturn public expenditure for his Department in 1987-88 in Cm. 288-II for (a) expenditure by way of grants or other forms of non-recoverable expenditure and (b) expenditure by way of loans.

Mr. Mellor: Estimated outturn expenditure for 1987-88 as detailed in Cm. 288-II included the following amounts for:

	£ million
(a) Current and capital grants	152
(b) Net lending to public corporations	12

Note:

The amount shown at (b) represents the external borrowing limit for the General Practice Finance Corporation guaranteed by Treasury stock.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have received kidney transplants in each year since 1982.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of cadaveric kidney transplants performed in the United Kingdom for patients entitled to NHS treatment was:

Year	Number
1983	1,144
1984	1,443
1985	1,336
1986	1,493
1987	1,485
1988	[1]1,544

[1] Provisional figure.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by region, the number of patients undergoing dialysis treatment.

Mr. Freeman: According to information supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of patients receiving dialysis by regional health authority, on 31 December 1987 was as follows:

Region	Hospital haemodialysis	Home haemodialysis	Intermittent peritoneal dialysis	Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis
Northern	243	57	18	206
Yorkshire	177	100	2	195

Note:
There is no waiting list for renal dialysis, because it is an essential treatment for a life-threatening condition.

Hoffenberg Report

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which of the various bodies concerned to progress the ideas combined in the Hoffenberg report have been consulted in the last year; and what was the outcome of those negotiations;

(2) which initiatives to promote organ donation were extended following discussions with the National Health Service;

(3) if he will list those district health authorities which now have an operational policy for organ donation; if he will list the number of potential donors identified in each district health authority in England; and if he will estimate the percentage increase which this represents on the previous year's figure;

(4) if he has any plans to introduce a system of required request so as to increase the number of organ donors.

Mr. Freeman: Following publication of the report of the working party chaired by Sir Raymond Hoffenberg, we prepared a draft circular containing guidance to health authorities on organ donation. After consulting extensively with health authorities, medical bodies and other interested parties we issued health circular HC(88)63 copies of which have been placed in the Library in December 1988. For further details I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 13 December 1988 at column 555. The working party advised us against the use of required request legislation. The health circular asks district health authorities to draw up operational procedures for organ donation by 30 June 1989. Authorities have also commenced a survey which will enable us to assess the number of potential donors; it is too early to form estimates at this stage.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information his Department has about organ transplants undertaken in (a) private hospitals and (b) National Health Service pay beds; and what action he will take against hospitals and consultants who transplant organs which have been sold;

(2) if he will consider introducing legislation to outlaw the sale of organs for transplants;

(3) if he will initiate a compulsory register of all imports and exports of transplantable organs and tissue into and out of the United Kingdom and of all transplant operations.

Mr. Freeman: We do not at present collect information centrally on transplants carried out in private hospitals, or on the use of pay beds by transplant patients. On the subject of the register of organs, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 26 January at columns 711-12. When investigations by Bloomsbury and Barnet health authorities are completed shortly, we shall consider urgently what action to take, including the relevance of legislation.

Elderly People

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people within each health authority in England and Wales were awaiting placement in geriatric hospitals or in residential homes in the local authority voluntary and private sectors at 1 January; and what is the breakdown of numbers in each sector in each health area.

Mr. Freeman: Information about patients awaiting admission to hospital is collected according to the specialty of intended treatment, not by hospital type. Regional and district summaries of hospital in-patient lists at 31 March 1988, the latest available centrally, have been placed in the Library. Information about the numbers of elderly people seeking placement in residential homes in the local authority voluntary and private sectors is not collected centrally.

Tranquillisers

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric hospitals within the National Health Service have special units to enable people to withdraw from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are at present withdrawing from benzodiazepines in psychiatric hospitals within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have this information centrally.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many working days were lost in 1987 as a result of people withdrawing from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of all prescriptions given in 1987 by National Health Service's doctors was for benzodiaze pines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have information in the form requested. In Great Britain in 1987 community pharmacists dispensed almost 399·7 million prescriptions. Of these, about 25·5 million, or almost 6·5 per cent., were for benzodiazepines.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the total number of children under the age of 16 years currently being prescribed benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Imported Food Regulations

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which public bodies are responsible for collecting information on the number and nature of prosecutions made for breaches of the Imported Food Regulations 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is held by the local authority which has undertaken the prosecution. Such prosecutions are rarely necessary, since imported food which is found not to comply with the requirements of the Imported Food Regulations is normally dealt with by the port health authority in co-operation with the importer.

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what temperature of refrigeration is recommended by his Department to prevent the growth of listeria.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Appropriate storage temperatures for chilled food depend on factors such as the length of and the type of food. We are satisfied that the times and storage temperatures recommended in our guidelines on pre-cooked chilled food in catering produce a microbiologically sound product. In addition, as I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 27 January, we are preparing separately guidelines for retailed chilled foods which will be issued as soon as possible.

Cook-chill Meals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield, Official Report, 23 January, column 411, how many of the consultant microbiologists or control of infection officers in the Yorkshire area were consulted before the Yorkshire regional health authority made the decision to implement cook-chill catering across the whole region in September 1988.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Yorkshire regional health authority.

The hon. Member may wish to contact its chairman for the information he is seeking.

Hereditary Conditions

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the new National Health Service register will help in tracing the medical records of those who suffer from hereditary conditions such as glaucoma and diabetes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The NHS central register exists to facilitate the transfer of medical records when patients move from one family practitioner committee area to another. It is not used to record whether people suffer from hereditary conditions; this and other clinical information is contained in the individual medical records which are confidential. No change in the scope of the register is planned, but computerisation in 1990 is intended to speed up considerably the tracing and transfer of the medical records of all patients.

Cash Limits

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made in the cash limits of his Department for 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XIV Vote 3 (Miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be increased by £4,995,000 to £424,256,000. The increases are made for an additional £3,697,000 to implement, from 1 April 1988, the recommendations of the review bodies in respect of doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives and professions allied to medicine as announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 21 April 1988, £100,000 for nurses' and midwives' pay as announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 1 November 1988 at column 601, £5 million for a grant to the Motability 10th anniversary trust fund and £250,000 for the "Eggs: The Facts" advertising campaign. These increases are offset by a surrender of £3,236,000 in respect of a grant to the independent living fund and of £250,000 in respect of grants to organisations serving the interests of persons affected by an error in the calculation of the retail prices index. These sums represent that portion of those grants which will not be paid at the level planned in the current financial year. The increases are further offset by a reduction of £566,000 to the sum announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 21 July 1988 at column 726 to reflect a reduced carry forward of capital underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme.

The net effect of these changes has been charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Dietary Sugars

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pending the report of the COMA panel on dietary sugars, he will request the Health Education Authority in planning its pilot campaign to promote dental health in the north-west to have regard for the conclusions and recommendations contained in two reports referred to by the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) in reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 19 October 1988, Official Report, column 917.

Mr. Freeman: In planning its pilot campaign to promote dental health in the north-west, the Health Education Authority is taking into account all relevant scientific information, including the two reports quoted. The COMA panel on sugars in the diet will take account of these two reports, among others, in reaching its recommendations.

Medical Students

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students entered medical training each year from 1976 to 1988; and how many qualified each year from 1982 to 1988.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The following information was supplied by the University Grants Committee from a special medical return. The intake of pre-clinical medical students to United Kingdom medical schools was as follows:

Academic year	Numbers
1976-77	3,809
1977-78	3,944
1978-79	3,979
1979-80	3,987
1980-81	4,010
1981-82	4,072
1982-83	4,154
1983-84	4,108
1984-85	4,125
1985-86	4,093
1986-87	4,119
1987-88	4,125
[1]1988-89	4,177

[1] Provisional

The number of students who obtained a first registrable medical qualification was as follows:

Academic year	Numbers
1981-82	3,545
1982-83	3,742
1983-84	3,640
1984-85	3,636
1985-86	3,628
1986-87	3,762
1987-88	3,744

TRANSPORT

Severn River Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the progress towards a new Severn river crossing;

(2) when he proposes to begin the construction of a new Severn river crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of groups of firms interested in bidding for the second Severn bridge have responded to the Department's invitation to submit proposals. These are now being assessed.

We hope to announce by the end of February the groups selected to submit full tenders. We remain on course to provide the bridge by the mid-1990s, if traffic levels justify this.

Promoters will be asked to indicate possible completion dates and the toll levels associated with them.

Lorries (Loose Bulk Loads)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents over the most recent period for which figures are available have (a) involved or (b) been caused by lorries carrying loose bulk loads; and how many (i) deaths and (ii) serious injuries have been caused as a result of spillage of loose bulk loads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available. The Department does not record causes of accidents. Cause is often disputed or unclear.

The Department does have available the following figures taken from police reports of personal injury accidents:

In 1987, there were 246 accidents in which a dislodged vehicle load in the carriageway was recorded. In these accidents there were 334 casualties, of whom seven were killed and 78 seriously injured.

Heavy goods vehicles were involved in only 86 of these accidents, which resulted in 135 casualties, including four fatalities and 42 serious injuries.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any representations from people directly or indirectly damaged as a result of spillage from lorries carrying loose bulk loads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are aware of 14 such representations during the last five years covering a widely differing range of incidents.

It is important for lorry loads to be properly and safely secured. Drivers should follow carefully the guidance set out in the code of practice "Safety of Loads on Vehicles" prepared jointly by the Department, the road transport associations, vehicle and equipment manufacturers and the police.

It is also important to avoid diesel spillage which causes severe danger to motor-cyclists.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had or proposes to have with the Civil Aviation Authority concerning the safety in use of twin-engined jet aircraft on transatlantic crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation.

I am advised that the safety record of extended range operations by twin-engined aircraft is such that there has been no need for discussions with the CAA.

NATO

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom representatives designated to form part of the staff of the NATO agencies in transition to war and in war for (a) the Defence Shipping Authority (East), (b) the Interallied Insurance Organisation, (c) the Agency for the Co-ordination of Inland Surface Transport in Central Europe and (d) the NATO Civil Aviation Agency.

Mr. Portillo: Details of the United Kingdom representatives designated to form part of the Defence Shipping Authority (East), the Interallied Insurance Organisation, the Agency for the Co-ordination of Inland Surface Transport in Central Europe and the NATO Civil Aviation Agency are classified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom delegates to the sub-committee on rail transport of NATO's planning board for European inland surface transport.

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom's delegates to the sub-committee on rail transport of NATO's planning board for European inland surface transport are:

One officer at grade-level from the Department of Transport;
A representative from British Rail;
A Ministry of Defence major; and a lieutenant-colonel or major from the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the title of the sub-committee of NATO's planning board for European inland surface transport (PBEIST) which deals with ports, beaches and inland waterways; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom delegates to this sub-committee.

Mr. Portillo: The title of the sub-committee of NATO's planning board for European inland surface transport (PBEIST) which deals with ports, beaches and inland waterways is the permanent sub-committee for ports, beaches and inland waterways transport (PBIWT). The United Kingdom is currently represented on this sub-committee by one officer at grade 7 level and one officer at SEO level from the Department and one officer at HEO level from the Ministry of Defence. The proceedings and further details of attendees are classified.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what economic assessment his Department has made of the impact upon the east midlands of electrifying the midlands main line and of not doing so.

Mr. Portillo: The commercial opportunities for developing the line are a matter for British Rail.

Addingham Bypass

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction work to commence on the A65 Addingham bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We plan to start construction on Addingham bypass this summer.

Departmental Expenditure

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amounts are included within the estimated outturn public expenditure for his Department in 1987-88 in Cm. 288-II for (a) expenditure by way of grants or other forms of non-recoverable expenditure and (b) expenditure by way of loans.

Mr. Portillo: The outturn public expenditure for my Department in 1987-88 as estimated in Cm. 288 included £240 million net repayments of loans. The remainder of the estimated expenditure of £4,721 million was not recoverable except for about £15 million port severance grants which may become recoverable in certain circumstances. The figures for 1987-88 now show a total expenditure of £4,592 million, including £362 million net repayments of loans.

Coastguard

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report those incidents in 1988 requiring assistance from each coastguard rescue station in Scotland.

Mr. Portillo: Figures for 1988 are not yet available. The number of incidents where assistance was co-ordinated by coastguard rescue centres in Scotland during 1987 are as follows:

	Number
Aberdeen	53
Clyde	167
Forth	66
Moray	71
Oban	140
Pentland	56
Shetland	65
Stornaway	42

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received against the proposed closure of the Moray coastguard rescue centre.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has received a number of representations including 13 letters from hon. or right hon. Members.

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of Transport if he will list the number and type of local authority control schemes to restrict heavy lorry movements which have been implemented since the coming into force of the Heavy Commercial Vehicles Act 1973.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not keep a record of such schemes.

Bus Doors

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the safety of bus doors since the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston on 19 May 1988, Official Report, column 524.

Mr. Portillo: Good progress has been made in our discussions with the bus operators and manufacturers. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate in the Official Report income received, or estimated to be received, by London Regional Transport from (a) fares, (b) the Exchequer, (c) rate levy on London boroughs and (d) other income, for each of the years 1984-85 to 1989-90 at constant prices, together with the percentage of income arising from each source for each year, respectively.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Income received by London Regional Transport (1987-88 prices)

	[1]1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	[2]1988-89	[3]1989-90

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to develop a primary road network in Suffolk and Norfolk suitable for the advent of the Channel tunnel and the European single market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A primary route network, consisting of trunk roads and principal local authority roads, is already firmly established for the Department's eastern region, which includes Suffolk and Norfolk. We monitor its operation through a joint committee with the seven county surveyors for the region. The effects of predicted traffic growth and road developments on the network are taken into account at each annual review. This would include any increase in traffic to and from Europe through the east coast ports. The Channel tunnel is not expected significantly to influence traffic flows in Suffolk and Norfolk.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the financing of a new railway line between the Channel tunnel terminal area and London can be carried out with public funds.

Mr. Portillo: Under section 19(2)(a) of the Transport Act 1962, British Rail has the power to borrow public funds for capital investment.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there is any requirement for a specified minimum rate of return to be achieved if the financing of the construction of a new railway line between the Channel tunnel terminal area and London is to be carried out with public funds.

Mr. Portillo: If the new line were to be financed by British Rail, the board would need to demonstrate that the project would produce a commercial return. The discount rate used to test this (currently 7 per cent.) will be agreed between BR and the Department. It will need to reflect the Treasury's required rate of return, which is intended to ensure that commercial public sector investment programmes (such as BR's) provide a rate of return which is broadly equivalent to that which could be achieved in the private sector. The required rate of return was set in 1978 and is reviewed from time to time.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the circumstances in which he will not give his approval to a proposal from British Rail to construct a new railway line between London and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: We will not give our approval if the board's proposals (which will need to include environmental protection measures) fail to establish a commercial case for the construction of a new line.

Road Traffic (Tax Yield)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much tax yield the Treasury would gain from each 1 per cent. increase in the volume of road traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tax receipts do not relate directly to traffic volume. The gain would vary according to how much of the growth came from increased vehicle mileage and how much from increased numbers of vehicles on the road, and on their fuel consumption. Increased motoring taxes would be partly offset by the costs of the extra wear and tear caused by the extra traffic.

Underground Stations (Fire Brigade Reports)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the recommendations in the Fennell report, he will place in the Library the annual reports put forward in 1988 by the London fire brigade on each deep underground station.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that London Underground will, in the light of the Fennell recommendations, place in the Library of the House copies of the annual reports by the London fire brigade together with its responses. This procedure will be implemented starting from the inspection reports received in 1989.

M20

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to let the contract for the construction of London-Ashford section of the M20 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to let the contract for the Lenham to Ashford section of the motorway this spring.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has decided upon a date on which to announce his decision on the future of the Settle-Carlisle railway.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will reach his decision when he has considered all the evidence before him.

Guardian Angels

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the British transport police on the activities on the London Underground system of the organisation known as the Guardian Angels.

Mr. Portillo: I see no need for such a report. The Government have made it clear that we are opposed to private citizens adopting a policing role except as special constables. There can be no objection to any persons travelling on the Underground if they do so in an unprovocative manner as fare-paying and law-abiding citizens. If, however, they act unlawfully or engage in conduct likely to provoke a breach of the peace, their presence will not be welcome and in that event they could not expect to be exempt from the ordinary processes of the law. The British transport police committee is considering the changes that would be necessary to the British transport police scheme to allow the force to recruit special constables and the Government look forward to their proposals.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount collected in tolls on the Severn bridge since it opened to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of £48,547,086 to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present debt on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest available figure is £85,469,667 at 31 March 1988.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the proposed doubling of toll charges on the Severn bridge takes place in September 1989, when he expects the debt on the bridge to be finally discharged.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 2006.

Road Traffic (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate in the Official Report the number of vehicles of different categories crossing the three London traffic cordons in a combined 24-hour flow for the years 1983 and 1987 together with the total vehicle flow at each cordon in passenger car units for the period together with the percentage change for each category and total as set out in Table 4 of his recent publication "Statement on Transport in London".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information on flows in passenger car units is as follows:

Summary of Radial Traffic Movements in London
Combined direction 24 hour flows—thousands of passenger car units

	1983	1987	per cent. change
London Boundary cordon	2,133	2,257	+6

The question asks for results expressed in the form of passenger car units. This measurement is used by traffic engineers to express the demands of different vehicle types as a single value, usually in connection with traffic control at signalled junctions.

The following values are commonly used by the transport and road research laboratory to convert other vehicle types to their equivalent in passenger car units.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that those advising him on British Rail's preferred route for a new railway line between London and the Channel tunnel do not live on or near any of the routes in question.

Mr. Portillo: Members of the Department are required to disclose any personal interest they may have in matters for which they are responsible in an official capacity.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eastern Europe (Food Sales)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the foods and quantities sold to countries in Eastern Europe in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ryder: The following information on United Kingdom exports to Eastern Europe is derived from the "Overseas Trade Statistics". It covers exports to Albania, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and Romania. Data for the whole of 1988 are not yet available.

NATO Central Supply Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom representatives designated to form part of the staff of the NATO central supply agency in transition to war.

Mr. Ryder: Information on the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff of NATO central supplies agency is subject to NATO security classification, and I am therefore unable to provide this information.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 1 December, Official Report, column 319, when the major national campaign on food hygiene will be launched; which people and which organisations have advised on its content; at whom it is aimed; what form it will take; and what the cost will be.

Mr. Ryder: The campaign was prepared by my Department in collaboration with DOH, the Health Education Authority, the public health laboratory service and the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and will be launched this spring. The campaign will be based on an educational leaflet "The Recipe for Food Safety" which will advise the general public on how to prevent food poisoning in the home. The leaflet will be distributed through supermarkets, doctors' surgeries and other outlets. The campaign will cost initially £50,000.

Slugs

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made any estimate of the size of the slug population; and what evidence he has of its rate of growth in recent years.

Mr. Ryder: Whilst I have no estimate of the size of the slug population, long-term monitoring shows no indication of a population explosion. Recent weather conditions have, however, encouraged greater slug activity which has caused local problems for cereal and oilseed rape growers in particular.

Bottled Water (Nitrate Content)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food what are the nitrate levels in the five most popular bottled waters sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: My Department does not keep records of the composition of all individual brands of bottled waters. Information on levels of nitrates in natural mineral waters should be available from the authority which has "recognised" the water under the appropriate European Community rules. It may also be available from the exploiter of the water source.

EC Produce (Chemical Treatment)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department takes to ensure that produce from other EEC states which has been treated with chemicals banned in the United Kingdom does not enter the United Kingdom market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The United Kingdom now has over 1,000 statutory pesticide maximum residue levels (MRLs) under the Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Food) Regulations 1988. Some of these MRLs are set at levels designed to preclude use of certain pesticides and they apply to imported as well as home-produced food and crops. Other member states, like the United Kingdom, are free to approve pesticides not already banned in all member states under directive 79/117/EEC. Many pesticides approved for use here and elsewhere do not give rise to residues in food. However, if imported food were thought likely to contain undesirable residues of pesticides not approved in the United Kingdom, appropriate MRLs could be introduced and enforced under the regulations.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during 1988 salmonella enteriditis was confirmed in egg-laying flocks and on which occasion he used his powers to prevent poultry or eggs from such units from being sold for human consumption.

Mr. Ryder: The provisional figures for 1988 show that salmonella enteritidis was isolated in 20 table-egg laying flocks. Where salmonella enteritidis has been isolated a veterinary investigation has been carried out and advice given. I announced last Friday in a parliamentary reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) that notices will be issued under the Zoonoses Order 1975 to egg producers with flocks known or suspected of infection with salmonella enteritidis or other similar types of salmonella. These notices will prevent the sale of eggs in a raw state direct for human consumption.

Farmers (Direct Aid)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has about the intention of EEC member states to introduce new direct aid schemes for farmers;

(2) which European Economic Community member states currently operate direct income aids for farmers.

Mr. Ryder: None. The Council reached agreement on the Commission's income aid proposal on 24 January. Member states wishing to implement this optional regulation have four years in which to submit their proposals to the Commission.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to introduce a direct income scheme for farmers.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans to do so.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total volume of each commodity held in the United Kingdom in storage under the common agricultural policy intervention regime.

Mr. Ryder: A note setting out the volume of United Kingdom intervention stocks of agricultural commodities is deposited in the Library of the House and updated monthly.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the level of expenditure incurred in the United Kingdom during 1988, for each commodity, in (a) common agricultural policy intervention buying and (b) storage.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is as follows:

	1987-88 Outturn	1988-89 Forecast
Beef
Intervention purchases	100,759	50,340
Intervention sales	−52,850	−43,470
Net cost of intervention buying	47,909	6,870
Storage costs	18,356	10,190
Cereals
Intervention purchases	5,470	72,460
Intervention sales	−93,993	−55,060
Net cost of intervention buying	−88,523	17,400

Beef Producers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much financial support was available to British producers of beef for each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what is his estimate for the next full financial year in the light of the new regime announced on 24 January.

Mr. Ryder: Total expenditure in support of beef production in the United Kingdom in the last three financial years was as follows:

1985-86	404·2
1986-87	312·0
1987-88	292·2

These figures comprise intervention purchases and sales, intervention storage costs, export refunds, beef variable premium, suckler cow premium, calf premium and the beef element of hill livestock compensatory allowances.

In 1988-89 expenditure on the beef variable premium has been reduced as a result of firmer beef prices flowing from reductions in beef from the dairy herd. In 1989-90 expenditure will depend in particular on uptake of the special premium, the rate to be decided for the suckler cow premium and the extent to which the new system for intervention is activated.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the financial effect on the United Kingdom of the decision announced by the European Economic Community Council of farm Ministers at their meeting on 24 January.

Mr. Ryder: We are still assessing the financial consequences of the decisions reached at the Agriculture Council on 24 January. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Export Subsidies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department takes to verify the notice of quantity of agricultural products exported from the United Kingdom with the aid of EEC export subsidies.

Mr. Ryder: Physical control of United Kingdom exports and imports, including those of agricultural products, is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Agriculture Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when, further to his reply of 5 December, column 30, to the hon. Member for Daventry, he plans to publish data on the state of the agriculture industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1988" has been published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I have made copies available in the Library of the House. As indicated in my earlier reply, this document is the successor to the annual review White Papers which have been published in previous years. The new publication contains enhanced information on commodities and on the general financial situation of the industry and provides a compendium of statistics, generally continuing the series which has been running for many years, and providing valuable data for all those with an interest in the industry.

The document notes that 1988 was a year in which major policy developments took place in the United Kingdom and in the European Community generally. In the EC, the most significant development was the agreement reached at the European Council in February 1988, introducing budgetary discipline in the common agricultural policy and improving its management. Last year also saw the introduction of a number of United Kingdom schemes offering farmers the opportunity to engage in commercially viable alternatives to surplus production. Set-aside, the farm woodland and farm diversification grant schemes were all introduced. The number of environmentally sensitive areas was increased and the reorientation of the capital grant scheme was announced.

The different sectors of United Kingdom agriculture fared very differently during 1988. The situation of the industry reported in the document is therefore a complex one, but the following are among its main features.

Cereal and oilseed rape yields were low due to poor weather and because of this and lower prices the value of output was significantly reduced. The value of output of potatoes fell sharply as a result of lower prices. Horticulture had a relatively good year, with most parts of the sector recording a higher value of output.

Within the livestock sector, higher beef prices and increased production of lamb maintained the output value of these meats, but lower prices for pigmeat meant that this sector was depressed for much of the year. Milk production was further reduced by the quota arrangements, but the value of output was maintained by price increases. Production of poultrymeat continued to expand, but lower prices reduced the value of egg production. The forecasts exclude the effects of the recent disturbance in the egg market.

There was little change in the overall quantity, average price or value of the industry's output, but with higher input costs its net product fell by nearly 7 per cent. which, after providing for labour and interest costs and net rent, was reflected in a 25 per cent. fall in farming income. However, no single measure can fully reflect the situation in such a diverse industry, and a variety of different compilations of the aggregate statistics, both United Kingdom and EC, can give different results. It is for that reason, among others, that I have recently suggested that we need a more sophisticated analysis of what is happening to farm incomes than a single aggregate measure can give. The document provides other indicators of farming prosperity which show smaller falls. It also shows that there were considerable income variations among farm types. While the arable and intensive livestock sectors did less well, net income from dairying and hill and upland livestock farms showed marked increases in all parts of the United Kingdom, and net income from lowland livestock increased in England and Scotland. Overall, England fared less well than Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

For the first time Inland Revenue sample data are included in the document. They indicate that income from farming has accounted for 50 to 60 per cent. of total taxable income in recent years. Other earned income has contributed a further 15 to 20 per cent. It is the Government's policy to encourage farmers to find ways of generating an increasing proportion of their income from activities which respond to market demand, including alternative employment of assets and business skills on the farm.

These are sample data relating to earlier years. Further research and surveys are needed to get a more precise and accurate picture of the income position of farming households, and we are undertaking these.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest estimates for the cost of collecting the poll tax in Strathclyde region.

Mr. Lang: Strathclyde regional council will have included an estimate of the cost of community charge collection in the budget which it has now set, but the council has not yet provided the Scottish Office with details of that budget.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidance he issues on the circumstances in which information used for the maintenance of the community charge registers may be disclosed to (a) other departments of Government, (b) the police and (c) public utilities;

(2) what guidance he issues on the use of personal data collected by the community charge officer for community charge purposes as a general information resource for the charging authority to use for other purposes, and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: We have made no provision for personal data to be disclosed for the purposes or to the organisations mentioned by the hon. Member. Section 20(2)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended, provides that the extent to which a local authority shall be entitled to inspect the register shall be an entitlement to inspect such part of the register as relates to premises within their area for the purpose of determining, levying or collecting any community charge. I do not consider that specific guidance is required in relation to either of these issues.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responsible persons, as so described for the purpose of the community charge, had failed to complete properly the community charge inquiry forms in relation to their date of birth; on how many the £50 civil penalty had been imposed for this reason; and if he will give the information also for each regional council on 31 October 1988 and on the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Lang: The processing of community charges inquiry forms and the imposition of civil penalties are matters for individual community charges registration officers and the information requested is not held centrally.

NHS Grading

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Gailbraith) on 20 January 1989 at column 338.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employee's children aged five years and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not provide child care facilities and has at present no plans to provide any. It has, however, publicised such facilities provided by others as have come to notice. The provision and funding of facilities for child care are being considered servicewide and my Department will review the situation in the light of developments.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for people waiting for hospital treatment in (a) Aberdeen, (b) Dundee, (c) Edinburgh, and (d) Greater Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on waiting lists is collected centrally only for health board areas. The latest available information on hospital in-patient and day case waiting lists is published in statistical bulletin 1/88, "Waiting List Figures for 31 March 1988", copies of which are held in the Library.

Area Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 24 January, he will list those schemes under which he makes payments to facilitate the conservation of certain areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the provisions of the environmentally sensitive area scheme and the agricultural development programme for the Scottish islands my right hon. and learned Friend may make payments to farmers and crofters who are prepared to undertake certain conservation measures.

Ross Hall Hospital (Orthopaedic Operations)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orthopaedic operations at National Health Service expense have been carried out at Ross Hall hospital to the latest available date; when this practice started; what is the total cost to date for the National Health Service; and what would be the bed requirement if these operations were carried out within National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of patients admitted to Ross Hall hospital for orthopaedic procedures as part of the waiting list initiatives is 52. The first of these patients was admitted in early 1988.

The total cost to the National Health Service has been £154,144. The operations were carried out in order to shorten waiting times for the operations concerned. I visited Ross Hall hospital and learned at first hand how much this initiative by the board was appreciated by the patients concerned.

School Leavers (University Courses)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of school leavers entering full-time degree courses at university in each of the years from 1982-83 to 1987-88, inclusive, and from each local education authority, including 16 subdivisions of Strathclyde; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the number of students in s4, s5, and s6 in each authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not readily available centrally. The table shows the participation of young Scots in full-time university courses.

	Under 21 Scots entrants to full-time undergraduate courses at universities in the United Kingdom (1)	Column (1) expressed as a percentage of 17 year olds the previous year (2)

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of people unemployed in each of the travel-to-work areas in September 1988 and September 1984.

Mr. Lang: The total number of unemployed claimants in each of the travel-to-work areas in Scotland in September 1988 and September 1984 was as shown in the table.

Note: Due to changes in the compilation of the statistics during the period these figures are not directly comparable.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of employees in employment by travel-to-work areas in September 1988.

Mr. Lang: The latest available figures, from the 1984 census of employment, are given on pages 28 and 29 of "Scottish Economic Bulletin" number 36 (December 1987), which is available in the Library of the House.

Job Creation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number and categories of jobs which have been created by the Inverclyde initiative since the date of its inception in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Inverclyde initiative does not in itself directly create new jobs. Its aim is to stimulate local economic activity and create opportunities for employment.

The initiative records show that between March 1985, when the initiative was launched, and December 1988, 2,613 new jobs have been created by companies in the area. Of these, 1,034 were in manufacturing and 1,579 in the service sector.

Teachers (Working Hours)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what systematic information his Department gathers about the average working hours of teachers in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The timetabled working hours in school in a normal working week subdivided by time in contact with pupils and time out of contact with pupils is collected biennially from each teacher in education authority primary and secondary schools. Due to industrial action in schools, the most recent comprehensive data available relate to September 1984.

Whole Body Monitoring

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now consider extending the programme for whole body monitoring on a systematic basis to the whole of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have funded a programme of research into whole body monitoring covering Scotland as a whole which has been undertaken by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre at East Kilbride. The final report of that work has been prepared and will be published shortly.

Education Reform

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total spending in his Department on press, public relations and advertising on education in 1986-87 and 1987-88 and the projected expenditure for 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 January 1989]: Expenditure was £5,000 in 1986-87 and £20,000 in 1987-88, and is estimated to be about £26,500 in 1988-89.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of the annual social fund budget allocated for each month of 1988-89 for grants and loans (a) in the Edinburgh, Leith local office and (b) in each of the other local offices in Lothian region; and what social fund claims and payments have been made to date, broken down into (i) the number of social fund claims issued and returned for each of grants, budget loans, and for crisis loans, (ii) the number of awards, partial awards and refusals for both grants and loans, (iii) the average payment and (iv) the number of awards successful on review; and if he will give the loans for claimant group 'E', 'A' and pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on annual budget allocations and expenditure, are in the Library. Local offices do not, however, have monthly budgets. To assist local office management, there is a national profile of anticipated monthly expenditure which may be adjusted to reflect local demands. Details of the national profile were given in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 11 July 1988 at column 61.

No statistics are maintained on the number of application forms issued to potential social fund applicants and their representatives.

Details of the number of awards successful on review and the numbers of loans awarded to each social fund client group in the offices requested for the year to the end of December 1988 are shown in the tables.

Benefits

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the amount of benefits to which people are entitled but which is not claimed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No precise estimates of total unclaimed benefits can be provided and those figures which the Department does publish give no more than the broadest orders of magnitude. I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 21 to 25 and table 15.17 on pages 272 to 273 of Cm. 288 (the 1988 public expenditure White Paper) for details of the latest available take-up estimates for the main income-related benefits. Take-up estimates for 1985 should be available shortly.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the levels of statutory sick pay and of sick benefit and invalidity benefit; whether they are earnings related; and if there is a minimum and a maximum sum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statutory sick pay is payable at one of two rates, depending on an employee's average weekly earnings. The present rates are £49·20 where average weekly earnings are £79·50 or more and £34·25 where they are between £41 and £79·49. SSP is subject to deductions for tax and national insurance contributions, where appropriate.

Sickness benefit is a flat-rate payment of £31·30 per week for persons under minimum pension age and £39·45 per week for persons over that age. These sums are increased by £19·40 and £23·65 respectively where there is entitlement for an adult dependant.

The basic invalidity pension is a flat-rate payment of £41·15 per week with increases of £24·75 for an adult dependant and £8·40 for each dependent child. Two other increases may be payable with invalidity pension. An additional earnings-related pension is payable based on the claimant's earnings since 1978. The maximum increase payable in 1987 was £29·11, but the average amount in payment was £4·30. An invalidity allowance is payable at one of three rates where the claimant's incapacity began more than five years before pension age. The rates are £8·65 per week (under 40); £5·50 (40-49) and £2·75 (50-59 (men); 50-54 (women)). But where there is entitlement to both increases, invalidity allowance is offset against the additional pension, so in effect the higher of the two sums is payable. Neither sickness benefit nor invalidity benefit is taxable.

Where the claimant has been in hospital for six weeks, sickness or invalidity benefit is reduced by £8·25 a week if the claimant has a dependant and £16·50 if not. After a year in hospital there is a further reduction of £8·25 where the patient has a dependant. If he has no dependant the benefit payable is reduced to £8·25 a week.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many payments have been made under the cold weather payments scheme for each of the weeks in 1989 in (a) Nottingham and (b) the country as a whole.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Maternity Benefits

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the most recent available figures showing (a) the number of maternity payments from the social fund made to women on income support and the take-up rate for this benefit, (b) the number of awards of free milk and vitamins made to pregnant women on income support and the take-up rate for this benefit and (c) the number of pregnant women on income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

(a) 95,700 social fund maternity payments were made to women on income support between 11 April 1988 and 31 November 1988;

(b) information is not yet available on the number of awards of free milk and vitamins to women on income support. The May 1987 annual statistical inquiry showed 47,000 such awards to women receiving supplementary benefit;

(c) pregnant women are not separately identified for income support purposes.

It is not therefore possible to provide information about take up for either maternity payments or free milk and vitamins.

Benefits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over pensionable age in Great Britain have had their total social security benefits reduced to less than £1 per week as a result of changes to the housing benefit regulations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) claimants and (b) dependants on supplementary benefits income support for each year since 1979 for Great Britain, England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Number of claimants in receipt of Supplementary Benefit or Income Support

	Great Britain	England	Wales	Scotland
1979	2,855,000	2,396,000	172,000	286,000

Notes:
1. All figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and may not therefore sum.
2. There was no Annual Statistical Inquiry in 1985: the one due in December that year was deferred until February 1986.

Incomes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the average growth in incomes in each of the last 10 years of (a) households in the sixth decile group and (b) pensioners' households in the sixth decile group of pensioner households;

(2) what was the average growth in incomes in each of the last 10 years of (a) households in the seventh decile group and (b) pensioners' households in the seventh decile group of pensioner households.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 23 January at column 414.

Family Credit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for family credit take-up in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) the United Kingdom and (e) Greater Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For the figures for Great Britain as a whole, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 13 January 1989 at columns 781-82. No breakdown of this figure between countries or areas is available. The family credit scheme in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will immediately undertake an in-depth study of the high extra costs of disability, as advocated by the Disablement Income Group in its recent report entitled, "Being Disabled Costs More Than They Said", in order to supplement the information on extra costs derived recently from the survey of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Scott: In view of the differences in size, scope and method between the OPCS and Disablement Income Group surveys, we are not persuaded that further research is needed to explain the apparent discrepancy in findings. However I can assure the right hon. Member that we shall take careful account of the DIG report in our consideration of the OPCS findings.

Benzodiazepines

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are at present receiving sick or invalidity benefit as a result of withdrawing from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not held.

Income Support

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect a reply to his letter, dated 30 December 1988, regarding income support for unemployed young people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 27 January.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been made to date for social fund (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; and how many have been refused in each category.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information for the period to 30 November, the latest date for which firm figures are available, is in the national summary tables in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated average annual benefit cost and total eventual benefit cost of (a) each AIDS patient from the time of being identified as HIV positive and (b) each drug addict seeking treatment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not collect statistical information about benefit claims by AIDS patients and drug addicts. It is therefore not possible to make such estimates.

EMPLOYMENT

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current weight in the retail prices index for (a) mortgage interest payments, (b) rents, (c) rates and (d) other housing costs; and what information he has to the equivalent weights in the consumer price indices for other European Community countries.

Mr. Lee: The weights (per thousand) for the components of housing used in the retail prices index are: mortgage interest payments 42, rent 33, rates 43 and other housing costs 42 (water and sewerage charges, repairs and maintenance charges, do-it-yourself materials, dwelling insurance and ground rent).

Housing costs are not similarly defined in other countries, and detailed comparisons are not possible. The weights assigned to the shelter element of housing costs in the consumer price indices of EC countries involve different coverage and concepts, and comparisons should be treated with caution. The figures are as follows:

Weights for Shelter costs in consumer price indices
Countries including owner occupiers cost and rents
Weights per 1,000

	Weights
United Kingdom	75
Germany	148
Holland	164
Ireland	37
Denmark	166
Spain	127

Countries including rents only

	Weights
France	69
Italy	40
Belgium	64
Greece	54

Channel Tunnel (Death)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will call for a report from the Health and Safety Executive on the circumstances in which a teenager was killed in an industrial accident in the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are carrying out an investigation into the circumstances of the accident in the Channel tunnel on 23 January 1989.

Mines (Safety)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those people and organisations he consulted before making the regulations regarding the safety of exit from mines.

Mr. Nicholls: Consultations on proposed regulations to govern health and safety at work are undertaken by the Health and Safety Commission before proposals are made to my right hon. Friend for approval.

The organisations listed were formally consulted by the Health and Safety Commission before the proposed regulations on safety of exit from mines were submitted to my right hon. Friend:

Confederation of British Industry
British Coal
Cornish Chamber of Mines
Federation of Small Mines of Great Britain
Gypsum Mining Association
Mining Association of the United Kingdom
British Ball Clay Producers Association
Other Miscellaneous Mines interests via relevant Mines and Quarries Inspectors in charge of districts
Trades Union Congress
National Union of Mineworkers
British Association of Colliery Management
National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shot-firers
Transport and General Workers Union
General Municipal and Boilermakers' Union

Department of Employment
Department of Energy
Department of the Environment
Department of Trade and Industry
Scottish Office
Welsh Office
Northern Ireland Office
Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development
Health and Safety Agency for Northern Ireland
Institution of Mining Engineers
Institution of Mining Electrical and Mining Mechanical Engineers
Institution of Mining and Metallurgy

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has of the number of accidents involving men employed by contractors in mines in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The table below lists actual recorded accidents to men employed by contractors:

	Fatal	Major Injury	Plus three day[1]
1986	1	44	162
1987	1	58	183
1988	2	85	319

Source: British Coal.

[1] The introduction of the RIDDOR regulations on 1 April 1986 broadened the categories of reportable accidents. Figures for other mines are not readily available.

Radiation Overdoses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what records are kept of incidents of radiation over/dosage within the National Health Service; and how many such incidents have been recorded in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive keeps a record of all over/exposures of employees and other persons, and also of medical exposures of patients that are much greater than intended because of malfunction of or defect in the radiation equipment used, that are required to be notified under the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Since 1 December 1986, the earliest date for which such records are centrally available, the number of overdose incidents within the National Health Service which have been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in each year are as follows:

	Number
1986	5
1987	8
1988	4

Workers' Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will be seeking in the context of the single European market to introduce a workers' charter with particular reference to mergers and closures of companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on Tuesday 17 January 1989 Official Report, column 186.

Tourism

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage the tourist industry in Suffolk and Norfolk to take advantage of the Channel tunnel and the European single market.

Mr. Lee: The British Tourist Authority (BTA), which is sponsored by my Department, is doing a great deal both to identify and publicise the measures the tourist industry, including that in Norfolk and Suffolk, need to take. The BTA is co-sponsoring a major conference on 1 and 2 February on the impact on tourism of the completion of the single European market at which my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I will speak.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the progress of the tourism review that he announced on 18 July 1988.

Mr. Fowler: As the public expenditure White Paper makes clear, the Government's expenditure plans provide for my Department's total spending on tourism to be maintained at the current level, pending decisions following the review of tourism policy I announced in July.

A scheme of financial assistance has been operated for nearly 20 years now by the English tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. Commitments have already been made to provide over £10 million in assistance through the scheme in 1989-90, and some £3 million in 1990-91 and 1991-92. The scheme offers grants, and other assistance, and was introduced and maintained against a background of difficulty in attracting investment for tourism projects. Tourism is now one of Britain's largest and fastest growing industries. The confidence of the industry has been reflected in continuing high levels of investment. In England, almost £2 billion was invested in major tourism and leisure projects completed or under way during the first six months of 1988. In these circumstances, I have decided to suspend the scheme to fresh applications until decisions can be taken on the fully range of matters covered by the review.

I have asked the chairman of the English tourist board to close the scheme to further applications and to make no more offers of assistance subsequent to those approved at the meeting of the board already arranged for 14 February until I have had the opportunity to consider the future of Government support for the tourism industry.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and women over 50 years of age have been without work for one year or more within the following occupational groupings; and what percentages these represent of the total number of unemployed people over 50 years (a) managerial and professional, (b) clerical and related, (c) other non-manual, (d) craft and similar, (e) general labourers and (f) other manual.

Mr. Lee: Estimates are available from the labour force survey for unemployed people who left their last jobs less than three years ago, as follows:

Unemployed people[1] aged 50 or over who left their last job less than three years ago[2]

Occupational grouping	All in group Thousands	Those who left their last job a year or more ago Thousands	Per cent.
Men and women
Managerial and professional	67	31	46
Clerical and related	30	14	45

[1] Based on ILO/OECD measure of unemployment.
[2] Information about last occupational grouping was not sought from unemployed people who had not been employed within the last three years.
[3] Less than 10,000 in cell: estimate not shown.

School Leavers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of achievement of the Christmas guarantee for school leavers; and what is the average period of payment of bridging allowance for those awaiting YTS.

Mr. Cope: The previous "Christmas guarantee" of an offer of a YTS place for the previous summer's school leavers has been extended to a general guarantee of an offer of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds not in full-time education or employment whenever they apply. This guarantee is being fulfilled; there are more than sufficient YTS places available in all areas of the country for any young person who applies.

Information on the average period of payment of bridging allowance is not available.

Discrimination

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will take steps to ratify ILO convention No. 111 on discrimination in employment and occupation (1958).

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Government have no plans to introduce legislation to effect the changes that ratification of this convention would entail.

Cost of Living

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in (a) the general index of retail prices and (b) the indices for one and two-person pensioner households during the last five calendar years; and what proportion of the difference is accounted for by differing treatment of housing costs.

Mr Lee: The percentage increases are given in the following table. Housing costs are not covered by the pensioner indices and data is not available to estimate what their effect would be if they were. However, a like-with-like comparison can be made between the pensioner indices and the general index excluding housing, and the percentage increases for this are also given in the table.

General index	5·0	6·1	3·4	4·2	4·9
General index excluding housing	4·3	4·9	3·0	3·3	4·0
One-person pensioner index	5·0	4·9	3·2	2·3	3·7
Two-person pensioner index	5·1	4·9	3·2	2·6	3·8

Advertising

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the subjects of his Department's advertising campaigns in each of the last three years; how much was spent on each; what subjects are projected for advertising in the year 1988-89; and how much expenditure is planned for each.

Mr. Cope: The amount spent by the Department of Employment on advertising campaigns in each of the last three financial years, together with the subjects, is contained in the tables:

1985-86
Action for Jobs	0·04
Career Development Loans	0·03
Part Time Job Release and Job Splitting Scheme	0·03
Total	0·10
1986-87
Action for Jobs	12·2
Career Develoment Loans	0·2
New Workers Scheme	0·3
Total	12·7
1987-88
Action for Jobs	5·4
Job Share	0·1
Job Release/New Workers Scheme	0·1
Career Development Loans	0·1
Small Firms Service	0·3
Other	0·1
Total	6·1

The amount committed to advertising campaigns in the financial year 1988-89, together with the subjects, is contained in the following table:

	£ million
1988-89
Action for Jobs	0·6
Career Development Loans	0·3
Fit for Work/Disabled Persons	0·1
Jobclub	1·1
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	0·6
Better off in Work	3·0
Small Firms Service	0·5
Total	6·2

This total includes expenditure by the employment service in its first full financial year within the Department. Other publicity activities to promote Departmental objectives are under consideration, within published expenditure limits. All the figures in the tables include production costs and VAT.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will name the sites referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Elmet on 25 January, and specify the modifications to existing methods of work which have been agreed in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: The sites and action taken are as follows:

(a) Godkin Opencast Coal Quarry, Derbyshire—owned by Northern Strip Mining plc—Mineral: Coal.

Immediate prohibition notice issued preventing planned development in the area of a dam wall within the site. Subsequent investigation has produced a method of safe working which complies with the requirements of the notice.

(b) Station Road Opencast Coal Quarry, Derbyshire—owned by Northern Strip Mining plc—Mineral: Coal, and

(c) Dixon Opencast Coal Quarry, Derbyshire—owned by Coal Contractors Ltd.—Mineral: Coal.

At both the above sites, action was taken to redirect the river Rother into purpose-built main river courses, which included flood plains and banks.

(d) Blindwell Opencast Coal Quarry, East Lothian—owned by Fairclough Parkingson of Wakefield—Mineral: Coal.

The proposed stand-off distance between the highwall and the main Edinburgh-London railway line was increased and the slope of the highwall redesigned to increase the safety margin.

Youth Training

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatalities, major injuries, and minor injuries occurred to those in training on YTS programmes during (a) 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986, (b) 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 and (c) 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988; and what was the incidence rate for fatal and major accidents per 100,000 at risk during each of these years.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 January 1989]: The following table sets out the YTS accident figures and incidence rates per 100,000 trainees on YTS for fatal and major accidents.

Period	Average number in training	Accidents[1]			Annual incidence rate per 100,000 trainees
		Fatalities	Major injuries	Minor injuries	Fatalities	Major injuries
1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986	263,748	[4]2	[2]220	1,891	0·8	[2]83·4
1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987	296,298	[5]9	[2]315	1,728	3·0	[2]106·3
1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988	[3]375,844	[6]7	[2]505	2,604	1·9	[2]134·3

[1]Training Agency accident figures for YTS are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, Training agency figures will include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2]The figures on major accidents and the incidence rates on major accidents in 1985-86 are not comparable to those in 1986-87 and in subsequent years due to a reclassification of major injuries effective from 1 April 1986. The reclassification means that some injuries, in particular broken wrists and ankles, which were classified as minor injuries before that date, are now classified as major injuries.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details, as soon as they become available, of (a) compensation paid to YTS trainees because of accidents in 1988, (b) the amount paid to families whose daughter or son died whilst on a YTS during 1988 and (c) the lowest and highest payment made in relation to (a) and (b) above.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 January 1989]: Payments made to YTS trainees or their families in these circumstances are not intended as compensation.

Managing agents and training managers are contractually obliged to obtain insurance cover for any claims for compensation or damages.

Until 11 April 1988 the Training Commission paid industrial death grants under its analogous industrial injuries scheme to ensure that trainees' families received the same amount of benefit as families of employees would have received under the (then) Department of Health and Social Security scheme. Death grants were payable at the standard rates of £52 for single parent and £78 for two parents. During the period 1 January 1988 to 10 April 1988 there was one death for which a death grant was claimed and a payment of £52 was made. The Training Commission grant was discontinued from 11 April 1988 when the equivalent grant in respect of employees was abolished by social security regulations.

The Training Agency continues to pay industrial injuries benefit to trainees on the same basis as that paid to employees. The total amount paid out in 1988 was £534,092. Details of the highest and lowest amounts paid could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report, the (a) date, (b) cause of fatality, (c) parliamentary constituency and (d) amount of compensation received for each death on youth opportunities programme and YTS since the schemes' inceptions, to the latest available date.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 January 1989]: The available information for fatalities on the youth opportunities programme and YTS is provided in the table. Information on the location is available only by Training Agency area. The Training Agency and its predecessors do not pay compensation, but under YTS managing agents and training managers are contractually obliged to obtain insurance to cover any claims to compensation or damages. Until 11 April 1988 the Training Agency paid an industrial death grant equivalent to the payments received from DHSS had the young people been employees.

ENERGY

Electricity Interconnector

13. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate available to him from the South of Scotland electricity board and the Central Electricity Generating Board of the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the carrying capacity of the interconnector between Scotland and England.

47. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what meetings or representations he has recently had on the potential transmission of spare electricity generating capacity from Scotland into England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the industry announced today that it will, in the near future, proceed with preparatory work which will involve a full environmental study and discussions with local authorities and other interested bodies with a view to upgrading the interconnector to 1·6 GW by 1994. The cost of upgrading the interconnector and the decision to proceed beyond preparatory work will be a matter for commercial negotiation.

Berkeley Power Station

17. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any representations from the Central Electricity Generating Board on the financial implications for privatisation of its most recent estimate of the cost of decommissioning Berkeley nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

British Gas

19. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the British Gas Corporation; and what matters he discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Gas plc in November, when a range of issues of mutual interest were discussed.

Energy Efficiency

20. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received from housing authorities and associations concerning the insulation of domestic properties as part of the energy efficiency programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Housing authorities and associations deal mainly with the Department of the Environment, with which my Department has regular contact.

Energy Efficiency Office

21. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has plans to restore the budget of his Energy Efficiency Office to the level allocated in 1985-86.

Mr. Parkinson: The budget of my Energy Efficiency Office for 1989-90 is £15 million.

European Fast Reactor

22. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had about the European fast reactor programme; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in the European collaborative programme on the development of fast reactor technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is now discussing with our partners in the European collaboration the details of an integrated programme of research on fast reactors. The implementing agreements, which provide the framework for this work, should be signed shortly.

North Sea Oil

23. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give (a) the estimates and (b) the actual amounts of recoverable oil resources obtained from the North sea for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to the forecasts and actual levels of oil production published annually in the Brown Book, my Department's report to Parliament on the development of United Kingdom oil and gas resources; following is a summary.

Million tonnes of oil produced in United Kingdom from 1984-1988 (includes condensate and gross natural gas liquid output)

Year of Brown Book forecast	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
1983	95-125	95-125	85-120	—	—
1984	110-130	110-130	100-125	85-115	80-115
1985	—	120-135	110-130	95-125	85-120
1986	—	—	120-135	110-130	100-125
1987	—	—	—	115-130	105-125
1988	—	—	—	—	105-125
Actual	126	127	127	123·	—

Note: Forecasts may vary from year to year, as new information on resources becomes available and as companies' plans develop. Actual production for 1988 is not yet available. Non-North Sea production accounts for about 0·5 mt of production a year.

41. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the costs of abandoning oil installations in the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 12 December 1988 at column 482.

Energy Demand

24. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his assessment of the impact of the introduction of the European Commission directive on energy information in buildings on the level of energy demand in the United Kingdom by the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No such assessment has been made. In its present form, the draft directive would require energy audits to be carried out on a mandatory basis; as I told my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 9 November 1988, I consider that, while the Government encourage consumers to take energy efficiency into account, it is entirely a matter for the seller and the buyer and one in which it would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene.

Electricity Privatisation

25. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the total cost to public funds of the consultancy fees for advice on the sale to the private sector of the electricity supply industry in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Estimate provision for 1988-89 for expenditure associated with the sale of shares in the electricity supply industry in England and Wales is for £6 million, mainly for advisers. Latest forecasts of requirement for 1989-90 will be published as part of the Supply Estimates in March.

37. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the United Kingdom's total national energy needs he estimates will be met by the private sector following privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Parkinson: If the market shares held by the various fuel producers stay unchanged, some 87 per cent. of final energy consumption will be met by the private sector after electricity privatisation, compared to 73 per cent. in 1987.

44. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the total cost of advertising the proposed sale to the private sector of the 17 parts of the electricity supply industry in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-91

Mr. Michael Spicer: The total costs of advertising, public relations and publicity will not be determined until much closer to the date at which the successor companies to the electricity supply industry are offered for sale.

Independent Electricity Producers

26. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of electrical capacity likely to be provided by new independent producers who have so far indicated proposals.

Mr. Parkinson: We know of nearly 20 proposed independent generation projects with a total capacity of some 7 GW.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

27. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress with the neighbourhood energy action community insulation programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the current financial year to end December an estimated 105,000 homes have been insulated by community insulation projects, bringing the total number of homes insulated under this programme to more than 580,000. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy informed the House on 13 January at column 772, uptake of places for unemployed people has been slow under employment training. My Department is therefore in discussion with the Training Agency on initiatives to increase the number of filled places.

Offshore Trade Unions

28. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the representatives of the offshore trade unions.

Mr. Parkinson: I will be meeting the EETPU on 27 February and the TUC on 28 February. On 5 April, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State will be chairing a meeting of the offshore industry liaison committee which includes representatives of the oil industry, suppliers, and trades unions.

Energy Conservation

29. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his responsibilities in relation to energy conservation.

Mr. Parkinson: Under the Ministry of Fuel and Power Act 1945, the Secretary of State for Energy is charged with promoting economy and efficiency in the supply, distribution, use and consumption of fuel and power. Under the Gas Act 1986, the Secretary of State has a duty to promote efficiency and economy on the part of persons authorised to supply gas through pipes and the efficient use of gas supplied through pipes.

18. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his target for energy conservation in the Government estate and the progress of interdepartmental co-ordination.

Mr. Parkinson: Plans are being drawn up for a fresh campaign to improve energy efficiency in the public sector.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the number of jobs that would be created in a programme of domestic energy conservation, namely draught proofing and the insulation of homes, to displace the equivalent energy supplied by one large power station.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There is no straightforward relationship between energy efficiency programmes and displaced electrical energy.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what expenditure is going into research into energy conservation and implementation of an energy conservation strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The 1988-89 estimate provision available to the Energy Efficiency Office of my Department is £20·8 million, of which £5·4 million is for research and development, including the monitoring and targeting programme, and £7·1 million for the demonstration programme.

Burgoyne Committee

30. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to implement the recommendations of the Burgoyne committee on safety in the offshore oil and gas industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 12 December 1988, at columns 477-78.

British Coal

31. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the level of employment in British Coal in 1990 and 1995.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) on 12 December 1988 at column 477.

Electricity Council

32. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Electricity Council, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of the Electricity Council regularly to discuss a variety of issues of mutual interest.

Wind Energy

33. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what target he has set for the percentage of electricity to be generated by wind energy by the year 2000 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No targets have been set for the year 2000. Renewable energy technologies are at an early stage of development and there is great uncertainty about future projections. Energy paper 55 estimated that by the year 2025 wind energy might provide up to the equivalent of 10 per cent. of current electricity requirements if the technology can be proven and applied commercially. It is Government policy to encourage the maximum exploitation of renewable energy sources wherever they have prospects of being economically viable and environmentally acceptable.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

35. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the contribution made to the west Cumbrian economy by British Nuclear Fuels plc at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels plc makes a major contribution to the economy of west Cumbria, and the capital investment programme for Sellafield will amount to some £4 billion by the end of the century. The company currently employs some 7,200 people at the site, while those employed there by contractors is expected to rise from the current level of some 6,000 to some 8,000 by 1991. In recent years, BNFL spent an average of £1 million a year on major schemes to help the local community. The company has recently committed itself to contribute £1 million a year over the next 10 years to a fund with local authorities and other local companies to promote new and expanding businesses in the area.

48. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the statistics for nuclear discharges into the Irish sea from the British Nuclear Fuels site at Sellafield for each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Discharges to the Irish sea from Sellafield between 1983 and 1987 (the latest year for which figures are currently available) were as follows:

	Alpha (terabecquerels)	Beta (terabecquerels)
1983	14	2,489
1984	14	1,190
1985	6	587
1986	4·4	118
1987	2·2	89

Nuclear Power

34. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has regarding the likely growth of nuclear power generation worldwide over the next 15 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Energy does not forecast total world nuclear power generation; but the IAEA has recently published a range of estimates to 2005. These are shown in the table:

	Total World Nuclear Generation (TWh)
1987	1,652
1995	2,362-2,461
2000	2,813-3,081
2005	3,205-3,695

Source: International Atomic Energy Agency. Energy, Electricity and Nuclear Power Estimates for the period up to 2005. July 1988 Edition.

36. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the proportion of energy needs which are currently met by nuclear power generation in (a) Britain, (b) France, (c) West Germany, (d) Belgium, (e) Spain, (f) Japan and (g) the United States of America for each of the last two years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The proportions of nuclear generation to total primary energy requirement for 1985 and 1986, the latest full two years for which figures are available, are shown in the table:

Proportion of Nuclear Electricity to total primary energy requirement

Country	1985	1986
United Kingdom	6·7	6·4
France	25·2	28·3
West Germany	10·5	9·9

Country	1985	1986
Belgium	17·9	19·8
Spain	8·3	11·1
Japan	10·5	11·0
United States of America	5·0	5·4

British Coal (Scotland)

38. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current levels of output and manning, both deep mined and opencast, related to British Coal's operations in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the British Coal Corporation that, in the nine months to December 1988, British Coal's deep-mined output in Scotland was 1,444,822 tonnes and opencast output was 2,709,067 tonnes. There were 2,918 men on colliery books at the end December 1988, and 1,053 contractors' industrials at opencast sites at end November 1988.

Leicester Combined Heat and Power Project

39. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations or meetings he has had recently concerning the Leicester combined heat and power project.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has had discussions with the general manager of Leicester Energy Ltd. and my Department is also in regular touch with the company. Officials keep Ministers informed of progress on the Leicester combined heat and power district heating scheme.

Restart

5. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the effects of the restart scheme on beneficiaries of the redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) at Question Time today.

40. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the pension rights and concessionary coal entitlements of former miners who have been directed to fill out restart job forms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Barrage Schemes

42. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made estimates of the future contribution to United Kingdom energy needs from barrage schemes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Feasibility studies of major barrages are currently under way. If they could be constructed, the Severn barrage would provide the equivalent of around 6 per cent. of today's electricity requirement and the Mersey around 0·5 per cent. Energy paper 55 provided a maximum estimate equivalent to 10 per cent. of current electricity requirement by the year 2025.

Electricity Generation

43. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the maximum proportion of United Kingdom energy needs that could be derived from (a) wind power, (b) wave power, (c) solar power and (d) geothermal power over the next 50 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Estimates of the contribution that could be made by each renewable energy source in the year 2025 have been published in energy paper 55, copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses. It is Government policy to encourage the maximum exploitation of renewable energy sources wherever they have prospects of being economically viable and environmentally acceptable.

Electricity Supply Industry

45. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the employment level in the electricity supply industry in England and Wales, in 1990 and 1995.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The planned staffing level in the electricity supply industry in England and Wales for March 1990 is 129,580. Any estimate for 1995 will be a matter for the industry.

Drax Power Station

46. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what reductions in sulphur emissions are expected from the proposed sulphur removal plant at Drax power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The flue gas desulphurisation plant which will be installed at Drax power station is designed to remove at least 90 per cent. of the sulphur dioxide in the flue gases. When fully completed, it is expected to eliminate about 10 per cent. of the board's current sulphur dioxide emissions.

Electricity (Rural Areas)

49. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to encourage area boards to improve the supply of electricity to rural areas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consumers in rural areas in particular will benefit from our proposals. For the first time, all owners or occupiers of premises will have a right to require a supply of electricity from the area boards' successors, the public electricity suppliers. This right applies irrespective of the distance from the premises to the main. The suppliers will be under a statutory duty to comply on reasonable terms with all such requests, if it is technically practical to do so.

NATO Wartime Oil Organisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom representatives designated to form part of the staff of the NATO wartime oil organisation in transition to war and in war.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is classified.

Fusion Research

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advantages will be gained for United Kingdom fusion research by the planned reduction in programme funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Fusion, like any other new technology, will need to win its place in competition with the other sources of energy expected to be available over the next century. On present prospects, we have decided that there is no justification for continuing as broad a programme of fusion research as we have had in the past. However, we are continuing to fund the most promising line of research in our own programme and have also agreed with our Community partners that we shall maintain the present level of support to JET, whose total expenditure is around £75 million a year, through to its scheduled completion in 1992.

CEGB (Research)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has reviewed the continuation of Central Electricity Generating Board research as a requirement of the privatisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Advisory Council on Research and Development will be considering the CEGB's plans for research in the run up to privatisation and conveying its views to me.

After privatisation, the nature and level of the successor companies' research programmes will be matters for them to decide.

Power Stations (Employment)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the total number of jobs created by (a) the design and construction and (b) the operation of (i) nuclear power station, (ii) fossil fuel power station and (iii) tidal power barrage, and indicate for each set of data the proportion of spin-off jobs thus created.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will write to the hon. Member with the information he has requested as soon as possible.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 31 January 1989

HOME DEPARTMENT

Assets (Seizure)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what stage has been reached with regard to a bilateral treaty with the United States of America for receiving the moneys payable where United Kingdom police have assisted United States' police in serious crimes and assets have been seized by the courts; and what is the timetable for the conclusion of the treaty.

Mr. John Patten: We are still seeking clarification of the exact requirements of United States law and how they might be met. It is not yet certain whether either the agreement on drug trafficking which we concluded with the United States last year or any future agreement of wider scope would in itself provide a sufficient legal basis for the transfer of money.

Prisons

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what areas in the county of Avon are currently under consideration by Her Majesty's prison board for the construction of new prison provision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department has been looking at a number of possible sites in Avon as part of a general site search exercise covering the whole of England and Wales. Preliminary inquiries into these sites are continuing and it would be wrong at this stage to make specific reference to particular locations in advance of the outcome of those inquiries.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff the Broadcasting Standards Council will have; and what its total annual budget will be.

Mr. Tim Renton: The Broadcasting Standards Council will employ fewer than 20 staff and the annual budget is likely to be just over £1 million.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after school care, is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; and what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At present, the Home Office provides no facilities for the pre-school age children of its staff, but it is examining the feasibility of setting up a nursery in Croydon. A play-scheme for older children already operates there during the school holidays. Children of Home Office staff are also eligible to attend holiday play-schemes in Bootle and Westminster, and the Department has agreed to contribute to the initial funding of these schemes. Further proposals for child care, and their funding, are likely to be considered over the next five years.

Black Detainees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year for the last 10 years and by place of detention the number of black detainees held in custody at police stations in the Metropolitan police area who have died whilst in custody; what the figures are for areas outside the metropolis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available. Information on the total number of deaths in police custody, including the force area, place where death occurred and the cause of death, is published annually in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary.

Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what are (a) the average earnings of prisoners and (b) the range of prisoners' earnings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average weekly pay of inmates in prison service establishments in England and Wales is estimated to be about £2·38. It ranges between £1·55 for those for whom no work is available and £5·36 for those on maximum pay under various incentive schemes.

Israeli Ambassador (Letter Bomb)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet able to make a statement about the origins of the letter bomb recently sent to the Israeli ambassador.

Mr. Hurd: A postal bomb addressed to the Israeli ambassador was successfully defused by a Metropolitan police explosives officer at the embassy on 16 January. The package was posted in north London on 13 January, but it is not known who was responsible for sending the device. Police inquiries are continuing.

Prison Medical Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made with respect to the recommendations of the Social Services Select Committee report on prison medical services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government welcomed the Select Committee's report and accepted in whole or in part the majority of the 58 recommendations it contained.

The accepted recommendations cover a wide range of subjects. Where it has been possible to deal with them quickly that has been done. Some by their very nature are susceptible of implementation only in the long-term. Advance on others is determined by the results of negotiations with the central Departments or in discussion with, or after deliberation by, appropriate professional bodies. In this last category I include the important subject of the training of prison medical officers, which will be reviewed in the light of a report being prepared by a working group under the chairmanship of the president of the Royal College of Physicians. Subject to those provisos, progress is being maintained.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is issued to the Metropolitan police as to the circumstances in which it is appropriate (a) to tow away illegally parked vehicles, (b) to clamp illegally parked vehicles and (c) to issue a fixed penalty notice for an illegally parked vehicle.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that all police officers and traffic wardens are trained in the enforcement of parking restrictions. Those police officers deployed on wheel-clamping and vehicle removal duties receive further training specifically related to those tasks, and operate under written instructions from senior officers.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the information which I gave to the hon. Member in my reply of 16 January 1989 at columns 5-6.

Guardian Angels

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any entrants to the United Kingdom belonging to the group known as the Guardian Angels, currently visiting the United Kingdom, visited the United Kingdom previously; whether any of these persons overstayed previously; and who is sponsoring these persons during their visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: At least one member of the group has been here before. I am not aware that any have overstayed. I understand that the costs of the visit are being met in part by the group themselves, and in part by friends here.

Football

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exclusion orders were issued in England and Wales during the 1987-88 football season; and how many of these arose from incidents connected with Football League matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The exclusion order provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 came into force on 1 August 1987. For the 12 months ending 31 July 1988, a total of 925 orders had been recorded by the Football Association. The information readily available does not distinguish which of these were related to incidents connected specifically with Football League matches.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by (a) type of offence, (b) gender and (c) over or under 21 years of age, those charged with football-related offences in the course of the 1987-88 season.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on charges brought for football related offences is not available.

Breath Tests

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) on 18 January, Official Report, columns 202-3, he will express the number of breath tests given and the number positive as a percentage of (a) resident population of the police area, (b) per mile of road in the police area and (c) per registered motor vehicle in the police area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Civil Defence

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by local authorities in fulfilling their civil defence obligations during the first two years of the planned programme for implementation of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) 1983.

Mr. Hurd: Copies of a report on implementation of the 1983 regulations by 1 October 1988 have been placed in the Library. The report discusses local authorities' progress in meeting their civil defence obligations since the last such report, which covered progress up to March 1986.

On 22 July 1986 my hon. Friend the then Minister of State announced the Government's proposals for a planned programme for implementation (PPI) of the 1983 regulations. The PPI is a rolling three-year programme, setting priorities and a timetable for systematic monitoring by the Home Office. Provision exists for the payment of grants towards expenses incurred by local authorities in connection with the discharge of their civil defence functions. The PPI provides a framework enabling the Government to establish whether those functions are being efficiently performed so that grant can properly be paid. Detailed discussions with individual county councils and fire and civil defence authorities focus on schemes of work in the context of their estimates of grant-aided expenditure, and enable the progress each authority has made to be fully assessed.

Since the introduction of the PPI with effect from 1 October 1986, the number of grant-aided emergency planning staff in local authorities has risen by about 30 per cent. About half of these staff resources have been committed to the preparation of the plans required under schedule 2 to the 1983 regulations. In March 1986 many of those plans were found to be incomplete and in a number of cases they amounted to little more than statements of intent. Under the PPI all county-level authorities are required to submit copies of plans for monitoring in accordance with the timetable. All have responded to this requirement and analysis of the material indicates a significant overall improvement in the quality of operational plans. Nevertheless, the position still varies from authority to authority and even the best plans require further work. There is also a continuing need to test, review and revise plans once they have been made, and this need will be directly addressed in the next stage.

Local authorities are required to make arrangements for the training and exercising of volunteers and their own staff. There have been encouraging increases in the volume of such training. The number of volunteers stood at around 25,000 last year; this year they are expected to total about 27,000. Time spent by volunteers on training and exercises this year is expected to exceed the time spent last year by about 15 per cent., while the figure for staff training this year is expected to exceed last year's by about 70 per cent.

Progress has been less satisfactory in meeting the requirement to establish emergency centres in which to control and co-ordinate civil defence actions. A total of 513 such centres should be provided in England and Wales, but only 195 were reported to be operational by 1 October 1988. In a further 139, work was reported in progress or identified as needed, while in the remaining 179 no suitable site had been identified. Local authorities which are not fulfilling their statutory obligations in this respect will be asked for specific proposals to remedy the position.

In 1985-86 the total grant-aided civil defence expenditure by local authorities stood at £15·25 million. The provisional figure for 1987-88 is £21·25 million and in 1988-89 it is expected to rise to about £23 million. This expansion has been well above levels of inflation and reflects the Government's commitment to civil defence planning. It is our intention that current levels of expenditure will be maintained for the next few years.

The Government believe that the PPI has brought about significant improvements in local authorities' states of civil defence preparedness. Results have been achieved and the concept has been widely supported in the local authority community. But a great deal remains to be done to consolidate and extend the advances which have been made, by continuing the programme well into the 1990s. A circular is today being issued to local authorities, setting out the Government's intentions for the PPI for a further two years which will cover the period from October 1989 to October 1991. A similar circular is being issued by the Scottish Home and Health Department. Each county council and fire and civil defence authority will be asked to set specific targets for that period, with the highest priority being given to continuing the planning process and to training key staff. The Government will continue to monitor local authority activity and the value for money in the grant paid by calling for annual progress reports and costed programmes of work which will be the subject of individual discussion.

Firearms

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the prohibition under section 1 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 came into effect; and if he will give details of the Government buy-in scheme.

Mr. Hurd: As I stated in my reply of 20 December at column 184, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on this matter, the new categories of prohibited weapons, including self-loading and pump action rifles, come into effect on 1 February. The buy-in scheme will run for a period of three months until 30 April. Leaflets providing full details of the scheme and incorporating a claim form are available from police stations and rifle and pistol clubs.

Owners of newly prohibited weapons are eligible to make a claim under the scheme if they legitimately acquired or entered into a contract to purchase their weapons before 23 September 1987 or have already sold their weapon since that date for less than the amount available under the scheme.

Owners of weapons affected by the prohibition who are ineligible to apply or who do not wish to take advantage of the buy-in scheme must arrange to dispose of their weapons by not later than 30 April. They must do so either by sale to a registered firearms dealer or by transferring the weapon to such a dealer for deactivation; or by surrender to the police.

The penalty for possession of a prohibited weapon without the appropriate authority is up to five years' imprisonment or a fine of up to £2,000 or both.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of females currently serving a prison sentence in England and Wales; what is the proportion and number of such females who have committed an offence involving robbery or violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: [holding answer 24 January 1989]: Information for 30 June 1988 is given in the table.

Population of sentenced females[1] in Prison Service establisments in England and Wales: by offence group 30 June 1988

Offence group	Number[2]
Violence against the person	240
Sexual offences	15
Robbery	75
Other offences	850
Not recorded	80
All offences	1,260

WALES

Benzodiazepines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people in Wales addicted to benzodiazepines.

Mr. Grist: There are no official figures on the level of benzodiazepine dependence in Wales. However, an estimate given in a report published in 1986 suggested that perhaps half a million people in the United Kingdom as a whole were dependent on benzodiazepines.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions for benzodiazepines and what total quantity of benzodiazepines were dispensed by (a) community and (b) hospital pharmacists in each year from 1979 to 1987 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in 1979 was approximately 1,999,100 and in 1987 was 1,894,300. Information for the years 1980 to 1986 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost and information on the total quantity of benzodiazepines and the number of prescriptions dispensed by hospital pharmacists is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds are currently available to assist people in Wales to withdraw from benzodiazepines; and whether these funds will be increased in the future.

Mr. Grist: Information on services specifically targeted on benzodiazepine dependency and provided by local statutory bodies or voluntary agencies is not available centrally.

In recent years, the Department has made available additional funds for the development of services—on a local and multi-authority basis—to combat drug misuse generally. Since April 1985, over £2·8 million has been provided in response to bids submitted by drug advisory committees and the voluntary sector. While such bids do not normally apply to specific substances, many of the proposals provide a service for people who need assistance over benzodiazepine dependence. We are currently considering bids for additional support in 1989-90.

Mr. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many working days are being currently lost in Wales each year as a result of people withdrawing from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of people currently withdrawing from benzodiazepines in National Health Service hospitals in Wales and in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special units, with how many places, have been set up in psychiatric hospitals in Wales to assist people to withdraw from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Grist: None as such, but there are two units in Wales (one in the north and one in the south) which specialise in services for those having problems associated with substance misuse or dependency. More generally, however, assistance and support is available through a range of services including GPs, primary care services, general psychiatric services and many voluntary groups and organisations.

Aerial Monitoring

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will explain the operation of CADW's programme of aerial monitoring.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: An aerial monitoring programme was established for Wales in 1985-86 following the success of a pilot study initiated in 1983-84. The programme concentrates primarily on earthworks and field monuments with the aims of monitoring the condition of these scheduled monuments and recording the extent of the remains at each site. It is administered by CADW who provide grant-aid to the four Welsh archaeological trusts to undertake the work. It is expected that the whole of Wales will have been covered by the end of 1989 and consideration is being given as to how the programme should proceed after this date. Copies of all photographs are held in CADW and in the national monuments record held by the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales.

National Monument Record (Staffing and Funding)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a statement on the staffing and funding of the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monument's national monument record; how many posts are unfilled through lack of finance; and what steps he intends to take to remedy this.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales is responsible for the administration, staffing and funding of the national monuments record from within its allocated resources. I understand that at present 5½ staff are engaged on this work and that there are no posts on complement unfilled.

Expenditure

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an analysis of expenditure shown in table 17.1 of the Government's expenditure plans 1989-90 to 1991-92, chapter 17—Wales, Cm 617, on a similar basis to the tables published in his reply of 25 January 1988, Official Report, columns 107-20.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is set out in the tables. In all the tables the totals have been derived from unrounded figures and the components may not therefore always add to the totals shown.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of gross and net public sector capital spending by his Department by both central government and local authorities for 1988-89 and for each of the next three years, at current prices and at constant 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 25 January 1989]: Information about public sector capital spending by the Department from 1983-84 to 1991-92 was given in table 21.1.11 of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper "Supplementary Analyses and Index", Cm. 621.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when copies of leaflets, which call for an end to immigration to the United Kingdom and are headed, "Civil War in Bradford," were passed to the Crown Prosecution Service; what organisation and address is shown on the leaflets distributed in Bradford recently; and when he expects the Crown Prosecution Service to reach any decision about prosecuting those responsible for the production and distribution of such leaflets.

The Attorney-General: A copy of a leaflet headed "Civil War in Bradford" was passed to the Crown Prosecution Service in West Yorkshire on 25 January 1989. The leaflet contains the address of the Monday Club, 4 Orlando Road, London SW4. On 27 January 1989, the Crown Prosecution Service concluded that the production and distribution of the leaflet did not contravene the criminal law.

Criminal Justice Act 1988

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Attorney-General how he envisages exercising the power to refer unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal under section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, after it comes into force on 1 February.

The Attorney-General: I shall exercise this important power conscientiously and with discrimination. I do not envisage that the cases will be numerous in which it will be appropriate to use it. It applies to sentencing for offences triable only on indictment. These are the more harmful offences, tending to give rise to the greatest public concern. Reference is available only for a sentence that is characterised by undue leniency, not for one that is no more than arguably on the lenient side.

A strict time limit is imposed for a reference. Application to the court must be made by me within 28 days of the sentence being passed, and it is accordingly important that steps are taken to put the necessary machinery in action as soon as possible. I therefore hope that those who wish to make representations will do so, in the first instance, to the authority responsible for conducting the relevant prosecution. In the majority of cases the prosecution will have been conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service and in those cases representations should accordingly be made to the Director of Public Prosecution.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South African (Prisons)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the detention and torture of children in South African prisons.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made frequent representations to the South African Government, both bilaterally and with our European partners, to express our concern about human rights abuses including reports of maltreatment of both children and adults. We have made clear our view that the South African Government should release all those detained without charge.

Minority Languages

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there is any provision for a new commissioner of the European Community to take the oath in Welsh or in Gaelic.

Mrs. Chalker: The treaty does not specify the language to be used when giving the solemn undertaking. Commissioner MacSharry gave it in Irish.

Palestinian Refugees

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the response by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to recommendation 1090 [1988] on the situation of the Palestine refugees.

Mrs. Chalker: The Committee of Ministers decided to bring recommendation 1090 (1988) to the attention of the Governments of member states.

Eastern Europe (Religion)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the response by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to recommendation 1086 [1988] on the situation of the Church and freedom of religion in Eastern Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: The Committee of Ministers decided to bring recommendation 1086 (1988) to the attention of the Governments of member states and intend to submit it for discussion by national experts on the CSCE.

Incomes

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the most recent annual average income per head for (a) the seven Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, (b) the Warsaw Pact countries including Russia and (c) China.

Mrs. Chalker: GDP per head (in United States dollars) in the major seven OECD countries in 1987 was as follows:

	At current prices and current exchange rates	At current prices and purchasing power parity
USA	18,338	18,338
Japan	19,465	13,182
West Germany	18,280	13,323
France	15,818	12,803
United Kingdom	11,765	12,340
Italy	13,224	12,254
Canada	16,019	17,211

Source: OECD, Department of Economics and Statistics: National Accounts 1960-1987.

Because the currencies of the Warsaw pact countries are not fully convertible, conversion of local currency output estimates to dollars is not straightforward. Different procedures can produce very different results. The first column of figures below shows estimates of GNP per head calculated by the IBRD for the three members of the Warsaw pact who are also members of the IMF/IBRD. The second column shows estimates for all members of the Warsaw pact published by a United States Government agency:

	GNP per head at current prices and 3-year moving average exchange rates[1] 1987 $	GNP per head at current prices[2] 1987 $
Hungary	2,240	8,264
Poland	1,920	6,883
Romania	1,500-3,000	6,376
Bulgaria	n/a	7,200
Czechoslovakia	n/a	9,705
GDR	n/a	11,873
USSR	n/a	8,363

The People's Republic of China's GNP per head (at current prices and three-year moving average exchange rates) is estimated by the IBRD at $300 in 1987. Figures for Warsaw pact countries and for China should be treated with caution.

Weapons Technology

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to use Britain's presidency of the Western European Union to further discussions on the harmonisation of weapons technology research for the 21st century.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO and, for its European members, the independent European programme group, are the operational fora in which allies examine how they can harmonise research in this area. The Western European Union gave political support in this work in the platform on European security interests adopted in The Hague on 27 October 1987.

Namibia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs say what contribution in terms of cost and personnel Her Majesty's Government proposes to make to the United Nations force to supervise the elections and independence of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 21 December 1988 at column 274.

Baby Seal Skins

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any discussion with members of the European Commission regarding the apparent breaking of European Community directive 85/444/EC, amending 84/129/EC, through the import into the European Community of baby seal skins referred to by Mr. Clinton Davies on 14 April 1988.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Unita

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policies of President Bush's letter to Mr. Savimbi indicating that his Government would continue appropriate and effective assistance to Unita.

Mrs. Chalker: It remains our policy not to provide assistance to Unita although we maintain contact form time to time at official level.

European Community (Spanish Presidency)

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the objectives which the Spanish have identified for achievment during their presidency of the European Communities.

Mrs. Chalker: Spanish objectives for achievement during their presidency were identified in the programme speech given by the Spanish Foreign Minister to the European Parliament on 17 January. They included further progress to complete the single market, social area, monetary co-operation, research and development, the environment, and the Community's external relations.

European Community (Council of Ministers)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 13 February. The Commission is expected to present proposals for harmonising the taxation of savings. The Council may also consider a further extension of the new community instrument (NIC V), and may need to consider two own resources implementing regulations.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 13 and 14 February to discuss 1989 CAP price-fixing proposals, aid for the production of grain legumes and extensification. It may also consider beef balance sheets, controls in the wine sector, and veterinary and phytosanitary harmonisation measures.

The Foreign Affairs Council, meeting on 20 and 21 February, will review progress on resolving the dispute between the EC and the United States over hormone-treated beef, discuss the EC's position for the San Jose V meeting with central American states in San Pedro de Sula, Honduras 27 and 28 February; and adopt a position for the EC/Tunisia co-operation council, to be held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Counil. It may also discuss: the outcome of the EC/ACP ministerial meeting in Brazzaville on 16 and 17 February, where negotiations on a successor to the present Lomé convention will continue; preparations for the EC/EFTA informal ministerial meeting to be held alongside the Foreign Affairs Council in March; draft mandates for negotiations on trade and co-operation agreements with Poland and Bulgaria and EC/Israel purchase tax discrimination.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 23 February to discuss autonomous tariff quotas and possibly the EC/USSR fish agreement.

The Internal Market Council on 27 February will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

THE ARTS

Benjamin Banks

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will visit Salisbury in April to visit the exhibition in the museum celebrating the life and work of the eighteenth century violinist Benjamin Banks.

Mr. Luce: I will be in touch with my hon. Friend to see whether it will be possible for me to visit Salisbury in April.

Opera North

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next plans to undertake a visit to Opera North.

Mr. Luce: I was sorry not to have been able to visit Opera North as part of its 10th anniversary celebrations in 1988, but I hope to attend a performance in the future.

Public Library Services

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give the number of responses so far received by his Department to the Green Paper on financing our public library services; and if he will give the number of those responses in favour of the proposals and the number of those opposed.

Mr. Luce: I shall shortly be making a statement on the consultation exercise. I shall then be in a position to give a more detailed answer to this question.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Appointments

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total cost of any European Economic Community appointments either in the United Kingdom or the rest of the European Economic Community paid for by the Treasury.

Mr. Brooke: Under the detached national experts scheme, Government employees from member states may be temporarily seconded to the European Commission. In such cases the member states continue to pay the basic salaries of the officials concerned.

Comprehensive information about the total cost of United Kingdom-paid salaries under this scheme is not available.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government have any plans to introduce income tax relief on premiums for private medical insurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: In the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm 555) the Government today announced a new income tax relief on premiums for private medical insurance for those aged 60 and over. The relief will be given at the basic rate by deduction at source (in a similar way to the MIRAS arrangement for mortgagees). It will be available either where an individual aged 60 or over pays his or her own premiums on an eligible policy, or where someone else, such as a relative, pays on their behalf. Where higher rate relief is due, the additional amount will be given by the tax office, for example by adjustment to the PAYE code or in an assessment.

Legislation to introduce the relief will be contained in the next Finance Bill, and will take effect from 6 April 1990. I have authorised the Inland Revenue to consult the medical insurance industry urgently about the details of the relief.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to collect information on persons whose entitlement to unemployment benefit is disallowed because they are not available for work.

Mr. Lee: Figures are compiled quarterly of the number of persons whose entitlement to unemployment benefit is disallowed because they are considered not to be available for work. They are included in the analysis of all decisions made by adjudication officers published each half-year by the Department of Social Security.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent advertising employment training; and how much this is per filled place.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of approximately £7 million has been spent on advertising employment training in the period July to December 1988. A total of £4·2 million of this was spent in July and August to raise employers' awareness of the importance of training, in readiness for the launch of the programme in September. Following the launch, a further £2·8 million was spent on advertising to potential trainees. So far, there have been 141,000 people training on the programme.

Construction Workers

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many construction workers are unemployed.

Mr. Lee: Information from the labour force survey indicates that in spring 1987 there were an estimated 107,000 people in Great Britain aged 16 or over who were currently unemployed and whose last employment (within the previous three years) was as a construction worker. An occupational analysis of the Department's monthly claimant unemployment count is not available.

Disabled People

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered disabled people were in employment on 1 January; and how many were in employment five years ago.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information is not available.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employers does not operate the 3 per cent. quota for employing disabled people; and how this differs from the percentage five years ago.

Mr. Lee: In 1988 a total of 76 per cent. of employers within scope of the quota scheme employed less than 3 per cent. of people registered as disabled compared with 69 per cent. in 1983. The quota scheme is being considered as part of my Department's internal review of services to the disabled.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in the last five years in achieving the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Lee: A total of 93,500 people with disabilities, including some with severe disabilities, were placed in employment through jobcentres in 1987-88 compared with 63,200 in 1983-84. Over the same period, the number of people with severe disabilities supported in the sheltered employment programme rose from 14,936 to 18,413.

Support for employment and training programmes specifically for people with disabilities has generally been maintained between 1983-84 and 1987-88. At the same time, increasing attention has been given to improving access to the Department's general employment and training programmes. It is estimated that in 1987-88 some 51,000 people with disabilities were accepted on to these programmes.

The Department has also given close attention to promoting the adoption by employers of positive policies towards the employment of people with disabilities—in particular through the establishment of the disablement advisory service and the publication and distribution of the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing employment in manufacturing industry by county using the data from the last three censuses of employment; and if he will also state the intercensal change for each county in an index form with the earliest of the three censuses of employment as the base.

Mr. Lee: The available information from censuses of employment taken in June 1978, September 1981 and September 1984 is given in the table. Because of changes in the standard industrial classification, and in the compilation of the county data, the June 1978 figures are not strictly comparable with the figures for later years. Indices using June 1978 as base cannot therefore be meaningfully calculated.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the unadjusted figures for December 1985 and June 1988, for each region and nationally, giving data for men and women separately and in total, of (a) the number of unemployed for each date and the percentage change between the dates, and (b) the number of employed for each date and the percentage difference between the dates in total and broken down by employees in employment, self-employment, Her Majesty's Forces and work-related government training programmes.

Mr. Lee: Table A shows the number of unemployed claimants for each region and the United Kingdom at December 1985 and June 1988, together with the percentage changes over the period. These unadjusted figures are affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and also by seasonal influences.

Table B shows the available information for the civilian workforce in employment. Figures for Her Majesty's forces are not available below national level. Comparisons of data for December 1985 and June 1988 are affected by seasonal variations.

[1] Self-employed figures for June 1988 are projections.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will indicate for each year since 1979 and for each country and region of the United Kingdom (a) the number of female employees in employment, (b) the number of females in full-time employment, (c) the number of females in part-time employment; and if he will express (c) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1989, c. 742]: I regret that my reply of 26 January 1989 contained an error in referring to the data for Northern Ireland. Estimates of full and part-time employment for Northern Ireland are made, but only at census of employment dates and the data for female employees in employment are set out in the table:

	September 1981	September 1984
All	224	229
Of which full-time	147	147
Part-time	78	81
Part-time employees as percentage of all employees	34·8	35·6

Employment Training (Child Care Allowance)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now make the child care allowance, previously confined to single parents on employment training, available to all trainees with children.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 30 January 1989]: My right hon. Friend is considering the implications of the recent industrial tribunal decision about the arrangements for making child care payments in employment training.

Women With Children

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help is available to women with children, who wish to undertake a course of training, who are not registered as unemployed and who cannot afford a child minder; what training courses are available; and what support is available to enable such women to undertake training.

Mr. Nicholls: [holding answer 20 January 1989]: Women aged 18 to 59 in the circumstances described are eligible for the full range of training opportunities under employment training if they are:

(a) returning to the labour market after an absence of two years or more for domestic reasons;

(b) the partner of someone who is claiming benefit for them as a dependant and satisfies the eligibility rules for Employment Training;

(c) seeking training in enterprise, or for skill shortage occupations or require help with English as a Second Language or have a disability; or

(d) a lone parent on an Income Support Order Book for at least 6 months and whose youngest child is of school age.

All trainees on employment training receive a weekly allowance equivalent to any state benefit entitlement before starting the programme plus at least £10 and help with travel costs over £5 per week. All lone parents on the programme are entitled to child care assistance of up to £50 per week per child. Women trainees may also be able to attend part-time where they have continuing domestic commitments which prevent full-time participation.

The full range of YTS opportunities is also available to women in a similar position and who are under the age of 18 and who satisfy the normal eligibility rules. YTS trainees are entitled to an alowance of £29·50 per week rising to £35 per week in the second year.

SCOTLAND

European Reprocessing Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make an announcement on the planning application for the European demonstration reprocessing plant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering the report of the public local inquiry into the proposed development and he is not yet in a position to predict a date for the announcement of his decision.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites and hectarages of sites for which compensation payments are made under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to prevent damage to areas of special conservation interest and the sums of compensation paid in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Compensation payments under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 are made by the NCC, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Environment. Details of individual sites and payments are confidential, but data on the numbers and costs of such payments are published in the council's annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what methods are used by him to gauge public opinion on the competence of the board and general manager of Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have recently commissioned a market research study of the National Health Service in Scotland. The sample size will enable some analysis of opinion at board level to be undertaken.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the non-hospital properties currently owned by the Greater Glasgow health board; and what is the board's assessment of their total value.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board currently administers over 400 non-hospital properties of which it estimates the total value to be about £14·5 million.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many empty dwelling houses are owned by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board is responsible for 71 such properties, of which 47 are in process of being sold.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consultants are employed by Greater Glasgow health board; if he will give a breakdown by hospital and specialty; and if he will show how many of the consultants by specialty are employed on a full-time or part-time basis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information is shown in the table below.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria have been employed by Greater Glasgow health board in the conduct of the review of accident and emergency services in the city of Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board is applying a wide range of criteria including the location of services, the different procedures followed at these locations, the staffing levels, and the usage. The review which is still in progress is intended to ensure that these services are delivered effectively.

Southern general hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many non-medical staff are employed at the Southern general hospital; and if he will give a breakdown by department or category; and if he will give comparable figures for the past three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The non-medical staff whose main work location is the Southern general hospital are shown in the table.

Only learner nurses' time spent in giving service contribution to the hospital is included.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have been treated at the Southern general accident and emergency unit in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table.

Health Boards (Property Disposals)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether health boards have discretion to take into account factors other than the highest offer when deciding on disposal of heritable property.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Where surplus Health Service land is offered for sale, the sellers are not bound to accept the highest, or any, offer. All offers received are considered in their entirety, taking into account not only their monetary value but any conditions and any other relevant information. The decision on which offer is the best is made in the light of expert professional advice from the district valuer and the selling agent.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average gross domestic product per head in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The provisional estimate of Scottish gross domestic product at factor cost for 1987 is £5,725 per head of population.

Average Wages

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average weekly wage for (a) full-time and (b) part-time (i) male and (ii) female workers in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is given in the table. It has been derived from the new earnings survey, which is conducted by the Department of Employment in April each year, and covers a 1 per cent. sample of employees who are members of PAYE schemes.

Industry Act

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for the amount of special assistance granted under the Industry Act in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The figures are contained in the annual report of the "Industrial Development Act 1982". The most recent report for the year ended 31 March 1988 was presented to the House on 28 July 1988.

Gross Domestic Fixed Capital

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the present levels of gross domestic fixed capital formation in Scotland ; and what is the percentage change over (a) the last year and (b) 1978-79, in cash and real terms;

(2) what is the gross domestic fixed capital formation in Scotland as a percentage of gross domestic product (E) for each year since 1959.

Mr. Rifkind: Estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation (GDFCF) for Scotland, prepared by the Central Statistical Office, are available only for agriculture, forestry and fishing, energy and water supply, manufacturing, transport and communications (excluding shipping and air transport), together with dwellings. In 1986 these sectors accounted for 57 per cent. of United Kingdom GDFCF (excluding the continental shelf region).

Changes between 1978 and 1986 and between 1985 and 1986, are set out in Table 1A. Owing to methodological and classification changes, there is slight discontinuity in the series in 1980.

Table 1B gives GDFCF in Scotland for those industries for which it is available as a percentage of Scottish gross domestic product (GDP) at factor cost for a broadly equivalent group of industries. In addition, alternative estimates including investment in dwellings are given as a percentage of total GDP. The GDP estimates are based on income GDP(I) at factor cost; there are no expenditure-based estimates (GDP(E)) for Scotland.

National Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total Health Service expenditure per head of population in Scotland for each of the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Total gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland per head of population in 1986-87 was £418 and in 1987-88 £457. The corresponding figure for 1988-89 is expected to be £504.

As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 13 December we plan to spend some £2,683 million on the National Health Service in Scotland next year. This will result in an increase in real terms of about 32 per cent. over the level of expenditure in 1979-80. These figures clearly demonstrate the Government's commitment to the continued development and improvement of health services in Scotland.

National Health Service Beds

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of staffed National Health Service beds in Scotland per 1,000 people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: 10·7.

Colleges of Education (Staff)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teaching staff vacancies in Scottish colleges of education have been filled by permanent appointment in the academic session 1987-88 and in session 1988-89 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of teaching staff vacancies in the colleges filled by temporary secondments is as follows:

	(a) from primary schools	(b) from secondary schools
Academic session 1987-88	12	14
Academic session 1988-89 (to date)	13	15

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teaching staff vacancies in Scottish colleges of education have been filled by temporary secondments from (a) primary, and (b) secondary schools in the academic session 1987-88 and in session 1988-89 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Among teaching staff for teacher training courses, nine vacancies in session 1987-88 and so far 13 vacancies in session 1988-89 have been filled by permanent appointment.

Home Condition Survey

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to order a house condition survey in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have, as yet, nothing further to add to the answers which I gave to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 2 November 1987, column 431, and again on 13 May 1988 at column 279 and the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 8 March 1988 at column 85.

Housing Repairs

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest information regarding housing in need of major structural repairs in (a) Scotland, (b) Greater Glasgow, (c) Edinburgh, (d) Dundee and (e) Aberdeen.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Skye (Road Bridge)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 25 January to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, he will indicate (a) the likely time-scale involved in considering the range of options and the financial implications currently before him in respect of the possibility of building a bridge to Skye and (b) whether he proposes any public consultation over the use and level of tolls associated with such a project; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible at this stage to indicate any precise time scale for the consideration of options or what procedures will be involved.

Prisoners

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pensioners there are in Scotland; and what proportion this is of the total population.

Mr. Rifkind: The registrar general's population estimates for 30 June 1987 give the total number of women over 60 and men over 65 as 893,629 which is 17·5 per cent. of the population of Scotland on that date.

Pensioners (New Towns)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pensioners, expressed as a percentage of the total population, are resident in each of the new towns; and what is the projected figure for each of the next five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 January 1989]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

The registrar general prepares population estimates and projections by age for local government districts but only estimates of total population for new towns. The most recent census information relates to 1981. There are likely to have been significant changes in the new towns since then.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Gynaecology Patients)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce the hospital treatment waiting lists for gynaecology patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The gynaecology in-patient waiting list is estimated to have falled by 10 per cent. in the year to March 1988. Of the £3 million which I have allocated to health boards to reduce waiting lists in 1988-89, a total of £218,000 has been allocated to projects to reduce gynaecology waiting lists. Boards have set targets to see or treat 3,510 extra out-patients, 614 extra in-patients and 690 extra day cases in this specialty. The £7 million which has been allocated for action to reduce waiting lists in 1989-90 will further improve the situation substantially.

Radioactivity Monitoring

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now consider funding and authorising the Clyde River Purification Board to undertake direct radioactivity monitoring in the river areas for which they have responsibility.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 January 1989]: We have no plans for this. But if the hon. Member has a particular objective in mind which such monitoring might achieve he may like to let me know.

TRANSPORT

Parking Facilities (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having with the Metropolitan police and borough councils to improve parking facilities in Greater London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have advised London boroughs to develop coherent policies on parking, waiting and loading as part of their approach to traffic management.

In his statement on transport in London issued last week to all London borough councils and to the Metropolitan police, my right hon. Friend noted his support for more effective parking controls; the need for users of off-street public car parks to pay the full commercial price; his support to local authorities' policies of limiting private non-residential off-street parking in new developments; and the contribution of park-and-ride facilities in outer areas to relieve congestion on radial routes.

Officials are in regular contact with the Metropolitan police and London borough councils on a wide range of parking topics.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school-age children of his Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; and what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The driver and behicle licensing centre at Swansea runs an annual summer holiday play scheme for children of school age which is being extended to the Easter holidays this year for the first time.

Child care for 5 to 12-year-olds is again being provided for two weeks in August at the Cardington residential training centre.

The Department is considering what scope there is for further provision without continuing subsidy.

King's Cross (Traffic and Roads)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has commissioned into traffic and roads in the King's Cross area; when they are due to be completed; and who are carrying them out.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The east London assessment study area has been extended to include King's Cross. Ove Arup and Partners have been asked to consider the impact on transport of proposed developments in the King's Cross area as part of their commission.

The consultants' report on the assessment study is expected this summer. They will provide advice as necessary on issues arising from development proposals in the meantime.

Road Transport

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be seeking in the context of the single European market to bring road transport cabotage into line with continental countries, whether heavy goods vehicles will be forbidden to travel on Sundays and restricted to specific roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 12 January at column 122 about the need for compliance by all vehicles with Community law and the national laws of the countries they visit. It is for highway authorities to decide whether to restrict the movement of heavy goods vehicles on the roads for which they are responsible.

Harbour Authorities (Shipping Services)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many competent harbour authorities are charging firms which maintain scheduled services between United Kingdom offshore islands and the United Kindom mainland, under the Pilotage Act; and if he will list them.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that the following competent harbour authorities make charges under the Pilotage Act 1987 to firms operating such services:

Aberdeen Harbour Board
Clyde Port Authority
Cowes Harbour Commissioners
Lerwick Harbour Trust
Penwith District Council
City of Portsmouth

I further understand that Associated British Ports, as competent harbour authority for the port of Southampton, intends shortly to introduce such charges on firms operating services of this kind.

Ferry Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints about charges on scheduled United Kingdom territorial ferry services he has received; and if he will list them.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has received complaints from my hon. Friend about charges made under the Pilotage Act 1987 by the city of Portsmouth to Solent Cruises and Wight Line Cruises and by the Cowes harbour commissioners to the Red Funnel Group; and from another hon. Member about such charges made by the city of Portsmouth to Gosport Ferry Limited. I understand that following discussions between the city of Portsmouth and Solent and Wight Line Cruises an acceptable arrangement has been reached in those cases.

My right hon. Friend has received no objection under section 10 of the Pilotage Act 1987 about charges made on ferry services operating entirely within United Kingdom territorial waters or between the mainland and United Kingdom offshore islands.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have nothing to add to the information which I gave to the hon. Member in my reply of 16 January at column 98.

Personal Injury Accidents

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 24 January, Official Report, column 513-14, he will express the personal injury accidents given in the reply as a percentage of (a) resident population in the police area, (b) per mile of road in the police area and (c) per registered motor vehicle in the police area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Population, road length and vehicle stock figures are not readily available by police force area. Figures are available for counties. I will write to my hon. Friend when the official road accident statistics for 1988 are available.

BAA Airports (Security)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet received from Sir Norman Payne the report on improvements in security at BAA airports that he requested on 13 January.

Mr. Channon: Yes, I received Sir Norman Payne's report on Thursday 19 January.

The report is thorough and detailed. It identifies well over 100 points on which security improvements have recently been made at BAA's seven airports, are now being made, or are under urgent review.

These improvements cover the following areas in particular:

(a) conditions for the issue of airside passes;
(b) the searching of staff and of any articles they carry when entering airside;
(c) the searching of vehicles when entering airside.
(d) reducing existing landside/airside control posts to release staff for improving security elsewhere; and
(e) increasing patrolling of restricted areas.

In identifying these improvements BAA have been guided by the following principles:

(i) All staff in possession of unescorted airside passes must have been satisfactorily checked to ensure their integrity. Subsequent to the issue of their passes appropriate positive monitoring must be implemented on an ongoing basis.
(ii) Procedures must be in operation which satisfactorily monitor the articles carried airside by staff.
(iii) Procedures must be in operation which either ensure that goods on delivery are escorted to the offload point or minimise the risk of prohibited goods entering airside.
(iv) Better security is achieved by the minimum number of airside/landside control points.
(v) Monitoring of restricted areas by patrolling must be at a level consistent with the risks.

I do not propose to have BAA's report as a whole published. It would not be in the interests of good security to release detailed material on airport security measures in force or under consideration.

I have replied to Sir Norman Payne accepting his report. My officials will keep in touch with BAA about its implementation. I have asked Sir Norman for an account of progress on outstanding matters in three months.

Invalid Carriages

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when regulations allowing for a new class of invalid carriage that can travel at 8 mph will be introduced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Use of Invalid Carriages on Highways Regulations 1988 (SI 1988/2268) came into force yesterday. These regulations allow for the introduction of the type of vehicle my hon. Friend describes, that is, an "invalid carriage" (powered outdoor vehicle for a disabled person) able to travel at a speed of up to 8 mph on the carriageway with the restriction remaining at 4 mph on the footway.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the individuals and organisations that have registered their objections to the proposed increase in tolls on the Severn bridge and which intend to give evidence at the inquiry which starts on 21 February.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the pre-inquiry meeting held in Thornbury on 17 January, the following signified their intention of giving evidence at the inquiry:

The Standing Conference on Regional Policy in South Wales
Avon County Council
The Automobile Association
The Royal Automobile Club
The Freight Transport Association

The Road Haulage Association
Mr. John Jackson of the Railway Development Society Severnside
Mr. Steve Hoselitz, Editor of the South Wales Argus

All registered objectors have been asked to say by 7 February whether they wish to give evidence.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what interest charges were incurred in the building of the Severn bridge;

(2) what was the basic cost of building the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The total cost of building the Severn crossing, comprising the Severn bridge, the Wye bridge and viaduct, and the approach roads, with all ancillary equipment, was £14,362,334. This includes £1,710,143 in respect of interest capitalised during construction.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the current repair work on the Severn bridge at the latest available date; and what is the total amount expected to be on completion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 30 January 1989]: To date £38·9 million has been spent on strengthening and repair work to the Severn crossing. The current estimate for the whole of the works including maintenance is £70 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Israel (Prime Minister)

Q29. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to seek to meet the Prime Minister of Israel.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Social Reform (EEC Proposals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister is she will make a statement on her policy on the EEC's proposals on social reform, with particular reference to the draft directives on sex discrimination, parental leave and the rights of part-time employees.

The Prime Minister: The Government support the conclusion of the European Council that the single market offers the best prospect for promoting employment and increasing the general prosperity of the Community for the benefit of all our people, women and men. We therefore encourage those measures that help the achievement of the single market, and bring down unemployment. But we must resist unnecessary directives which would be an obstacle to growth. We believe that such matters as parental leave and terms and conditions for part-time workers are best dealt with not by inflexible directives but by negotiation between employers and employees.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received objecting to the proposed high-speed rail link from London to the Channel tunnel; and what replies she has sent.

The Prime Minister: I have received several hundred letters, including some from hon. Members.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total expenditure on salaries on ministerial advisers in her office for each completed year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following is the information:

Year	£
1981	35,762·50
1982	75,569·25
[1]1983	167,126·97
1984	145,022·52
1985	188,654·82
1986	210,746·87
1987	239,459·46
1988	215,379·85

[1] In 1983 the CPRS was abolished and some members became Ministerial advisers.

Engagements

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether she will publish tables listing all the arts: (a) companies, (b) projects and (c) events that she has visited or attended in her official capacity in each of the past 10 years;

(2) whether she will publish a table showing the total number of official engagements she has undertaken in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years.

The Prime Minister: I undertake a substantial number of official engagements each year and visit a wide variety of organisations.

Press Statements

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether she will publish tables listing all the (a) dates and (b) titles of all press releases on the arts that her office has released in each of the last 10 years;

(2) whether she will publish a table showing the total number of press statements released by her office in each of the past 10 years.

The Prime Minister: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Speeches

Mr. Fisher : To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether she will list the (a) dates, (b) locations and (c) titles of all the speeches she has made on the arts in each of the last 10 years;

(2) whether she will publish a table showing the total number of speeches she has delivered in her official capacity in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years.

The Prime Minister: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost to each Government Department which carries its own risks and has its own insurance arrangements in each year since 1974 of paying damages and associated administrative costs; and what estimate she has as to the cost for each Department in each year of subscribing to normal third party cover afforded by insurance companies in respect of (a) employees, (b) properties and (c) vehicles.

The Prime Minister: I regret that this information cannot be provided without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Non-ministerial Appointments (Salaries)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those non-ministerial appointments for which she is responsible, to which a salary is attached.

The Prime Minister: The information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Key: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new steps he proposes in overseas aid to seek to prevent future large-scale deforestation in areas of tropical rain forest.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to encourage the wise and sustainable use of forest resources including support for alternative activities which deter deforestation. Countries receiving British aid will be asked to devote more of our aid resources to forestry.

We will make more aid funds available for international collaborative forestry research. We will encourage British charities to put forward more forestry projects for support from the aid programme. We will continue to help strengthen the institutional capacity of developing countries to deal with forestry issues by, for example, funding overseas trainees on forestry courses in the United Kingdom.

We shall continue to collaborate with other donors in the tropical forestry action plan which is now active in more than 50 countries. We remain strong supporters of the International Tropical Timber Organisation.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing for each of the last complete financial years (a) the public expenditure planned on overseas development administration in the public expenditure White Paper published immediately prior to each financial year and (b) the outturn public expenditure for each year, including any mid-year additions to the overseas aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: The table, derived from relevant public expenditure White Papers, shows for each of the last four financial years the originally planned provision, estimated outturn (including adjustments to planned provision announced during the year) and final outturn for overseas aid. Since 1984-85, with Treasury agreement, aid programme underspends have been added to provision for the next year rather than, as previously, the year after next. An increase in the planned provision for overseas aid in 1988-89, taking account of the underspend in 1987-88, was announced on 14 November 1988, at column 371.

Overseas Aid[1]: Plans and outturn 1984-85 to 1987-88

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Estimated Outturn	1,124	1,160	1,224	1,277
Final Outturn	1,120	1,151	1,209	1,224

[1] Overseas aid includes aid administration and amounts attributed to overseas aid for European Community budgetary spending on aid.

DEFENCE

Emergency Response Team

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual budget for the counter improvised nuclear device emergency response team; what liaison it has with the nuclear emergency search team in the United States of America; and with which other national counter-nuclear terrorist squads the United Kingdom team liaises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir Michael McNair-Wilson) on 13 January at column 784.

North Korea (Weapons Capacity)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the possession by North Korea of chemical or biological weapons capacity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our normal practice to comment in detail on the information available to the Government on such matters.

Nuclear Materials (Storage)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific licensing arrangements exist with the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution covering the storage of nuclear materials at (a) Devonport, Rosyth and Faslane shipyards and (b) the Atomic Weapons Research establishment Aldermaston, Atomic Weapon Research Establishment Burghfield and the Royal Ordnance plant at Caerwent.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since their privatisation, the Devonport and Rosyth Dockyard Companies' nuclear facilities have been licensed, via the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, under the terms of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (NIA). The disposals of waste radioactive substances from these facilities are now made under authorisations issued, under the terms of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (RSA), by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in the Department of the Environment (HMIP/DOE) for Devonport and by Her Majesty's Industrial pollution inspectorate of the Scottish Development Department (HMIPI/SDD) for Rosyth.

Crown and Government Departments including Her Majesty's forces nuclear and radioactive facilities are not subject to licensing under the NIA. These MOD facilities are, however, subject to appropriate regulation, inspection and enforcement by Her Majesty's inspectors of HSE (HMI/HSE) under the terms of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (HSWA). Although the terms of the RSA are not applicable to such facilities, disposals of waste radioactive substances are subject to "agreements", made with the relevant environmental Departments, approved by the Secretaries of State for those relevant Departments.

Although safety enactments and statutes are not applicable to defence facilities, it is Her Majesty's Government policy that the standards of the health and safety requirements set by Secretary of State for Defence are, and shall be, at least as stringent as those set by enactments and other legislation for similar civil (non-defence) installations.

The following are the current positions:

(a) The Naval Base at Faslane is not licensed under the NIA. Waste disposals are under an agreement with HMIPI/SDD.

(b) None of the Stations of the Atomic Weapons Establishment (AWE) based on Aldermaston, Burghfield and Cardiff (the former ROF Cardiff) is licensed under the NIA. Radioactive waste disposals are made in accordance with Agreements with the relevant Environmental Departments; viz: HMIP/DOE and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for AWE (Aldermaston); HMIP/DOE for AWE (Burghfield); and the Welsh Office, in consultation with HMIP/DOE, for AWE (Cardiff).

Anti-submarine Atomic Depth Charges

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Admiralty research establishment at Portsmouth conducts any development or defence preparedness research on anti-submarine atomic depth charges.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to disclose details of any research work of this nature.

Radioactive Contamination

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of (a) beryllium and (b) depleted uranium are stored at the Royal Ordnance factory Caerwent at Llanishen, Cardiff; and what safety measures are implemented to stop radioactive contamination of surrounding land areas and water supplies.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not the policy of the Ministry of Defence to reveal the amounts of nuclear, radioactive and other associated materials held at defence establishments including the atomic weapons establishment at Cardif (AWE (Cardiff)) (formerly the Royal Ordnance factory, Cardiff).

All work involving radioactive and toxic materials is undertaken in facilities which are designed and built to ensure a safe working environment and to protect other workers, the general public and the environment against any potential hazard. Residual radioactive and beryllium wastes are treated before discharge. The airborne discharges are continuously monitored; liquids are collected and each batch monitored prior to discharge. The total amounts discharged are very small. Monitoring outside the buildings involved does not indicate any significant level of dispersed materials. The radiation doses from these discharges are assessed to be negligible, less than one thousandth of the annual United Kingdom dose limit for members of the public.

We are therefore confident that the storage of quantities of both beryllium and depleted uraniaum held at AWE (Cardiff) does not pose any danger to the work force or the public.

Fissile Material Stockpile

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has recently received any reports from (a) the director of atomic weapon research establishment, Aldermaston and (b) the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces on the preparedness of the United Kingdom fissile material stockpile to meet defence requirements into the 1990s.

Mr. Sainsbury: Future requirements for fissile material are kept under regular review as part of the overall process of planning the defence programme. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any report on the chemical weapons capability of (a) Libya, (b) Israel, (c) Iraq, (d) the Soviet Union, (e) France, (f) South Africa and (g) the United States of America.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Reports are received from time to time on the military capabilities of many countries. However, it is not our normal practice to comment in detail on individual reports.

Chemical and Biological Warfare Agents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what places, over what time period and using what methods United Kingdom stocks of chemical and biological warfare agents were destroyed.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 25 January at column 653.

Fighter Pilots

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pilots qualified for flying jet fighter planes during 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: A total of 83 pilots graduated to fly fast jet in 1988, which represents a slight increase on 1987 figures.

Chemical Warfare

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any stocks of chemical or biological warfare agents are kept at Porton Down or other Ministry of Defence research establishments for the purpose of experimental research on protective measures for civilians and military personnel against chemical warfare attack.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 25 January at column 653.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any tests have been undertaken at Porton Down on any soil samples from the Kurdish areas of Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The CDE Porton Down has carried out a scientific analysis of soil samples provided by Mr. Gwynne Roberts, a Channel 4 reporter. The analysis, which was given to Mr. Roberts on 11 January, shows that the samples contained traces of sulphur mustard and related compounds together with traces of the explosive Tetryl. We cannot confirm the circumstances in which these samples were collected, but have no reason to doubt Mr. Roberts' account that these were collected in northern Iraq. The Government believe that this, following previous indications, amounts to convincing evidence that chemical weapons have been used by Iraq against their Kurdish population.

Military Construction Projects

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list military construction projects in the United Kingdom that are used in support of (a) British forces and (b) United States forces that are to be funded in whole or in part by NATO infrastructure funds from NATO slices 41 and 42.

Mr. Neubert: The composition of NATO infrastructure slices 41 and 42 will not be agreed until December 1989 and December 1990 respectively.

Military Exercises (Noise and Damage)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken since 1986 to lessen the effects of the firing of guns on the Castlemartin range, Pembrokeshire on the range's neighbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: A number of measures have been adopted in an effort to reduce the effects of firing at Castlemartin range on the local community. When weather conditions are likely to attenuate firing, noise limitations are placed on the types of ammunition which may be fired and firing on certain areas of the range is prohibited. Night firing is restricted to two hours only between 1830 hours and 2359 hours according to the season and may take place on only two non-consecutive nights per week and not on Fridays, weekends or public holidays; only the quieter ammunition may be fired.

Castlemartin is an extremely important training facility for tank units of the British and Federal German armies. Live firing is an indispensible part of troop training and Castlemartin is one of the few places where this can be done.

Nevertheless, the range authorities maintain close liaison with the local community and seek to do all that is possible, given training needs, to lessen the burden on those living close to the range.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any compensation is paid by his Department in respect of damage caused to civilian properties as a result of vibration from British or West German military guns or aircraft in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence deals with, and, where appropriate, settles, third party claims for compensation for loss of or damage to property in this country arising from the on-duty activities of the United Kingdom's armed forces. The Ministry also deals, under the terms of article VIII of the NATO status of forces agreement (Cmnd. 9363), with claims arising from on-duty activities of the armed forces of other NATO member nations training in this country.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the types of British and West German tank together with their gun calibre used on the Castlemartin range, Pembrokeshire, since 1959, with the dates when new types of tank were introduced.

Mr. Neubert: The following types of tank have been used on the Castlemartin range since 1959.

British		Date
Centurion	20 pounder gun	1959-64
Centurion	105 mm gun	1965-72
Centurion	120 mm gun	1970-date

Note: Some minor trials were conducted with Chieftain 120 mm during 1966-67.

German		Date
M48	90 mm gun	1961-67
Leopard 1	105 mm gun	1968-69
M48	90 mm gun	1970-73
Leopard 1	105 mm gun	1974-75
M48	90 mm gun	1976-79

German		Date
Leopard 1	105 mm gun	1980-85
Leopard 2	120 mm gun	1986-date

Note: The Federal Republic of Germany first made use of the facilities at Castlemartin in 1961.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any arrangements exist for the provision of finance or other assistance for sound insulation of civilian properties adjacent to military ranges in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence has no arrangements for the provision of finance or other assistance for the sound insulation of civilian properties adjacent to military ranges in the United Kingdom. As with all military activities, however, where a reasonable connection can be made between an activity and specific damage or loss, the Ministry of Defence would be prepared to consider individual claims.

ENERGY

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The ministerial advisers appointed in my Department since 1979 are as follows:

1979 Mr. M. Portillo
1983 Ms. L. Rouse
1987 Mr. J. Derrick
1989 Mr. N. D. Martin

It is not the practice to reveal the salaries of advisers as they are individually negotiated in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential. The length of appointment for each adviser varied.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for how long the Didcot Pluto reactors at Harwell have been in use; if any United Kingdom reactor has been in use longer; what (a) primary containment or (b) secondary shutdown system exists in these reactors; what assessment he has made of the safety of these reactors and of the possibility of a melt-down accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA's reactors Dido and Pluto were commissioned in 1956 and 1957 respectively, contemporary with the first United Kingdom commercial power reactors. On the matters raised by the hon. Member relating to the design of the reactors, I have asked the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to write to him.

The Health and Safety Executive carried out a safety audit of Dido and Pluto in late 1987. This audit considered all aspects of the safety of the reactors and concluded that the two reactors were safe for current operation, but the HSE made a number of recommendations with which the authority would have to comply to provide justification for operation beyond 1989. The AEA have accepted all the recommendations, the timely implementation of which the HSE will continue to monitor closely.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available to the public the full report of inspections carried out by the nuclear installations inspectorate towards the end of 1987 on the Didcot Pluto reactors at Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The technical commentaries on plant operation and arrangements which the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate produced in the course of its review were not prepared with a view to future publication. They include information of a commercially sensitive nature which it would not be appropriate to publish. The conclusions and recommendations arising from the audit were published by the HSE in a press notice dated 21 June 1988 a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made regarding proposals for the application off shore of regulations dealing with safety representatives and safety committees.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A consultative document containing our proposals for a set of regulations to deal with the election of safety representatives and for the formation of safety committees on offshore installations has been issued today. Copies of these proposals are available in the Libraries of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Bill Procedure

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received other than from hon. and right hon. Members urging an early debate of the report of the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedure.

Mr. Wakeham: I have received no such representations.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the private bills laid before the House since 1979 and indicate which have been enacted.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rural Schools

13. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the standards of primary and secondary schools in rural areas.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for educational provision in maintained primary and secondary schools in rural as well as in other areas rests with local education authorities. My right hon. Friend is supporting through education support grant some £1·5 million of expenditure per annum on pilot projects in 14 LEAs with a view to improving the quality and range of the curriculum in rural primary schools.

Nursery Education

14. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many under-fives have been placed in nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures to be published shortly by my right hon. Friend show that, in January 1988, 285,000 children were in nursery schools or classes in England. Another 248,000 under-fives were in infant classes. The combined figure has increased by nearly 25 per cent. in eight years.

Nursery Places

15. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage West Sussex education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

18. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Hereford and Worcester education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

30. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage West Sussex local education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

40. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Kent education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Oxfordshire education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

45. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Wiltshire education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

69. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Essex education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

75. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to encourage Kent education authority to provide more nursery places; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Education is not compulsory below the age of five. The scope and form of provision for under-fives are wholly within local authorities' discretion. My right hon. Friend sees no cause to change that.

Higher Education (Fees)

16. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals for introducing changes in the administration of fees in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: We are considering the possibility of increasing the impact of student enrolments through some shift in the public funding of higher education from the grant to be disbursed by the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council towards students' fees met under the mandatory awards arrangements. When we have a clear proposal, we shall consult the various interests before taking a decision.

Science Teachers

17. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the recruitment of science teachers.

Mr. Butcher: Recruitment to secondary science teacher training courses has increased by 9 per cent. since the launch in 1986 of our action programme on teacher supply. We shall continue and reinforce our action programme to ensure that we have the science teachers we need in the 1990s.

37. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to increase the number of science teachers in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We project no particular problems with the supply of primary teachers. Most teaching in primary schools is carried out by the class teacher. The Government are already supporting in-service training for primary teachers through the LEA training grants scheme, and the provision of advisory staff through education support grants. Both of these schemes are providing primary teachers with extra subject expertise and support in science.

57. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to increase the number of science teachers in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We have had in place for over two years an action programme to increase the number of science teachers in secondary schools. This includes a £1,300 bursary for those undertaking initial teacher training in physics, an energetic teacher teacher recruitment publicity campaign spearheaded by the teaching as a career unit and new courses of initial teacher training. My right hon. Friend has just announced that the bursary will be extended to chemistry in September.

Universities (Sciences)

19. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what part he expects teaching and research in physics and chemistry to play in universities in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The University Grants Committee has recently published for consultation reports on the principles which might inform subsequent proposals for the rationalisation of physics and chemistry in universities. As in other subject reviews, the objective is to strengthen national provision in both teaching and research.

Schools (Staffordshire)

20. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil in secondary schools in Staffordshire in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Butcher: Staffordshire spent an average of £1,040 per secondary pupil in 1978-79 and £1,255 per secondary pupil in 1986-87. The figure for the earlier year has been repriced to 1986-87 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

Teachers

21. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to increase the supply of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths).

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take further steps to support better recruitment and retention of school teachers in geographical areas of shortage or high turnover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department's action programme to combat teacher shortages is designed to help relieve pressure on regions with recruitment difficulties. The teaching as a career unit continues to hold discussions with local authorities on how best to improve teacher recruitment and retention.

Grant-maintained Schools

22. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of schools who have indicated their intention to seek grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have now approached his Department with a view to seeking grant-maintained status.

28. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have used the Education Reform Act 1988 to opt for grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

39. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of schools which so far have made application for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Butcher: Eight schools have now published proposals for grant-maintained status, which my right hon. Friend will determine on their merits in due course. Parents have voted for publication of such proposals at 10 other schools, and further ballots are in preparation. The Department continues to receive numerous inquiries from parents and governors about grant-maintained status and the application procedures.

41. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the results of the recently held ballots of parents to determine whether they wish to seek grant-maintained status for their children's schools.

Mr. Butcher: Parents at 21 schools have voted on whether to apply to my right hon. Friend for grant-maintained status. They voted in favour at 18 schools, nearly all by a very large majority. I am pleased to note that the average turnout in the ballots so far has been 72 per cent.

50. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made for the handling of applications by schools for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Butcher: Where parents vote in favour of seeking grant-maintained status for a school, section 62(2) of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires the governing body to publish proposals accordingly. My right hon. Friend will consider such proposals on their merits after taking account of any objections received.

Air Pollution

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future level of funding for research into air pollution.

Mr. Jackson: The Natural Environment Research Council plans to undertake research relevant to air pollution in the financial year 1989-90 at a level of some £1·1 million. This includes research on acid rain, fluorine and radionuclides. The NERC is helping organise the Glasgow international conference on acid deposition in 1990. Longer-term funding levels will be influenced by the trend of income from research commissioned by other Government Departments.

Spelling

24. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that teachers have reached an acceptable standard of spelling.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since 1 September 1984, all entrants to initial teacher training courses in England and Wales and all new entrants to teaching in the maintained sector by the non-standard routes have had to have attained the standard required for grade C in the GCE at O-level or the equivalent in English.

Scottish Universities

25. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the principals of Scottish universities; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Jackson: We have no present plans to meet the principals of the Scottish universities.

School Meals

27. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will establish an inquiry into the price-sensitivity of demand for school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no such intentions at present.

GCSE

29. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has completed a review of the first year's GCSE examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of a report from the School Examinations and Assessment Council on the first GCSE courses and examinations, and the reply I have sent today. The report confirms that the GCSE is off to a good start, and identifies a number of areas where improvement is required. I look to the council to play a central role in effecting these improvements so that we can realise the full benefits of the GCSE.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on general certificate of secondary education examinations from parents over the past nine months.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have received about 700 letters on GCSE since June 1987, from parents and other interested parties. The vast majority have been supportive of the principles behind the new examination.

34. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has inquired into the reasons for the delays by some boards in announcing general certificate of secondary education results; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The issuing of GCSE results is the responsibility of the independent GCSE examining groups. My right hon. Friend has made it clear to them that late results cannot be tolerated. The examining groups regret the delays that affected a small percentage of results in 1988, and have undertaken to review administrative arrangements and to take corrective measures to ensure that the problems do not recur.

Student Loans

32. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received concerning his proposals for student loans.

36. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received since the publication of the White Paper entitled "Top-up Loans for Students".

62. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from students in Wales, and their representatives, concerning his proposals for student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning his proposals over changes to the method of student financing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Since the publication on 9 November 1988 of the White Paper on top-up loans for students, some 3,912 representations have been received. Representations from Wales are not separately recorded.

33. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of banks and financial institutions to discuss proposals to introduce a loan scheme for maintenance of students in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: In November. Discussions are continuing between the Department and representatives of financial institutions.

University Lecturers

35. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding a pay settlement for university lecturers.

Mr. Jackson: The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers are discussing university lecturers' pay with each other: since last April, my right hon. Friend has received just over 200 letters on the topic.

School Transport

38. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the rules relating to school transport.

Mr. Butcher: The law governing home-to-school transport is laid down by section 55 of the Education Act 1944, as amended by section 53 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Anti-racist Policies

43. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities currently implement anti-racist policies in their schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Information about how many local education authorities currently implement anti-racist policies in their schools is not collected centrally. It is Government policy that ethnic minority pupils should have the same opportunity as all others to profit from what schools can offer them and that schools should preserve and transmit our national values in a way which accepts Britain's ethnic diversity and promotes tolerance and racial harmony. It is for individual local education authorities and schools to determine, in the light of their own needs and circumstances, how to give effect to this policy.

Education Reform

44. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on what progress has been made in the implementation of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: Implementation of the Act is proceeding on schedule. The following steps have been taken:

The Government plan to implement section 5, which is concerned with the approval of qualifications and syllabuses for pupils of compulsory school age, with effect from 1 August 1989. The proposed arrangements are set out in a draft circular which was issued for consultation before Christmas.

We are on course to start the phased implementation of the national curriculum from this autumn: development work has begun on the attainment tests in readiness for the first run in 1991.

Local education authorities have been required to submit, in most cases, by September 1989 schemes for the local management of schools, for introduction the following April. Local education authorities and governors of secondary schools must also be prepared from August 1990 to admit eligible pupils up to the assessed capacity of the school building. Preparations for the transfer of education responsibilities from ILEA to the inner London boroughs in April 1990 are well in hand.

The Act gives schools the opportunity to opt out of local authority control and become grant-maintained. Parental ballots have now been held at 19 schools on whether to seek grant-maintained status.

There has been excellent progress in the establishment of city technology colleges. Sponsorship has already been announced for 10 CTCs, and further announcements will be made soon.

The Department's circulars 8/88 and 9/88 were issued in September 1988 requiring local education authorities to reform the governing bodies of their further education colleges and to draw up schemes of planning and delegation for those colleges.

Sections 214-216, on bogus degrees, came into force on 30 November 1988; orders made under section 216 came into effect on the same date.

The Act's new arrangements for higher education will be in full operation from 1 April 1989. We have established the higher education corporations to take over the running of polytechnics and major colleges of higher education as independent institutions, as well as the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

We have also established the Education Assets Board to oversee the transfer of assets and liabilities from local education authorities to relevant institutions in the PCFC sector and to grant-maintained schools.

With respect to the provisions on academic tenure, the university commissioners and their staff have been appointed and they have begun their work of reviewing statutes for modification.

Gifted Children

46. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources are made available (a) nationally and (b) in north Yorkshire for the education of gifted children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not held centrally at present. However, the Department is sponsoring a survey of current local education authority provision for the most able pupils to be carried out by the National Association for Gifted Children. The association intends to invite all LEAs in England and Wales to participate and hopes to complete the survey by the summer.

Languages

47. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to encourage more pupils to learn to speak foreign languages.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's policy on modern foreign languages in the school curriculum was set out in the January 1988 policy statement, a copy of which I am sending to my hon. Friend. The national curriculum will include a modern foreign language as a foundation subject at secondary level to be studied by each pupil between the ages of 11 and 16. Within this framework, my right hon. Friend is encouraging a greater diversity of languages offered in the school curriculum.

72. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secrertary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to encourage a growth in, and the take-up of, places available in foreign language courses at further and higher education levels.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are concerned to increase the number of pupils continuing to study a foreign language until age 16 and beyond. Our proposals for a national curriculum include a modern foreign language as a foundation subject at secondary level to be studied by all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16. We hope that the greater numbers studying a language to that age will result in an increase in those continuing with further language learning not only in the sixth form but also in further and higher education, so stimulating demand.

The Government are working to make the whole of the education system, including the provision for foreign languages in further and higher education, more responsive to demand.

In addition, the network of language export centres, funded by the Department's professional, industrial and commercial updating programme (PICKUP) and the Training Agency, brings together universities, polytechnics and colleges to help firms meet their language training needs.

Truancy

48. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will hold a national inquiry into truancy among school children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend does not intend to hold such an inquiry. Under the Education Acts, the responsibility for taking action on truancy rests with local education authorities. They should ensure that attendance levels in their schools are monitored and that action is taken to keep them under control.

Environmental Research

49. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to support and develop fundamental research into factors affecting the environment and to encourage the work of the Natural Environment Research Council.

66. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to promote fundamental research into the greenhouse effect and other global environmental issues and to fund the research programmes of the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are committed to support for fundamental research, in particular in the environmental field. It is for the Natural Environment Research Council and other Research Councils to plan scientific priorities within the overall funds available. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce the 1989-90 allocations to research councils as soon as possible.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

51. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he expects the pupil-teacher ratio on average for Inner London boroughs to be higher or lower than the indicated ratio for the Inner London education authority of 16:1 for nursery, 17:1 for primary, 13:1 for secondary and 5:7 for special.

Mrs. Rumbold: All teaching and non-teaching staff in ILEA schools will on 1 April 1990 transfer to the employment of the council by which their school is to be maintained. Thereafter, staffing policy will be the responsibility of the inner London councils and, with the implementation of schemes of local management, the governors of the schools.

52. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current pupil-teacher ratio for secondary schools in Greater London.

Mr. Butcher: In January 1988, the pupil-teacher ratio within maintained secondary schools in Greater London was 14:1.

School Improvements

53. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to encourage developers to make financial contributions towards school improvements in areas where significant numbers of children of school age have been added to school rolls.

Mr. Butcher: Local education authorities are responsible for ensuring that sufficient school places are available in their areas. My right hon. Friend welcomes, in principle, any agreement between an LEA and developer that leads to the private sector investing in improvements in schools.

School Inspectors

54. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that Her Majesty's inspectors are sufficiently diligent in detecting below average standards of teaching and achievement of pupils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's Inspector's central concern has always been with standards of teaching and learning, and it reports regularly to me on those and other such matters. The senior chief inspector is directly responsible for the performance of the inspectorate, but I study carefully the reports that are submitted to me, which are also open to public scrutiny. I am satisfied that HMI already carries out its functions effectively and diligently.

School Activities (Charges)

55. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received from education authorities to departmental circular 2/89 entitled, "Education Reform Act 1988, Charges for School Activities".

Mr. Butcher: None.

Capital Allocations

56. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following the announcement of the 1989-90 capital allocations to local education authorities.

Mr. Butcher: A total of 26 representations have been received from hon. Members, local authorities and school governors. Fourteen of these relate to the prescribed capital allocations to local education authorities and 12 to the allocations for voluntary aided and special agreement schools.

Durham University

58. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from the university of Durham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The university has recently made representations about the cost of repairs to Durham castle, on which my right hon. Friend has seen no case for the supplementation of help available through existing channels. It has also notified us of an outline proposal to establish a college on Teesside which, depending on the outcome of local consultations, may lead to the need for decisions at national level.

City Technology Colleges

59. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many city technology colleges are now envisaged.

63. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many city technology colleges he has planned to open during the present year.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many city technology colleges he expects to commence in 1989.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many city technology colleges have so far been announced.

Mrs. Rumbold: The city technology colleges programme continues to make excellent progress. Kingshurst CTC opened last year and two more, at Teesside and Nottingham, will open in September this year. CTCs in Bradford and Gateshead are planned to open in September 1990. In addition, sponsors have announced their intention to establish five other CTCs. Further announcements will be made soon.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

60. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to restore negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key).

School Curriculum

61. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make regulations under section 22 of the Education Act 1988 governing the supply and publication of information concerning the school curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has today issued for statutory consultations a draft of the first regulations he proposes to make under section 22. These are intended to take effect from the 1989-90 school year. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Graduates

64. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many graduates entered industry during the latest year that figures are available; and what proportion this was of the total number of students graduating.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987, 16,600 first degree graduates in Great Britain entered industry. This accounted for 17 per cent. of the total first degree graduates of known destination in Great Britain. The destination of graduates from part-time courses in polytechnics and colleges is not obtained.

Science Budget

65. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the advice he has received from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the allocation of the science budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Teacher Training

67. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is planning to introduce any proposals for teacher training in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the near future, my right hon. Friend will be announcing his decision on the outcome of the consultation on the proposals for the reform of non-standard routes into teaching; the aggregate intake numbers for initial teacher training for 1990, together with the split between sectors, undergraduate and postgraduate courses, phases and secondary phase subjects—and later the proposed distribution between institutions in the PCFC sector; his proposals for the approval of courses of initial teacher training when the term of office of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education expires at the end of 1989; his proposals for the national priority areas in the LEA training grant scheme for 1990-91. In addition, the Government keep under constant review the scope for encouraging innovatory developments in teacher training designed to enhance the quality of the teaching force and help to meet the demand for teachers.

Literacy and Numeracy

68. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are estimated to leave Britain's primary schools and secondary schools with inadequate literacy and numeracy.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available in the form requested. Attainment targets for English and mathematics in the national curriculum will establish what pupils should be able to achieve at ages seven, 11, 14 and 16. The introduction of assessment at those ages will mean that any pupils having difficulty will be identified at an early stage and can be given help.

Classics

70. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the teaching of classics in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend attaches importance to the study of classics in schools. Its potential was illustrated in Her Majesty's inspectorate's recent publication "Classics from 5 to 16". Schools will still be able to offer classics outside the national curriculum in the early secondary years, as an option to fourth and fifth year pupils, and in the sixth form. We hope that parental and public demand will encourage such provision. In addition my right hon. Friend has asked the national curriculum working groups on English and history to consider the contribution of classical studies, as a cross-curricular theme, to the attainment targets and programmes of study for these subjects.

Degrees

71. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies have been undertaken by his Department as to the effect on education of the single European market, with special regard to the common recognition of degrees and the outlawing of bogus degrees.

Mr. Jackson: The implications of the single European market for education are kept under continuous review. In further and higher education, many courses already address employers' single market training needs; further demand can be expected to develop in a wide range of fields. The Education Reform Act 1988, in providing for increased involvement of employers in the government of all education institutions, will facilitate a direct response to that demand. The United Kingdom is participating fully under the European Community's ERASMUS programme in the development of a European credit transfer scheme designed to contribute to the recognition for academic purposes of higher education qualifications obtained and periods of study spent in different member states. The Government gave full support during negotiations in Brussels to the principle of the directive on a general system for the recognition of higher education diplomas for professional purposes which was adopted unanimously by the Council of Ministers on 21 December 1988. Finally, although not as part of any European Community initiative, the Government brought into effect on 30 November 1988 sections 214 to 216 of the Education Reform Act 1988 under which it is now a criminal offence to award, or to offer to award, an unrecognised United Kingdom degree.

At school level, the work of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council will have regard to the resolution of the Council of Ministers on the European dimension in education.

New Schools

73. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy for capital expenditure for new schools in areas of rapidly increasing population.

Mr. Butcher: Local education authorities are responsible for ensuring that there are sufficient school places for every child in their areas. To enable local authorities to meet their statutory obligations my right hon. Friend gives priority, when making capital allocations to those authorities who submit capital plans to provide additional school places to meet a rise in the local school population.

Schools-industry Links

74. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his recent discussions with industrialists about links between school and industry.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is keen to encourage the development of links between school and industry in many ways. To this end, my colleagues and I have regular meetings with industrialists to discuss ways in which they can take advantage of the opportunities offered by recent legislation to become involved with schools.

Computer Software

76. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to review the types of computer software available to schools.

Mr. Butcher: A statistical survey undertaken by the Department in February 1988 obtained information about the software packages used most regularly in schools. The result of this survey will be published shortly.

Association of University Teachers

77. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Association of University Teachers; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not recently met the AUT, but we are in touch with it from time to time in the same way as we are in touch with a wide variety of bodies in order to keep abreast of developments.

University Students (Science Courses)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of first time university students entered full-time courses in science for each year since 1975.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Full-time undergraduates new entrants to universities in Great Britain

Academic year beginning in	Percentage science
1975	49
1976	50
1977	50
1978	50
1979	50
1980	51
1981	55
1982	52
1983	52
1984	51
1985	50
1986	49
1987	49

In 1985 a new subject classification was introduced, and figures are not therefore comparable with previous years' data.

Food Poisoning (Research)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what university research departments in the United Kingdom are carrying out projects on food poisoning funded by his Department.

Mr. Jackson: The Agricultural and Food Research Council, which receives a grant-in-aid from this Department, is supporting the following projects at universities:

Project	Principal investigator	Award
Genetic engineering of listeria monocytogenes designed to enable the development of rapid bioluminescent phage detection.	Dr. G. S. A. B. Stewart, Department of Applied Biochemistry and Food Science, University of Nottingham.	£31,800 for 2 years from 1 October 1988.
Improvements in methods of detection and enumeration of sub-lethally injured bacteria.	Dr. G. S. A. B. Stewart, Department of Applied Biochemistry and Food Science, University of Nottingham.	£47,300 for 3 years from 1 January 1989.
Application of specific antibodies to enzymic methods for sensitive and routine detection of botulinum neurotoxins in foods.	Dr. J. O. Dolly, Department of Biochemistry, Imperial College of Science and Technology, University of London.	£59,000 for 3 years from 1 April 1986.

Note: In addition, universities carry out research from general university funds which may be of relevance to food poisoning.

School Inspections

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 22 December 1988, Official Report, column 388, when he expects a full inspection to be made of the Small School at Red House, Norwich; and if the reports by the inspector following his visit in November 1988 will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Butcher: There are no immediate plans to undertake a full inspection of the Small School at Red House, nor was the visit paid to the school by HMI in November 1988 a full inspection. Only full inspection reports are placed in the Library. HMI notes of visit are internal working documents and it is not appropriate to make their contents public. I am writing to the hon. Member.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the impact upon the educational abilities of children in Nottingham of the closure of hospitals in the Nottingham area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend understands that the Nottingham health authority is considering the closure of St. Anne's hospital, to which a special school is attached, and I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 January at column 17. Under the Education Act 1981, it is for the local education authority to consider how it provides for children in its area with special educational needs.

Local Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his reply of 19 January, Official Report, column 265, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, he will publish a list of those local education authorities which, in respect of claims for 1987-88 (a) have claimed significantly less than the maximum allocated amount for 1987-88 or (b) have not yet made final claims for all quarters of 1987-88, showing for each of (a) and (b) the amount underspent or apparently unclaimed.

Mrs. Rumbold: (a) The following LEAs underspent by 5 per cent. or more in 1987-88:

Local Education Authority	Total Amount Unclaimed £	Underspend as a percentage of total maxima
Avon	712,654	19·4

North Molton Primary School

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make additional funds available to Devon county council to include North Molton primary school replacement in the 1989-90 programme.

Mr. Butcher: It is for the Devon local education authority to decide what priority for funding to accord to particular projects, including North Molton, and to decide which of them to fund in 1989-90. For the 1989-90 financial year, the authority was allocated £14·177 million in respect of prescribed expenditure on county and voluntary controlled schools and FHE, representing a 68 per cent. increase on its allocation for 1988-89.

Class Sizes

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the percentage of pupils in primary and secondary schools in classes of 30 and over for each local education authority in England in rank order.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The percentage of pupils in classes of 30 and over in maintained primary and secondary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1988 ranked in order was as follows. The analyses relate to classes taught by one teacher during a selected period on the day of the schools census and do not necessarily represent the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Single European Market

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on educating European national school age children in British schools when their circumstances bring them to Britain for a period of time; and if he expects to change that policy in the light of 1992.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Under the Education Act 1944, local education authorities already have a duty to provide suitable and efficient primary and secondary education free of charge for all children in their areas. This duty applies equally to British children and to school-age children accompanying EC nationals and is not affected by the move to a single European market in 1992.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food (Storage)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the estimated food types and quantities which were in storage in the United Kingdom under European Economic Community agreements on 3 January.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Food types and quantities in storage under EC regulationary provisions on 31 December 1988, (the nearest available date) were as follows:

Tonnes

	Intervention stocks	Private storage
Beef	25,000	2,497
Butter	24,179	448
Grain[1]	1,162,000	0
Pigmeat	0	62
Sugar	0	[2]967,878

[1] Including grain for animal feed.
[2] Stocks held under community storage refund scheme plus regional minimum stock held by cane sugar refiner.

Pig Farmers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the information he has on the number of pig farmers that have gone into liquidation in Derbyshire in the past 12 months.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that this information is not available.

Meat Production (Hormones)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has that the use of hormones in United States of America meat production poses hazards to human health; and if he will make a statement on the ban imposed on the import of such meat.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no evidence that the use of growth-promoting hormone products under appropriate conditions poses any hazard to human health. This Government have therefore consistently opposed the EC hormones ban and are continuing to work for a solution to the trade difficulties with the United States it has caused.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of slaughterhouses in England and Wales; and what is the total number approved for exporting to the European Economic Community, for each year since 1983.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Slaughterhouses in England and Wales

December	Total	EC-approved
1983	942	59
1984	931	61
1985	916	64
1986	867	67
1987	853	60

Plasticisers (Clingfilm)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for the health of consumers of the use of plasticisers in clingfilm, used to wrap food products.

Mr. Ryder: This matter has been the subject of detailed investigation, the results of which have been assessed by an independent expert committee. The committee's advice was that it was very unlikely that there were any adverse health effects from the current or past use of plasticisers in clingfilm.

Nevertheless, as a matter of prudence, action has been taken to secure the reformulation of clingfilm so as to reduce dietary intakes of the major plasticiser, and further survey work is in hand within the Government's comprehensive food surveillance arrangements.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure consumer awareness of the health implications of the use of plasticisers in clingfilm and of the existence of products without plasticisers.

Mr. Ryder: My Department has agreed with the industry the wording to be used on clingfilm packaging which gives advice to consumers on the use of the product. This advice applies to all clingfilms, whether or not they contain plasticisers. In a press statement on 22 December 1986 my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary drew the attention of the public to the need to follow the guidance provided.

Beef

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give in tabular form the proportion of the beef production of each member state of the European Community which will not benefit from the recently agreed special beef premiums.

Mr. [illegible]ld Thompson: Precise information of the kind requested is not available. The Community special premium for beef will apply to the first 90 male animals per holding. An indication of the effect of the limitation of the premium to male animals only is provided by the table which shows the proportion of slaughterings of male and female cattle in each member state. The limitation to 90 head will also have an effect on uptake. This will depend on farm structure, decisions by farmers on how they manage their enterprises and market cattle and on the methods used to administer the premium.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have nothing to add to the information that I gave the hon. Member in my reply of 16 January at column 55.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what evidence or advice he has received from his veterinary products committee on the safety of the Monsanto experimental farm trials with bovine somatotropin in cows;

(2) what advice he has received from the veterinary products committee on the safety of BST, including that based on the evidence received from Townsend.

Mr. Ryder: No field trials of veterinary products, including BST, are authorised until the veterinary products committee, following a rigorous evaluation of all pertinent data, advises that they are safe.

Butter

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 26 January 1989, he will give the figures for each year since 1973 for the percentage of the United Kingdom packet butter market, retailed to the non-industrial consumer accounted for by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) France, (d) New Zealand, (e) Denmark, (f) the Netherlands and (g) Belgium and Luxembourg.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is not available except in the form given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary in his reply of 26 January at columns 697-98.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has as to whether salmonella is transmitted from rats to poultry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have no specific evidence that salmonella is transmitted from rats to poultry although it is recognised that animals such as rats are susceptible to salmonella. As part of the further measures to combat salmonella, I propose to strengthen the statutory controls for the control of rodents on poultry farms.

Radiation (Sheep)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what powers he served his direction on the owner of the flock of sheep in North Yorkshire where radioactivity readings were found to be above 1,000 bq/kg.

Mr. Ryder: The direction was served under section 2(3) of part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

EC Structural Funds

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used by the Government in selecting the United Kingdom agricultural areas to benefit under section 5(b) of the European Economic Community's proposed new rules for the reform of European Economic Community structural funds.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Objective 5(b) is

"promoting the development of rural areas".

The European Commission is to determine which areas are eligible; it has already assured us that they will include the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, rural Wales, and the assisted areas of Devon and Cornwall. The criteria for the selection are in article 4 of Council regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the net cost to the United Kingdom for each of the last three years of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Public expenditure in the United Kingdom under the Common Agricultural Policy in the last three years has been as follows:—

Year	£ million
1986-87	1,400
1987-88	1,610
1988-89	[1]1,470

[1] Forecast.

These figures include all expenditure under Community market support and structural aid schemes for agriculture, but exclude related expenditure such as national aid schemes, disease prevention, advice, research and development and administration.

This expenditure is funded entirely by the United Kingdom, either directly or indirectly through the Community budget. In addition, the Exchequer supports spending under the CAP elsewhere in the Community through our net contribution to the EC budget, which in the same three years is estimated at £1,079 million, £1,164 million and £950 million. Over that period CAP spending has made up over two thirds of the EC budget.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the cost of common agricultural policy intervention buying and storage during 1988 in each of the European Economic Community member states and for each commodity for which an intervention regime exists.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Provisional figures for 1988 Community expenditure on private storage (sugar, wine and grape must, butter, beef, sheepmeat and pigmeat) and on public intervention (cereals, sugar, olive oil, oilseeds, wine alcohol, tobacco, skimmed milk powder, butter and beef, are given in the table.

The purchase of stock into public intervention is funded by the member states, which are reimbursed by the Community for storage in addition, for the first time in 1988, there was significant expenditure on depreciation of newly-farmed stocks (cereals, alcohol, tobacco, butter and beef) under arrangements agreed by the European Council in February 1988.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. George Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest figures for principal discharges of liquid radioactive waste from United Kingdom nuclear establishments for 1987 and 1988 in the form of table 1 of the report on "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", published by the directorate of fisheries research.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The 1987 figures for principal discharges of liquid radioactive waste from United Kingdom nuclear establishments were published in the form requested by my Ministry last October in a report entitled "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles, 1987". A copy of the report was placed in the Library of the House at that time. Figures for 1988 will be published later this year.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are plans to introduce ethnic monitoring of admissions under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans, although the subject is kept under review by the Department.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many radiation machines were within the National Health Service; and at what locations in (a) 1983 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Information in respect of 1983 is not readily available centrally, but at the end of 1988 the number of items of specified radiotherapy machines in major NHS centres in England by region were as follows:

Region	Linear Accelerators	Cobalt Units	Orthovoltage Units	Afterloading Units	Total
East Anglian	5	3	5	4	17
Mersey	5	0	3	2	10
North East Thames	10	9	14	4	37
Northern	5	3	4	5	17
North-Western	6	1	1	3	11
North-West Thames	7	10	13	3	33
Oxford	3	4	7	0	14
South-East Thames	4	11	17	6	38
South-West Thames	1	3	3	not known	7
South-Western	9	6	13	5	33
Trent	9	4	11	4	28
West Midlands	8	7	10	3	28
Wessex	8	1	8	2	19
Yorkshire	5	3	3	3	14
Special Health Authorities	9	5	6	3	23
	94	70	118	47	329

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to him on the costs of purchasing and maintaining radiation machines within the National Health Service either by district, region or generally for each year since 1983.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of purchase and maintenance of equipment are matters for regional and district health authorities within their overall allocation of resources. Limited information on the cost of X-ray equipment and chemicals purchased and of maintenance contracts for X-ray equipment are set out in the published annual accounts of health authorities, as available in the Library.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the district health authorities and hospitals which are currently operating cook-chill catering.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that health authorities are not required to submit, on a regular basis, details of the catering systems being used in their hospitals.

Neomycin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many claims have been made against health authorities because of deafness alleged to be due to the use of neomycin spray; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Project 2000

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how the bursaries allocated to student nurses under Project 2000 will be administered; and whether they will be administered regionally or centrally;

(2) what is the anticipated amount of the bursary for a student nurse enrolling when the Project 2000 reform of nurse education is introduced;

(3) how many bursaries he intends to make available by region under the Project 2000 nursing education reforms; and if he will list them;

(4) whether, where student nurses are enrolled under Project 2000 with 80 per cent. supernumerary status and a 20 per cent. service contribution, the bursary will cover 100 per cent. of costs.

Mr. Mellor: No decisions have yet been made on the level of bursary to be offered to students undertaking project 2000-style training but we hope to make a statement shortly. In deciding the level of bursary we will need to have regard to the level of current student nurse salaries and the existing rules for mandatory student awards.

Initially, bursaries will be administered by those district health authorities selected to introduce project 2000 courses later this year. Arrangements for the longer term have yet to be determined.

Funding for project 2000 courses will be provided against carefully costed plans, and the examination of these plans will seek to identify all the necessary additional costs arising as a result of project 2000. It is not our intention in meeting these costs to allocate specific numbers of bursaries or a region by region basis on separately to identify particular aspects of the funding. The number of student nurses will continue to depend on health authorities' future demand for staff and the ability to recruit.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have nothing to add to the information that I gave to the hon. Member in my reply of 16 January at column 35.

Hospital Services, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of Health (1) if he will make a statement on the future of geriatric services at Sefton general hospital, Liverpool;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of Olive Mount hospital, Liverpool.

Mr. Mellor: The planning and development of hospital services in Liverpool is a matter for the Liverpool health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the district chairman for the information he requires.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of beds in the intensive care unit at Liverpool royal hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The Mersey regional health authority and Liverpool health authority are presently giving consideration to relocating and expanding the intensive care unit within the Royal Liverpool hospital.

Down's Syndrome

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many A-V canal defect operations were carried out on children with Down's syndrome in each of the past five years; and in which hospitals these operations took place.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not identifiable from data collected centrally. Returns of the United Kingdom cardiac surgery register show that 137 A-V canal operations were performed in 1985. We do not have information on the proportion of these operations which involved children with Down's syndrome, or the hospitals in which such operations took place.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children suffering from A-V canal defect died in each of the past five years; and how many of these also had Down's syndrome.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in exactly the form requested. Table 1 shows the number of deaths of children aged 0-14 registered in England and Wales in 1983-87 to which endocardial cushion defects (International Classification of Diseases 9th revision 745.6), which includes A-V canal defect, was assigned as the underlying cause of death.

For 1985 and 1986 all causes of death were coded, and information on the number of certificates mentioning endocardial cushion defects is consequently available. Table 2 shows, for those deaths registered in 1985 and 1986, how many death certificates for 0-14 year olds contained a mention of ICD 745.6 (irrespective of whether or not it was assigned as the underlying cause of death), and how many of those also contained a mention of Down's syndrome (ICD 758.0). Similar information is not available for the other data years.

Mental Health Review Tribunals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental health review tribunals were held (i) in the five years preceding the enactment of the Mental Health Act 1983 and (ii) in all subsequent years for which he has information (a) in special hospitals and (b) in other mental hospitals and units.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1989, c. 413]: The information is not available in the form requested prior to 1983. However the table provides the information for the years 1983-88 and, for the earlier years, shows the total number of tribunals heard in all hospitals.

Mental health review tribunals. Cases heard

Year	Special hospitals	Other hospitals	Total
1978	n/k	n/k	696
1979	n/k	n/k	780
1980	n/k	n/k	692

Homoeopathy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for homoeopathic services within the Liverpool health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Homoeopathic services for both in-patients and out-patients are provided at Mossley Hill hospital, where 10 in-patient beds are available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much benefit fraud has cost his Department in each of the years since 1979; and how many prosecutions have resulted (a) in the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) in his Department's area covering Nottingham for these purposes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No reliable estimate is available of the cost of social security benefit fraud. The numbers of prosecutions undertaken by the Department for fraudulent claims to social security in (a) Great Britain for each year since 1979-80 and (b) the area covered by the Department's four local offices in Nottingham since 1981-82 are as follows. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and those for Nottingham prior to 1981-82 are not available.

	(a) Great Britain	(b) Nottingham
1979-80	16,635	—
1980-81	18,801	—
1981-82	14,206	73
1982-83	11,334	166
1983-84	5,997	127
1984-85	6,702	97
1985-86	6,679	140
1986-87	6,603	132
1987-88	7,231	169

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what involvement his Department has had in the Broxtowe child sex abuse case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In this case the Department disclosed to the police, in confidence, details held about named individuals. This is in accordance with its policy that disclosure may be made to the police in any case which involves serious crime. Also, the Department provided information, including a written statement, to the police in connection with alleged associated offences in which the Department has an interest.

Mr. Viraj Mendis

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of social security payments during the period that Viraj Mendis was resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 24 January at column 521.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school-age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At present no provision for the child care of the pre-school age children of staff is made in this Department, although preliminary discussions on such facilities have taken place.

The Department's central office at Newcastle operates a scheme of finding day care parents for employees's children. It also runs holiday play schemes for them in the Easter and summer holidays. A holiday play scheme has been organised for the forthcoming Easter holidays for the children of staff working in HQ buildings in central London. Additionally staff working in the Whitehall area can make use of the centrally organised holiday play schemes.

Child care provision is one of the areas being examined in a review of opportunities available to women employees in the Department. We hope to base any further holiday play schemes on the experience we are gaining.

The schemes are intended to be self-supporting, but the Department has provided funding to prime them.

Departmental Offices (Closure)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to close its offices in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such proposals.

Pensions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take urgent steps to ensure that pensions increase in real terms at the same rate as inflation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have fully honoured our pledge to protect the value of the state retirement pension against price increases and shall continue to do so.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the net cost, after taking into account savings in existing benefits, of paying a non-contributory old age pension of £41·15 to each man and woman aged 65 years or over.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Benefits

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received to date either in favour of, or broadly opposed to, his consultative document proposing the replacement of board and lodging payments and personal allowances with housing benefit and income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 23 January at columns 417-18.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend the payment of mobility allowance to parents with children over two years of age, in line with attendance allowance payments; and if he will estimate the number of children who would be eligible for mobility allowance, if the regulations were changed to allow such payments.

Mr. Scott: We shall consider whether mobility allowance should be extended to children below the age of five when we are examining the findings of the surveys undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. We estimate that the reduction of the lower limit to two years of age would enable about 5,000 children to become eligible for the allowance.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider an extra costs allowance, for payment to disabled persons who incur extra costs as a result of their efforts to overcome their disability, in line with recommendations made in the Social Security advisory committee's report entitled "Benefits for Disabled Persons: a Strategy for Change."

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 19 December 1988 at columns 114-15.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will abandon the six months qualifying period for attendance allowance in respect of persons who are terminally ill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We shall look at this feature of the attendance allowance scheme when we consider the future of disability benefits in the light of the results of the OPCS disability surveys.

Benefit Offices (Staff)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present staffing by grades at the benefit offices in Doncaster and Mexborough; what was the staffing five years ago; and if he will make a statement about the projected operational strategy of these three offices for the future and its effect on the various staff grades.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Office	Principal	SEO	HEO	LOI	LOII	AA	Typing manager	Typist	Telephonist	Security officer	Messenger	Total

NIO = National Insurance Office.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the position of disabled people facing a higher cost of living as a consequence of their disability.

Mr. Scott: In the period up to July 1989 the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is publishing a series of reports on the findings of the surveys of disability in Great Britain carried out between 1985 and 1988. Two reports have already been published covering the prevalence of disability amongs adults and the financial circumstances of disabled adults in private households. Four more reports will follow. Taken together, the six reports will bring together the most comprehensive and detailed information ever collected about disabled people in this country.

I have explained that we will wait until all the results of these surveys are available before reaching any conclusion as to whether there are better ways of providing help for disabled people.

Departmental Correspondence

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if will list in the Official Report the number of his Department's letters (Form No. CH (A) 1702 REV) sent in each region of the United Kingdom; what is his Department's existing budget for this mailing campaign; how many such messages are planned to be sent in future; which benefits other than child benefit will receive the same attention in this way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Forms CH(A) 1702 REV are issued centrally to recipients of child benefit. Information is not available of numbers sent by region, but a total of some 3·6 million have been issued. No specific budget is allocated to promoting automated credit transfer and the costs are met from the social security publicity budget of £12·77 million for 1988-89. The issue of similar letters to all retirement pensioners who were not already paid by automated credit transfer has been completed and the child benefit exercise is due to finish in April 1989. We have no current plans to extend the issue of these letters to other beneficiaries.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have nothing to add to the information which I gave to the hon. Member in my reply on 16 January at column 45.

Rating Reform

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what income is taken into account in assessing a person's right to a rebate of poll tax.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A person who expects to be liable for a personal community charge or for collective community charge contributions in Scotland may claim housing benefit in the form of community charge rebate from the appropriate authority. In assessing his entitlement to rebate, the authority will calculate his income in accordance with the provisions of the Housing Benefit (Community Charge Rebates) (Scotland) Regulations 1988. All earned and unearned income is taken into account, except where the regulations provide for all or part of it to be disregarded. The rules for the calculation of income are carried forward unchanged from the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

East Midlands

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment his Department has made of the advantages and disadvantages for trade and industry in the east midlands arising from (a) the establishment or failure to establish a rail freight interchange in the east midlands and (b) the advent of 1992 and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Atkins: My officials have extensive contact with industry and commerce in the east midlands on all matters affecting the region's economic development, including those related to transport infrastructure, which are discussed regularly with the Department of Transport.

Supermarket Profits

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer supermarket profit levels to (a) the Office of Fair Trading or (b) the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: No. It falls to the Director General of Fair Trading to monitor commercial activities under the competition legislation for which he is responsible. He published a review of developments in competition in retailing in June 1985, and continues to keep the matter under close review. If the hon. Member has evidence to suggest that supermarket profit levels indicate that competition in that particular market is being restricted or distorted, he should bring it to the attention of the director general.

Special Steels (Spain)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the inter-industry agreement on special steels from Spain, referred to in his answer of 27 April 1988, Official Report, column 171, has now ended.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am informed that, following completion of the transitional arrangements for steel on Spain's accession to the European Community, the inter-industry agreement on special steels has ended.

"Releasing Enterprise"

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the rolling programme of deregulation reviews referred to in the White Paper, "Releasing Enterprise", has been determined.

Mr. Maude: I am announcing today details of the first rolling programme of deregulation reviews to be carried out by Government Departments. This carries forward commitments undertaken in the Government's recent White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm 512) which was published in November 1988.

We regard this programme of reviews as essential to keep a check on existing requirements or regulations which, although they may have seemed reasonable at the time, have become outdated, over-burdensome or simply unnecessary.

Together with the existing mechanisms we have in place for new legislation, we hope to be able to free enterprise from unnecessary Government interference.

Each year, Departments will review at least one area of their work, with an emphasis on consultation, particularly with business, at all stages. Where possible, business expertise will be brought in to assist.

The results of this programme will be reported to Parliament once it has been completed.

The first programme of deregulation is as follows:

Enterprise and Deregulation Unit

(i) Business Licensing
Review of the administration of business licences.

(ii) Fire and building review
Review of overlap of building control and fire regulations, the way the legislation is implemented and the requirements for consistent enforcement.

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

(i) Compulsory dipping of sheep against sheep scab
This will consider the burden to farmers and possible alternatives to compulsory dipping while maintaining adequate control over the disease.

(ii) Enforcement of fruit and vegetable marketing standards
Review of the EC regulations laying down marketing standards for fruit and vegetables and their impact on United Kingdom traders.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise

(i) VAT second-hand schemes
VAT is paid on the margin between the selling and purchase price with second-hand schemes. The review will examine ways of reducing the record-keeping requirements.

(ii) Export data capture
The review is to examine increasing direct trader input of export data in customs computers to bring it into line with import systems.

Department of Employment and the Home Office

(i) Work permit scheme
To ensure that the rules and operation of the scheme enable business to hire overseas non-EC staff with the minimum regulation required to safeguard the employment of resident labour and for immigration control.

Health and Safety Executive

(i) Factories Act section 139
To review the need for employers to post copies of health and safety regulations or notices at workplaces, with a view to amendment or repeal of section 139 of the Factories Act 1961.

Department of the Environment

(i) Use Classes Order part II
To review the Special Industrial Use Classes which are five groups of industries, eg chemicals, smelting and other metal treatment and animal by-products. Because of the processes involved these create particular environmental problems and the review will be done with a view to rationalisation of the Use Classes Order.

Department of Health

(i) NHS standard conditions of contract
To overhaul Health Authority procedures for tendering and contracting, with particular reference to extending competition and best procurement practices.

(ii) NHS supplies
To streamline the NHS approved supplier/contractor system under which at present each regional NHS Authority conducts its own separate vetting and appraisal.

Home Office

(i) Data Protection Act
Review of implementation of the Data Protection Act 1984, with particular regard to the impact on data users of the registration requirements.

(ii) Business licences
Review of the administration of the business licences for which the Home Office is responsible.

Inland Revenue

(i) Pay as you earn communications with employers
Full scrutiny-style review of all communications between the Inland Revenue and business about PAYE.

Office of the Minister for the Civil Service

(i) Forms
To identify the means of reducing the burden of Government forms on business and make recommendations.

Department of Social Security

(i) Inquiries of business
To simplify the way in which social security information is obtained from employers, and drop outdated requirements.

Department of Transport

(i) HGV and PSV operator licensing
To consider the scope for reducing the burden imposed by operator licensing on goods and passenger vehicle operators.

Department of Trade and Industry

(i) Steel scrap export licensing
(a) Ferrous Scrap: to review the need for export licences for all grades of steel and non-alloy scrap.

(b) Control of Stainless Steel and High Alloy Scrap Exports: to review the continuing need for an early 1980s agreement between DTI and the steel industry giving BSC first refusal on all supplies.

(ii) Regional selective assistance
To consider the possibility of a shortened and simplified offer letter for smaller cases and the extent to which payment and monitoring procedures can be simplified.

(iii) Insurance
To review the data collection requirements of this area with a view to eliminating those which are unnecessary while making the essential compliance, collection and use of data as cost effective as possible.

(iv) Copper scrap quotas
To prepare the case for the removal of the annual quota imposed by the EC on copper exports.

(v) Export procedures review implementation (with Customs and Excise and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food)
To implement the recommendations of the enterprise and deregulation unit's export procedures review.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the areas of Yorkshire which he has submitted for consideration to the European Commission under its review of the European Economic Community's structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 January 1989]: I have recommended the Commission to select for the new objective 2 of the funds the whole of South Yorkshire; the parts of Middlesbrough and Darlington travel-to-work areas that are in north Yorkshire; and the Bradford city, Kirklees borough, Leeds city and Wakefield city metropolitan districts in West Yorkshire.

I should have liked to recommend the Whitby TTWA in North Yorkshire, but the terms of article 9 of the Council regulation (EEC) No. 2025/88 do not qualify for consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parole

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Loyalist and Republican prisoners in Northern Ireland received compassionate parole during the last three years; and what was the average length of parole for each category.

Mr. Ian Stewart: During the last three years compassionate home leave was granted on 340 occasions to both determinate and indeterminate sentence prisoners. Based on their believed paramilitary affiliation, 69 were Loyalist prisoners for an average period of 11·5 hours, 136 Republican prisoners for an averge period of 12·2 hours, and 135 prisoners with no believed paramilitary affiliation for an average period of 14·6 hours. The length of a period of compassionate home leave in any individual case depends upon a number of factors, including the distance a prisoner has to travel and the mode of travel.

DNA Testing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North on 10 January, Official Report, column 502, whether mouth samples taken for the purposes of DNA testing by a swab between the lip and the gum yielded sufficient material to carry out valid DNA profiles in all cases.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1989]: Research work undertaken at the Northern Ireland forensic science laboratory has proved that a mouth swab taken from the area between the lip and gum can yield sufficient DNA material for profiling purposes. However, none of the mouth samples taken for DNA profiling has been analysed so far.

Anthony O'Doherty

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to allegations made at the trial of Sergeant Charles McCormick that Anthony O'Doherty had been supplied with weapons by the security forces; what inquiries have been carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The allegations made at the trial of Sergeant Charles McCormick that Anthony O'Doherty had been supplied with weapons by the security forces were fully investigated by the police and their findings reported to the Director of Public Prosecutions who directed that there should be no prosecution.

I regret the delay in obtaining this information for the hon. Member.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tourists visited Northern Ireland in each of the years 1983 to 1988 (a) from European countries, and (b) from North America.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 25 January 1989]: The information requested for each of the years 1983 to 1987 is given in the table. Tourist numbers for 1988 are not yet available.

Tourist numbers

Thousands

	European Countries
Year	Including[1]	Excluding[1]	North America
1983	796	29	52
1984	847	30	43

1987	860	33	57

[1] Tourists from Great Britain and Republic of Ireland.

Meat Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual total of meat imports into Northern Ireland via the overland route from the Republic.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 26 January 1989]: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise statistics sources show that in 1987 imports of meat from the Republic of Ireland into Northern Ireland totalled 108,200 tonnes.

House Searches

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses were searched in Northern Ireland by the Army, police or the Ulster Defence Regiment under (a) the Emergency Provisions Act and (b) the Prevention of Terrorism Act during 1988; and in how many house searches a warrant was sought or obtained.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1989]: Statistics are not available in respect of searches under sections 11, 13, 14 and 17 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978, or under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984. During the first nine months of 1988 a total of 2,899 premises in Northern Ireland were searched by the police and 2,712 by the Army under section 15 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978. These figures include both occupied and unoccupied premises. Warrants are not required for such searches.

ENVIRONMENT

Southwark Urban Development Area

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of the number of firms active in the Southwark urban development area in 1980, the number of people they employed and whether the employees lived in (a) Southwark and (b) the other dockland boroughs; and if he has comparable information for the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of employing establishments and employees in the Southwark part of the UDA in 1981 and 1987 were as follows:

	1981	1987
Employing Establishments	285	358
Employers	5,824	8,732

LDDC has no data for 1980; and no place of residence information for 1981. Data for 1987 will be available shortly and I will write to the hon. Member at that time.

Tobacco Dock

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Docklands Development Corporation to take steps to ensure that the shops to open in the spring at Tobacco dock employ local labour.

Mr. Trippier: No, but I understand that the operators have recruited locally and are actively encouraging shop tenants to do so.

Disabled People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of grant given by his Department to housing associations to encourage the building of disabled persons' housing units.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held by the Department. The Housing Corporation is responsible for the allocation of its capital programme to housing associations and types of scheme, within the broad framework agreed annually by Ministers. I have therefore asked the Chairman of the Housing Corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the reply of 10 November 1988, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, Official Report, column 273, if he will make a statement on the outcome so far of his Department's consideration of the Prince of Wales advisory group on disability entitled "Living Options Lottery" and, in particular, about the action he will be taking in regard to its findings.

Mr. Trippier: The report is a useful contribution to current thinking and planning on disability issues. We continue to encourage housing providers to look at ways in which they can respond more effectively to the needs and wishes of people with disabilities.

Agricultural Dwellings

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce rules to allow local authorities to tie planning permission for erection of an agricultural dwelling to a specific farm and area of land.

Mr. Chope: We are reviewing our planning guidance on agricultural dwellings and occupancy conditions in the light of our policies for diversification of the rural economy.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have been granted exemption for provision of a gipsy site under the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and for what reasons.

Mr. Trippier: None. Section 6(2) of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 which provided for exemption was repealed by section 173 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Swimming Pools (Safety)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department issues to the owners or operators of swimming pools concerning the safety of water slides, water chutes and similar apparatus.

Mr. Moynihan: The Health and Safety Commission and the Sports Council published a joint guidance booklet for owners and operators of swimming pools entitled "Safety in Swimming Pools" in 1988. My Department was consulted when the guidance was being drafted and fully endorses its contents.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 47 water treatment plants in the United Kingdom producing drinking water whose aluminium content is above European Economic Community limits; by how much each treatment plant is in excess of these limits; and if he will make a statement in respect of excess aluminium sulphate in drinking water and any connection with the brain disorder, Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Moynihan: The 43 areas where the Department has granted derogations under article 9 of the EC drinking water directive or has applied to the European Commission under article 20 for a further period of time in order to comply with the aluminium standard are as follows:

Severn-Trent Water Authority
Parts of North Warwickshire, Coventry and Nuneaton
Parts of Charnwood, Hinckley and Bosworth
Parts of Stroud District Council area
Part of Montgomery

South West Water Authority
Parishes of Seaton and Beer
Areas supplied from Tottiford treatment works
Areas supplied from Prewley treatment works
Bideford
College supply zone—Falmouth and Penrhyn
Watercombe supply zone
Higher parts of Penzance
Launceston and Callington areas
Bodmin and Wadebridge areas
Princetown
Chagford Crediton hamlets

North West Water Authority
Parts of Sefton MB
Parts of Stockport MB
Parts of Bolton MB
Parts of Tameside MB
Parts of Oldham MB
Parts of Carlisle District
Parts of Eden District
Parts of Lancaster Borough
Parts of Ribble Valley District

Yorkshire Water Authority
South East Sheffield
Central Sheffield
Parts of West Barnsley (2 supplies)
South West Sheffield
Thornton supply area (West Bradford)
Area east of Thirsk
Addingham
Parts of Dewsbury, Mirfield and Huddersfield
Part of north Bradford
Huddersfield, Holmbridge and Holmstyles area
Parts of Huddersfield
Rural area of Keighley
Reva supply area, Rombalds
Parts of Huddersfield
Rural areas west and south of Halifax (2 supplies)
Northern area of Halifax
Otley

Programmes of improvement are in hand to ensure that all supplies will comply with the aluminium standard in the directive as soon as possible.

Information as to how much each treatment plant exceeds the aluminium standard in the EC directive is not held centrally. However, in accordance with the terms of the directive the Department granted derogations (exemptions) where the aluminium is naturally occurring and applied to the Commission for delays where it is used in the treatment process up to limits which have been agreed with medical advisers.

The Department of Health's committee on medical aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water has concluded that it has not been established that a reduction in the aluminium intake of the general population would be likely to reduce the incidence of Alzheimer's disease. It considered that the associations between Alzheimer's disease and aluminium concentrations in drinking water, suggested by recent studies in Norway and the United Kingdom, were too tentative to justify changes in the use of aluminum sulphate in water treatment. Further research is important, particularly on the bioavailability of aluminium from all sources.

Rating Reform

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his latest estimate of the level of community charge in each London borough on 1 April 1990 in relation to the current average burden of rates per adult in each London borough, assuming no significant changes in levels of expenditure between the current time and 1 April 1990.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermonsdey (Mr. Hughes) on 15 December 1988 Official Report, column 726, regarding future community charge levels.

Conservation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 1 December 1988, Official Report, column 365, if he will make a statement on the aspects of his Department's programmes for conserving the environment which go wider than what can be achieved through further legislation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Many of the initiatives that we are taking in the environmental field do not require further legislation. They include steps to combat air pollution by cleaning up emissions from power stations and motor vehicles; implementing the programme of action arising from the second North sea conference; investing in research into greenhouse gases and their effects; and pressing both nationally and internationally for a reduction in the use of chlorofluorocarbons in order to protect the ozone layer.

Heritage Conservation

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from English Heritage or the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments on the effects of the new agricultural policies being adopted by the Government in response to recent European Community directives, in relation to the future of archaeology in the upland and lowland regions of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives advice from English Heritage regularly on matters affecting ancient monuments and archaeology. English Heritage themselves maintain contact with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on all such matters. We are aware of the opportunities under EC directives to take agricultural land out of production and that these can sometimes help indirectly to safeguard archaeological sites on agricultural land. Alternative land use as such is however only one approach. There is a growing awareness of the importance of archaeology in the countryside and English Heritage are closely in touch with countryside interests. A tangible result of their efforts are the positive management agreements into which English Heritage enter with land owners for the safeguarding of archaeological sites.

We are also aware of the report published by the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England and the Council for British Archaeology on the Archaeology of the Uplands in 1987. English Heritage recently published a similar document which explains some of the ways in which monuments in the countryside (including upland and lowland areas) can be preserved and maintained.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The following special advisers have been employed in my Department since 1979:

T. Baron—Special Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment on housing issues. 1 October 1979 to 31 March 1980. Seconded from another employer.

Sir Robert Cooke—Special Adviser to the Secretary of State on the Palace of Westminster, the Parliamentary Estate and other Government Buildings. 1 December 1979 to 6 January 1987. Paid directly.

E. Berman—Special Adviser to the Secretary of State on inner city matters. 4 October 1982 to 4 July 1983. Paid directly.

C. G. Mockler—Special (political) Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment. 18 July 1983 to 30 April 1985. Paid directly.

A. Tyrie—Special (political) Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment. 29 April 1985 to 3 September 1985. Paid directly.

P. R. C. Davis—Special (political) Adviser to the Minister for Local Government. 1 October 1984 to 3 September 1985. Special (political) Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment. 4 September 1985 to 31 January 1986. Paid directly.

A. R. Kerpel—Special (political) Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment. 3 February 1986 to 21 May 1986. Paid directly.

D. A. Coleman—Special (political) Adviser to the Hon. William Waldegrave and Mr. John Patten. 16 September 1985 to 12 June 1987. Paid directly.

P. J. Rock—Special (political) Adviser to Mr. M. Howard and the Hon. William Waldegrave from 13 July 1987 to 25 July 1988. Special (political) Adviser to Mr. M. Howard and the Right Hon. J. Selwyn Gummer. 26 July 1988 to date. Paid directly.

Mrs. K. C. Ramsay—Special (political) Adviser to the Secretary of State for the Environment. 22 May 1986 to 17 May 1987. 15 June 1987 to date. Paid directly.

It is not the practice to give information which would reveal the salaries of special advisers as they are individually negotiated in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Sporting Events (Tickets)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the sale of black market tickets at major sporting events.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand the hon. Member's concern about the sale of black market tickets. In particular, I am concerned about the damage that such ticket sales for major football matches can do to the efforts of the police and clubs to segregate rival fans effectively. However, it is not yet clear that a practicable and enforceable legal answer to this problem can be found. It way well be that what is needed is tighter control by the organisers of sporting events over the distribution of tickets and the imposition of sanctions against those found abusing those controls. Following a report from the chief trading standards officer of Liverpool, difficulties over the allocation of tickets for last year's FA cup final have been referred to the Football Association by the Office of Fair Trading. I understand the OFT are awaiting a detailed response from the FA.

Ex-GLC Housing (Somerset)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will inquire of the Housing Corporation the reasons why it recommended that ownerships of the former Greater London Council seaside and country homes in Taunton should pass from the North British housing association to the Knightstone housing association of Weston-super-Mare sites, then to the Redland housing association of Bristol.

Mr. Trippier: Any proposal by NBHA to dispose of any of the seaside and country homes would require the Housing Corporation's consent.

House Conditions (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes in Liverpool are without basic amenities; and what percentage (a) of the total housing stock, and (b) the private rented sector fall into this category.

Mr. Trippier: Local authorities report estimates of the number of dwellings lacking one or more basic amenities in their annual housing investment programme returns. These do not distinguish between rented and owner-occupied dwellings in the private sector. A copy of Liverpool's 1988 return (HIP1) is in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many house improvement grants were issued in Liverpool over the past year.

Mr. Trippier: Numbers of renovation grants paid to private owners and tenants by local authority area, for the first half of 1988, appear in table 4 of "Local Housing Statistics" No. 87. A copy is available in the Library. A total of 323 grants were reported paid in the September quarter of 1988.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations from Leicester city council indicating dissatisfaction as to the amount of central Government grants to the council.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am not aware of any recent representations relating to grants for which DOE is responsible.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he now proposes to reduce the amount of chlorofluorocarbons in aerosol propellants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The British aerosol industry expects to phase out the non-essential use of chlorofluorocarbons as propellants on a voluntary basis by the end of 1989.

Property Services Agency (Funding)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limit on the Property Services Agency's civil vote and also to the running cost limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XX, vote 19, will be increased by £71·152 million from £2,000 to £71·154 million. The increases are needed to finance the acquisition of freehold office accommodation and the internal restructuring of the agency ahead of fully commercial operation in 1993. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and therefore will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

In addition, PSA's civil running cost limit is being increased by a net £3·599 million to £143·678 million to cover expenditure on internal restructuring. This increase includes an offsetting reduction of £1,000 to meet corresponding increase in the running cost limit of the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) for the transfer of costs for recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 competition 1988.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of his Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after school care, is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; and what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Ridley: The experimental child care scheme first held at the Cardington residential training centre in August 1987 is being repeated this year. The Department is considering what scope there is for further provision without continuing subsidy.

New Towns

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a copy of the recent 7(1) submissions from Warrington and Runcorn development corporation affecting Appleton Cross and Grappenhall Heys available to the hon. Member for Warrington, South.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 January 1989]: I have not yet received section 7(1) submissions under the New Towns Act 1981 from Warrington and Runcorn development corporation relating to the areas to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to reject all 7(1) submissions from new towns in the last nine months of their existence.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 January 1989]: No. The Government's objectives for the remaining new town development corporations require section 7(1) powers under the New Towns Act 1981 to be exercised until the corporations' proposed wind-up dates.

Aluminium

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is being financed by his Department into aluminium in water and in man-made milk products; and whether any guidance on safe limits has been issued.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 January 1989]: My Department has not funded research specifically into aluminium in water although the water industry is carrying out research into the use of aluminium as a coagulant.

Guidance on safe limits has not been issued. However, the EC drinking water directive sets a standard of 200 micrograms of aluminium per litre in drinking water. Responsibility for research into aluminium in milk products lies with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Water

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Southern water authority is fully meeting its obligations under European Community directives; what expenditure is required to remedy any deficiencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 January 1989]: In general, Southern water authority meets its obligations under the EC directives relating to water quality.

Not all the identified bathing waters comply at present with the bathing water directive and we are discussing with the authority its investment plans to bring the remainder up to the required standard.

TRANSPORT

Fennell Report

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made to implement recommendation 46 of the Fennell report that the annual inspection by the London fire brigade of underground stations and tunnels should continue and unsatisfactory features be remedied and reported on within six weeks and that copies of the reports be sent to the chief safety inspector and railway inspectorate and that arrangements be made by London Underground to publish the reports in consultation with the London fire brigade and London regional passengers committee.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that London Underground Ltd. has agreed a new procedure in response to this recommendation. The London fire and civil defence authority will send LUL a formal report of each inspection. Copies will be sent to the railways inspectorate and the chief safety inspector. LUL will respond to the LFCDA within six weeks. A copy of the report, together with LUL's response, will be passed to the London regional passengers' committee and to the House of Commons Library. This procedure will take effect from the receipt by LUL of the next LFCDA annual inspection report.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made to implement recommendation 141 in the Fennell report that London Underground shall review its proposals for the working of the underground ticketing system at stations and take advice from the railways inspectorate and the London fire brigade; and if he will take steps to ensure that for all such final proposals which are at variance with the railway inspectorate's or London fire brigade's advice a reason shall be publicly given by London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground Ltd. had taken the advice of the London fire brigade and of the railways inspectorate on this matter prior to the publication of Mr. Fennell's report. However, London Regional Transport has, at my request, appointed consulting engineers to carry out an independent study of the Underground ticketing system. The study will focus on the implications for passenger safety and will be completed by the end of April. LRT intends to discuss the results of this review with the railways inspectorate and the London fire brigade.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department has made in response to recommendation 120 of the Fennell report that the law on fire certification as it relates to underground stations should be clarified.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has made an order under the Fire Precautions Act 1971, that was laid before Parliament on 27 January, under which underground railway stations will require a fire certificate unless regulations which are to be made under section 12 of the 1971 Act apply to them.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made to implement recommendation 48 of the Fennell report that locked emergency gates shall be fitted with alarmed panic bars; and what trials have been carried out to see if they work under panic conditions following an incident which for passenger safety has to be responded to at great speed and where a large number of people are involved.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that London Underground has identified 24 exits and 11 sites at stations with lifts where it is necessary to fit alarmed panic bars. London Underground considers that a new design of gate may be necessary in order to accommodate the panic bars, and a prototype is being installed at Moorgate for evaluation in February. If the prototype is successful, London Underground will install the alarmed panic bars at the sites identified by 30 June 1989.

Exit Barriers (London Underground)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct London Underground Ltd. and London Regional Transport to make available a copy of all relevant correspondence, reports and documentation communicated between themselves and the fire authorities for London about the consequences for safety of automatic exit barriers installed at London underground stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is for London Regional Transport, London Underground Ltd. and the London fire and civil defence authority to consider whether to make available such exchanges.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make clear the likely sources of funding for environmental protection for communities and land potentially affected by a high-speed Channel tunnel rail link; if he will clarify the position with regard to the use of Government funds for such purposes in the light of section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The environmental protection measures which BR will need to take as part of its proposals for a new line will form part of the cost of the project which will have to be met from increased BR revenues. Government subsidy is ruled out by section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there is any contractual arrangement or other commitment between Her Majesty's Government or British Rail with the French Government or French rail authorities on the speed of trains from the Channel tunnel to London, and over other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1989]: There are no agreements between the British and French Governments on the speed of Channel tunnel trains within the United Kingdom. The contractual arrangements between BR and SNCF are a matter for them, but I understand that they provide for the shares of revenues to reflect relative contributions towards the overall quality of service and hence its commercial success. BR would accordingly receive an increased share of the joint revenues from the service and pay a smaller share of the costs if the current journey time between London and the tunnel were reduced.

London Regional Transport (Director)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the date on which Dr. Ridley, former director of London Regional Transport, vacated the premises from which he carried out his official duties on behalf of London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: Dr. Ridley's official duties as a member of London Regional Transport terminated on 10 November 1988, when he resigned. Any temporary use of facilities granted subsequently by LRT at its discretion to help him clear up his affairs is a matter for LRT.

Coastguard

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to recommence recruitment for professional, trained coastguards; and if he will list in the Official Report the number of vacancies occurring at each registered coastguard rescue centre indicating the length of time for which any vacancy has lasted.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 January 1989]: A recruitment campaign is currently in progress. Advertisements will appear shortly both in trade magazines and selected newspapers in order to reach suitably qualified and experienced candidates. The main thrust of this campaign is to attract candidates who are prepared to fill vacancies on the mainland of Scotland and in the Scottish islands.

Particulars of vacancies as at 1 January 1989 are as follows:

Coastguard District	Number	Since
Shetland	3	15 November 1988
		12 November 1988
		4 March 1988
Pentland	1	5 October 1988
Moray	5	Watchkeeping duties cease on 30 March. Vacancies will not be filled.
Tyne/Tees	2	20 June 1988
		26 July 1988
Yarmouth	4	11 November 1988
		15 August 1988
		18 August 1988
		19 September 1988
Thames	1	30 April 1988
Dover	3	7 May 1987
		4 April 1988
		31 July 1988
Milford Haven	1	8 February 1988
Liverpool	1	15 November 1988
Belfast	4	1 February 1988
		20 February 1988
		9 November 1987
		25 November 1988
Oban	1	5 December 1988
Stornoway	2	4 March 1988
		28 September 1988

Moray MRSC will close on 30 March 1989.

All other vacancies are planned to be filled by promotion, transfer or recruitment.

LRT (Fares)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate in the Official Report the overall increase in percentage of fares charged by London Regional Transport for each fare increase since January 1984, together with the respective increase in the cost of living index for the relevant preceding period.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The information requested is as follows. As a result of the increased use made of travelcards and capitalcards, the fare charged per mile travelled has remained broadly constant in real terms over the period 1984-85 to 1988-89.

	Annual fare increases Per cent.	Annual cost of living increase (using RPI) Per cent.
January 1985	[1]8·5	[1]7·8
January 1986	6·5	5·5
January 1987	4·0	3·9
January 1988	9·5	3·3
January 1989	12·4	[2]6·8

Note: All figures indexed from January the previous year except as noted below.

[1] Figures indexed from previous fare increase in May 1983.

[2] December 1988 prices indexed to December 1987 (January 1989 figures not yet available for comparison with January 1988).

ENVIRONMENT

Palace of Westminster (Chandeliers)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now completed the investigations referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North, 10 January, Official Report, column 508.

Mr. Chope: Not yet, but I shall ensure that the advice is provided to the Select Committee as soon as it is available.

Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking in response to the Countryside Commission's report asking for a change in water privatisation plans to protect 300 sites it lists as being of conservation and recreational value and 15 sites warranting special protection because of their national importance which are owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) on 19 January.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the measures he proposes to limit takeovers of water companies will apply to the Coquet water board; what information he has on the present ownership and control of this undertaking; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Coquet water board will not be affected by the recently announced measures limiting takeovers of statutory water companies. It was wound up by the Newcastle and Gateshead Water (Coquet Water Board Dissolution) Order 1983, and its liabilities were taken over by the Newcastle and Gateshead water company. It now has no separate existence.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to assess whether the acquisition of a stake in the Folkestone water company in partnership with AIPF by the Southern water authority will lead to greater competition.

Mr. Moynihan: The special provisions for water mergers announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 January do not apply to mergers involving water companies with assets of less than £30 million. The continued independence of such companies is not essential to comparative competition, which those provisions are designed to safeguard. The acquisition of shares in smaller water companies continues to be subject to fair trading legislation, the administration of which is the responsibility of my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will indicate the increases in water charges proposed by the water authorities for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The water authorities are facing demands from the public and from Government to meet increasingly stringent quality standards for drinking water, for our rivers and for coastal waters. These improvements cost money.

The Government have therefore agreed to a 20 per cent. increase in capital expenditure in 1989-90 which will enable the authorities to continue to move towards these higher standards. I announced this to the House on 2 November, when I also expressed the expectation that increases in charges for next year should, on average, be kept to single figures.

Several of the water authorities' chairmen would have preferred even more ambitious programmes of investment next year. However, in considering the need for increases in water charges I have given full weight to the interests of the consumer and the need to avoid sharp increases in any one year. I have also had to take into account the national pressures on the construction industry and the need to avoid unreasonable demands which would lead to higher construction prices.

The discussions I have held with the water authority chairmen enable me to confirm that their proposals on charges for 1989-90 will result in an average increase of under 10 per cent., with individual authorities' average increases ranging from 7 to 13 per cent.

I am confident that the figures we have agreed will enable the water authorities to make good progress towards our targets for improved environmental standards in the coming year. They represent an appropriate balance between charges and borrowing next year, taking account of the authorities' long-term financial requirements. Once the industry is privatised, it will no longer have to compete for public funds; it will be free to raise finance on the markets.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Southern water authority has given him an undertaking that it will not use minority stakes in statutory water companies' to block either the removal of limits on dividends or the companies' conversion to plc status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 30 January 1989]: No such undertaking has been given.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken by his working party on football hooliganism of the arrangements existing in Scotland, particularly those introduced as a consequence of the McElione report; what are the reasons for his non-adoption of any of these arrangements in England and Wales; or what steps he has taken to encourage their adoption.

Mr. Moynihan: The McElione report of 1977 made a number of recommendations on the conduct of football matches in Scotland in relation to the Scottish football authorities and Scottish football at that time. Many of these recommendations were taken up in Scotland and similar steps have been taken in England and Wales, including restrictions on the sale of alcohol and the segregation of rival groups of supporters.

My working party was established to review the main principles of a national membership scheme for football supporters. This is not an issue on which the McElione report made recommendations.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that any charges levied for the proposed football supporters' identity cards do not depend on the holder's willingness to allow personal details to be used for marketing purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I will discuss this with the Data Protection Registrar and the Football Membership Authority at the appropriate stage.

Beaches (Pollution)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those beaches in England which failed to meet the European Community directive on bathing water quality standards in the last year for which data is available; when it is planned for each of these beaches to meet these standards; and what is the estimated cost in each case.

Mr. Moynihan: The information on the quality of English bathing waters during the 1988 bathing season is at present being collated. I expect to announce the results before the start of this year's bathing season. We are currently discussing with water authorities their plans for improving those bathing waters which do not yet meet the required standards.

Water Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce legislation to make it an offence to allow polluted drinking water to come through a tap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Gentleman to clause 51 of the Water Bill, which will make it an offence for a water undertaker to supply to any premises water that is unfit for human consumption.

Homeless People

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department's review of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 will be published.

Mr. Trippier: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) on 17 January at column 150.

Woking Local Plan

Mr. Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his inspector's report on the Woking local plan.

Mr. Howard: Inspectors are appointed by the Secretary of State to conduct inquiries into objections to local plans. However the inspector reports direct to the local planning authority.

This particular inquiry raised a number of very complex issues and, together with necessary site visits, extended over some 17 weeks. The inspector is making every effort to complete his report as soon as possible and expects to submit it to Woking borough council for its consideration by July.

Subsequent publication of the report is then a matter for the local planning authority itself.

Exeter Airport

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1988, Official Report, column 47, he will now make an announcement in respect of the future development of Exeter airport.

Mr. Ridley: I hope to announce my decision later this month.

Urban Programme

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be available for local authorities in the urban programme in 1989-90; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am today announcing initial urban programme resource allocations for 1989-90, totalling over £245 million. The resources will be allocated to the 57 urban programme partnership and programme authorities. The money will be used to support projects which will encourage economic development and environmental improvements to rebuild confidence and encourage private investment in those areas.

The urban programme is one of the Government's range of programmes to help revitalise our inner cities. It complements the Department of the Environment's other urban initiatives including the urban development corporations, city grant and derelict land grant. Together these programmes will provide £674 million for inner city regeneration in 1989-90.

The urban programme allocations made today are provisional; formal allocations are made after inner area programmes have been assessed and approved. Allocations will not be confirmed until authorities have provided a satisfactory annual report on achievements through the UP in 1987-88. Additional resources sometimes become available for redistribution in the course of the year which may lead to outturn being different from these initial allocations.

I attach considerable importance to the improvement in the management of the urban programme and am grateful to authorities for their continuing commitment to and achievements in the urban programme management initiative.

The allocations to individual authorities are as follows.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether on appeal against refusal of planning permission for the conversion of redundant farm buildings, the guidance given in his Department's document PPG7 dated January 1988 will prevail when that conflicts with an earlier county structure plan.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Planning appeals are determined on their merits, taking account of all material planning considerations. Where the provisions of a structure or local plan clearly conflict with more recently issued national guidance they will usually be accorded less weight in that process. An up-to-date development plan may justify acceptable local variations from national policies.

New Towns

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that all section 7(1) submissions from new town development corporations be sent contemporaneously to hon. Members whose constituencies are affected.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 January 1989]: My right hon. Friend is under a statutory obligation to consult local authorities before deciding on applications from new towns development corporations for planning consent under section 7(1) of the New Towns Act 1981. I shall ask corporations also to ensure that they have satisfactory arrangements in place for informing hon. Members of such applications, where they have expressed an interest.

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from Football League clubs regarding arrests made in the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons; and if, in the light of such representations, he will amend his table of arrests and the annex to his letter of 21 December 1988.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 January 1989]: I have received letters from three Football League clubs about the arrest figures for the 1987-88 season. One Football League club has written to me about the arrest figures included in the list of incidents of football hooliganism in 1988-89, annexed to my letter of 21 December 1988 to parliamentary colleagues.

Re-examination of the 1987-88 statistics has revealed that the local police made one transcription error in the figures notified to ACPO. The number of arrests at Leicester City football club should be amended from 81 to 31. The revised total of arrests at league matches in the 1987-88 season is 6,097. The correct entry for Leicester City is the table given in my reply of 19 December to a question from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes), at columns 55-60, is therefore:

Leicester City
Matches	22
Total attendance	223,049
Total arrests	31
Average attendance per match	10,139
Average arrests per match	1·41
Arrests as a proportion of attendance (Per cent.)	0·01

A revised version of the illustrative incidents list was made available on publication of the Football Spectators Bill.

PRIME MINISTER

Taxation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to reduce total taxation on those individuals and families where it has increased since 1979 to the level prevailing in 1979.

The Prime Minister: It is our policy to reduce the burden of taxation as and when it is prudent to do so.

Negative Vetting

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will make a statement on the use of negative vetting of (a) civil servants and (b) others working directly or indirectly for the Government;

(2) if she will publish a table showing how many civil servants have been negatively vetted in each Government Department from 1979 to the current date;

(3) if she will publish a table showing the total number of civil servants as part of their duties involved in negative vetting investigations of employees and potential employees in each Department from 1979 to the current date;

(4) if she will publish a table showing the total number of negative vetting investigators employed in each Department from 1979 to the current date;

(5) if she will place in the Library official forms issued to negative vetting investigators from each Government Department;

(6) if she will describe the procedures used in negative vetting;

(7) how many civil servants in each Government Department failed negative vetting in each of the last 10 years;

(8) which civil service or other Government-appointed posts require negative vetting;

(9) what guidelines to Government Departments are issued on how negative vetting of employees and prospective employees is to be undertaken;

(10) how individual civil servants are informed that they have failed negative vetting procedures; and what rights of appeal they have.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to give detailed information about security vetting procedures.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what involvement his Department has had in the Broxtowe child sex abuse case; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service conducted the prosecution of members of the Taylor family.

In cases such as this it is necessary that the jury should hear the evidence of the young children involved, both in chief examination and in any cross-examination. I welcome the successful use of a video link facility to minimise the distress which testifying inevitably causes to the victims of these abhorrent crimes.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General what child care provision the Attorney-General's and Lord Chancellor's Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after school care is provided for employee's children aged five years and over; and what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years.

The Attorney-General: A pilot scheme for children of school age will run from 13 to 17 February 1989 and 28 March to 7 April 1989 in London. Together with other Whitehall Departments, staff in my Departments and the Lord Chancellor's Department have been circulated with an invitation to place their children with the scheme.

My Departments and the Lord Chancellor's Department are considering proposals to provide nursery facilities for children of pre-school age. It is likely that some nursery facilities will be in operation within the next two years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

A-level Examinations

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students have taken German, French, and Spanish at A-level standard over the last three academic years; and what was the success rate in each year, showing the figures by region and in percentage and numerical terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows. The figures relate to the numbers of pupils attempting A-level examinations, and the proportion who passed.

Education (No. 2) Act 1986

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have implemented section 58 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: All local education authorities in England and Wales are subject to section 58, which empowers an LEA to pay travelling and subsistence allowances to governors of schools and establishments of further education, in accordance with the provisions of a scheme made by it.

I do not have any information about the number of authorities which have implemented schemes.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance the Government will give to local education authorities not opposed to section 58 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: The fact that an LEA may decide not to introduce a scheme for the payment of travelling and subsistence allowances does not mean that it is "opposed" to the section. It merely shows that the LEA has chosen to give priority to other areas of expenditure, which may, in the circumstances of the particular LEA, be entirely proper.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to make mandatory the powers under section 58 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: We believe that it should be for local education authorities, in determining their expenditure priorities, to decide whether to introduce a scheme for the payment of travelling and subsistence allowances to governors.

We hope, nevertheless, that LEAs will provide allowances where not to do so would cause genuine hardship or would discourage people from becoming governors.

Open University

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the membership of the Open university visiting committee.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have appointed Mr. Kenneth Dixon, the chairman of Rowntree plc, to be chairman-designate of the committee. He will take over as chairman on 1 January 1990.

I am most grateful to Sir Austin Bide, who has been chairman of the visiting committee since it was set up in 1982. My predecessor and I have benefited greatly from the committee's advice and from its thorough analysis of the problems and opportunities which the Open university has faced over the years. I take this opportunity to thank Sir Austin for his enormous contribution in establishing the committee so successfully.

I have also appointed Professor Michael Hart, professor of physics at Manchester university and Mr. Chris Tipple, director of education for Northumberland, to be members of the committee for three years, until December 1991.

ENERGY

British Coal (Survey)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the pits that have been involved in British Coal's market research survey carried out by Research Services of Wembley; the number of interviews carried out and the nature of the questions asked; when the results will be made public and if he will make a statement as to whether this research has been undertaken in preparation for the privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a management matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Coal Reserves

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give his Department's latest estimate of coal reserves in Great Britain.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The British Coal Corporation is responsible for making any assessments of coal reserves. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mining Industry (Scotland)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list each deep-mined colliery in Scotland, giving details of the rates paid by each colliery to its local authority;

(2) how many jobs have been lost in the Scottish mining industry since 1984; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give the number of employees at British Coal headquarters in Edinburgh each year from 1984 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Industry (Vetting Policy)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the vetting of prospective employees working at British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The security procedures of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels plc towards prospective employees are similar to those employed in the Civil Service for comparable positions.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will initiate discussions with (a) the chairman of British Gas and (b) other bodies within his Department's responsibility about the effect of the imposition of value added tax on non-domestic construction work following the decision of the European Court on 21 June 1988, including the effect on partnership schemes to redevelop redundant inner city land with the private sector.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 21

June 1988 at columns 957-58. Customs and Excise has consulted interested parties on how the judgment of the European Court could be best applied. Action to protect public sector construction programmes, by allowing where necessary compensating adjustments to the relevant central Government expenditure provision, has already been taken in consultation with relevant bodies.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of the tax yield if value added tax was imposed at 25 per cent. on those goods which were formerly taxed at this rate under purchase tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not readily available at the level of detail required.

Tax Revenue

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional revenue to the Exchequer in (i) 1989-90 and (ii) a full year if (a) there were a 5 per cent. increase in duties on cigarettes, tobacco and alcoholic drinks, (b) value added tax were levied on new construction at 15 per cent., (c) the taxable benefit of company cars were increased by 25 per cent. and (d) mortgage interest relief were limited to the standard rate of tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: (a) It is estimated that the net additional revenue yield from a 5 per cent. increase in the duties on cigarettes, tobacco and alcoholic drinks would be £355 million in 1989-90 and £385 million in a full year;

(b) It is estimated that, if value added tax were levied on new construction, both domestic and non-domestic, at 15 per cent., the net additional revenue yield from the private sector would be £1,280 million in 1989-90, and £1,670 million in a full year. Because of the uncertainties involved in estimating the effects of such a change, particularly on the housing market, the figures should be taken as no more than a general indicator of the additional revenue which would accrue;

(c) It is estimated that the revenue yield from a 25 per cent. increase in the scale charges for company cars would be £120 million in 1989-90 and £140 million in a full year;

(d) It would be premature to provide an estimate for 1989-90 of the additional revenue from the restriction of mortgage interest relief to the basic rate, since the yield will depend on the amount of mortgage lending and the level of interest rates as well as on the 1989-90 income tax rates and bands. The revenue yield in a full year at 1988-89 levels of lending, interest rates and tax rates would be £330 million.

Wages and Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average wage (a) for the United Kingdom and (b) in the Nottingham area; and what is the total tax burden in each case for each of the years from 1979 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested for Great Britain was provided to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 10 January 1989 at columns 633-56. Data for average earnings in Nottinghamshire are available for April each year in the new earnings survey. They are as follows, with estimates of the implied burden of income tax and NICs. No data are available which would permit any estimates of the burden of indirect taxes to be made.

April	Average earnings (£ per week)	Income tax and NICs as percentage of average earnings
		Single person	Married man, no children
1978	88·50	31·1	27·2
1979	101·50	29·2	25·5
1980	122·60	30·3	26·7
1981	138·40	32·0	28·8
1982	147·80	32·6	29·2
1983	158·40	32·5	28·8
1984	164·30	32·0	27·9
1985	174·70	31·7	27·6
1986	194·40	31·3	27·5
1987	210·20	30·0	26·6
1988	227·30	28·5	25·3

Notes:

1. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence in Nottinghamshire.

2. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax units have no other tax reliefs apart from the standard allowances. Earners are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

European Monetary System

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list the factors other than the prevailing exchange rates which will be taken into account in judging when the time is right for Britain to join the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: All relevant factors will be taken into account.

GNP

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross national product has gone to the Exchequer since 1979; where this came from; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Information on taxes and social security contributions as a percentage of gross national product is published each year in "The United Kingdom National Accounts" (table 15.7 in the 1988 edition). The publication is available in the Library of the House.

IMF (Meetings)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings he has had with the International Monetary Fund since becoming Chancellor; and if he will give the dates of such meetings and the topics discussed.

Mr. Lilley: Since becoming Chancellor, my right hon. Friend has attended 10 meetings of the International Monetary Fund—including the interim committee, development committee, and in the autumn, the joint annual meetings of the IMF and World bank—on the following occasions:

25-30 September 1983;
12-13 April 1984;

22-27 September 1984;
17-19 April 1985;
9-11 April 1986;
28 September—3 October 1986;
9-10 April 1987;
27 September—1 October 1987;
14-15 April 1988;
25-29 September 1988.

The discussions have covered a wide range of subjects summarised in the communiqués of the interim and development committees, copies of which have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

VAT and Car Tax

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue or duty received by Her Majesty's Government in the last financial year from value added tax and car tax, as applicable on (a) mopeds, (b) small motorcycles and (c) cars of 1,000 cc or under.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not available at the level of detail required.

BP (Shares)

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the effect on his estimates of public sector debt repayment and of privatisation proceeds of the purchase by the British Petroleum Company plc of 790 million of its shares currently owned by the Kuwait Investment Office.

Mr. Lawson: At their extraordinary general meeting on 31 January 1989, the shareholders of BP approved the purchase of 790 million of BP shares from the KIO. Following the purchase, these shares will be cancelled and the KIO's holding will be reduced to 9·9 per cent. of BP's issued share capital, as recommended by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

The KIO will pay the final instalment of £830 million on these shares in March rather than on the due date of 27 April 1989 and will be issued with share certificates forthwith. The Treasury has agreed to these arrangements because the powers available to BP to purchase its own shares apply only to fully-paid shares and not to partly-paid shares or shares held in the form of interim rights.

Following the KIO's payment, the public sector debt repayment in 1988-89 will be £830 million higher than otherwise. There is no other effect on the PSDR in 1988-89. BP will be liable to advance corporation tax on the purchase and it has stated that the KIO is entitled to an equivalent tax credit from the Inland Revenue. BP can offset this ACT against its future corporation tax bill, but only if its United Kingdom taxable income is high enough in the years ahead. The cost of any such offset would in any event be far less than the gains from the Government's decision in October 1987 to proceed with the sale of shares in BP at the underwritten price of 330p

The present estimate of £6·1 billion privatisation proceeds in 1988-89 will be increased to approximately £6·9 billion. There is some flexibility on the timing of privatisation receipts, and the central estimate of total proceeds remains at £5 billion for 1989-90.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the provisions of the Government Trading Funds Act 1973 will be applied to next steps executive agencies.

Mr. Major: Trading funds can already be created for agencies which meet the requirements in the Government Trading Funds Act 1973. However, some bodies including those which are directed by statute to provide a service and where the fees are fixed by regulation, are at present outside the scope of the 1973 Act. Some agencies which are at present outside its scope would be able to operate more efficiently under the more commercial regime. We therefore propose to bring forward legislation at the earliest opportunity so that trading or agency funds will be available in such cases. This change would add significantly to the range of financial regimes available to agencies and make a significant contribution to the implementation of the Government's next steps policy.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Recipient Countries

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information is available to his Department country by country on life expectancy rates in those countries that are actual or potential recipients of British overseas aid;

(2) what information is available to his Department country by country on child mortality rates in those countries that are actual or potential recipients of British overseas aid.

Mrs. Chalker: Information on life expectancy and infant mortality rates is included in the "United Nations Demographic Yearbook" for 1986, published in 1988. Information on child mortality is included in the UNICEF report on "The State of the World's Children", 1987, also published in 1988. The rates for all developing countries are given in the following table.

Life expectancy at birth and infant mortality are taken from the UN Demographic Yearbook for 1986, published in 1988.

Child mortality statistics are taken from a report by UNICEF called The State of the World's Children 1987, also published in 1988.

Data is the most recent that is readily available.

Data that is not available is shown by —.

Note:

The list of countries is taken from the Development Assistance Committee's list of Developing Countries.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is available to his Department for each of those countries that are actual or potential recipients of British overseas aid as to the numbers of people who would be considered to be in a state of starvation or semi-starvation by international bodies such as the World Health Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: Few developing countries have nutritional monitoring systems. Statistics on nutritional status are therefore unreliable. The United Nations sub-committee on nutrition has used data from many sources to produce the world nutrition situation report, which provides a regional perspective on nutritional status. The World Bank also publishes national estimations of daily per capita calorie supply as a percentage of calorie requirement. This gives an indication of the proportion of people in any country who have too few calories to maintain health.

Southern Africa

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he will propose at the coming meeting of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will be attending the annual donors meeting of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference in Angola on 2-3 February. An announcement will be made shortly on the contents of his statement.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nursing Staff

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff at all levels are employed in Downshire hospital, Downpatrick; how many of these staff have been advised of their new grades under clinical grading review; and how many appeals have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 474 nursing staff employed in Downshire hospital Downpatrick all of whom have been advised of their new grades. Informal review of grades was requested by 180 staff, of whom 14 initiated this review by using the formal grievance form.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff at all levels are employed in Downe hospital, Downpatrick; how many of these staff have been advised of their new grades under the clinical grading review; and how many appeals have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 117 nursing staff employed in Downe hospital, Downpatrick all of whom have been advised of their new grades. Informal review of grades was requested by 38 staff, of whom 25 initiated this review by using the formal grievance form.

Student Numbers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the student numbers in the diploma in the advanced study of education in each of the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 in (a) Stranmillis college of education and (b) St. Mary's college of education, Belfast.

Mr. Needham: Before 1985-86, colleges of education offered the advanced certificate in education. From that year, it has been gradually replaced by the diploma in the advanced study of education.

The numbers of full and part-time students receiving support from the Department of Education for Northern Ireland for either course are as follows:

[1] A further 58 students are undertaking modular courses which could lead either to the DASE or the Advanced Certificate.
[2] The numbers for St. Joseph's College of Education are included with St. Mary's for 1983-84 and 1984-85. The colleges amalgamated on 1 September 1985 to form St. Mary's College.

Theatre Sisters

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the hospitals in Northern Ireland where no theatre sisters' posts have been regraded under the new grading structures and the number of theatre sisters who have not received a regrading.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1989]: All theatre sisters' posts in Northern Ireland have been regraded under the clinical grading review.

Strip Searches

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons Armagh and Maghaberry in each year for which information is available up to and including 1988, giving the number of times each person was searched, if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, including which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under each of the following headings (a) making a remand appearance at a trial, (b) attending trial, (c) inter-prison visit and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Details of the numbers of, and reasons for, strip searches made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons. Armagh and Maghaberry were first recorded in April 1983. Information on the number of times each prisoner was searched could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The remaining information requested is as follows:

THE ARTS

Georgian Theatre, Richmond, Yorks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assistance his Department will be providing to Richmond council and the Yorkshire Arts Association to keep open the Georgian theatre at Richmond, North Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Georgian theatre at Richmond receives regular funding from Yorkshire Arts and from all three local authorities: North Yorkshire county council, Richmond shire district council and Richmond town council. I understand that the theatre management has plans to improve the level of private funding.

CIVIL SERVICE

Next Steps

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress is being made with the next steps initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The next steps initiative is making good progress. The responsible Ministers have now established the first three agencies, and another 30 (plus three in the Northern Ireland Civil Service) have been announced as candidates. These are listed. Together they cover nearly 200,000 people, or about one third of the Civil Service. I expect at least four more to be set up before the summer recess; these are likely to include the resettlement units, the employment service, the QE II conference centre and, in my own Department, the Civil Service college. The project manager is continuing his review of Departments' activities, against the Government's decision that to the greatest extent practicable the executive functions of Government should be carried out by agencies.

As the House knows, the purpose of next steps is to improve management in the Civil Service. It enables the Minister responsible for each agency to define more clearly the objectives and tasks required for the execution of policies, and the resources within which this must be done. People in agencies will be better able to tailor management structures and practices to the specific needs of their work, will have better defined jobs and objectives, and greater personal responsibility and accountability for achieving them. The aim is better value for money and better service to the public.

As the Government said in their reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee in November, they share the Committee's view that decentralised agencies offer scope for delegating more responsibility to managers for operational matters. The actions we have already taken since the announcement of the initiative by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister demonstrate the importance that we attach to ensuring that this should take place to the greatest extent possible, within a framework governing the agency's operations. On 10 November my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury announced, following a recommendation of the TCSC and after consultation with the Public Accounts Committee, that agency chief executives would take on significant accounting officer responsibilities. In a further development, aimed at permitting a more commercial regime in suitable cases, my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury has today announced that the Government will seek legislation at the earliest opportunity to amend the Government Trading Funds Act 1973 to apply also to agencies through the medium of agency funds.

The action plan to secure improved management training which the project manager has drawn up is now being implemented in Departments, and good progress is being made. This is helped by the £1 million challenge funding scheme which we announced in November and which is now coming into effect.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouses

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the major differences between current United Kingdom and EEC standards for slaughterhouses; and what are the major differences between current United Kingdom and United States Department of Agriculture standards for slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: EC legislation on red meat slaughterhouse standards applies to plants in member states which engage in intra-Community trade. At present, the United Kingdom and other member states set rigorous standards for plants which supply only their national markets. Hygiene requirements and meat inspection procedures in the United States do not differ significantly from our own domestic legislation; however EC and United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) rules on construction and layout are more closely specified and detailed. Flexibility in these respects is possible for domestic production where current monitoring of operations and enforcement are in the hands of local enforcement authorities. In fact one significant difference is that we depend largely on environmental health officers in domestic plants but EC and USDA rules require veterinary supervision in export plants.

EC legislation on poultry meat slaughterhouse standards applies to all licensed poultry slaughterhouses in the UK. There are no major differences between that legislation and USDA requirements.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he has given to local environmental health officers in their supervision of slaughterhouses; what standards he expects them to ensure in those slaughterhouses; what letters, circulars, or other representations he has made to local authorities about slaughterhouses in the last two years; and what requests he has made to local authorities for monitoring reports on slaughterhouse standards and for returns of human and financial resources applied to slaughterhouse supervision.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Environmental health officers (EHOs) are employed by local authorities which have responsibility for enforcing slaughterhouse hygiene and inspection standards required by:
The Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 as amended; The Meat Inspection Regulations 1987; and The Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1987.

Ministry veterinary officers visit all slaughterhouses to monitor standards and to give advice and guidance tailored to the circumstances of individual premises. This advice and guidance is confirmed by letter to the local authority concerned.

The resources employed are a matter for local authorities. Returns are not collected. We have the highest regard for EHOs and their professionalism.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what standards of hygiene, equipment, maintenance, personnel training, waste disposal and the comfort and handling of animals are applied to slaughterhouses; and what additional standards are required by the European Community Commission for meat exported to the European Economic Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The standards relating to hygiene, inspection, equipment, maintenance, waste disposal and animal welfare which must be observed in slaughterhouses are laid down in:
The Slaughterhouses Act 1974;
The Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 (as amended);
The Meat Inspection Regulations 1987;
The Authorised Officers (Meat Inspection) Regulations 1987;
The Meat (Sterilisation and Staining) Regulations 1982 (as amended);
The Slaughter of Animals (Prevention of Cruelty) Regulations 1958; and
The Slaughter of Pigs (Anaesthesia) Regulations 1958.

Training of slaughterhouse personnel is a matter for the industry and the nationwide scheme run by the Institute of Meat is recognised by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications.

In addition, meat for intra-Community trade must comply with the conditions of the Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1987. These implement EC directive 64/433 on intra-Community trade in fresh meat and require that meat is produced in premises approved by my Department as meeting the detailed requirements as to structure and layout which those regulations require. Supervision and certification by an official veterinary surgeon is also required. This is not an additional requirement but a different one; domestic slaughterhouses rely largely on environmental health officers whose professional status is of the highest order.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate his Department has made of the number of qualified veterinary surgeons required to operate a system of meat hygiene in abattoirs at a level comparable to standards currently in existence in Norway and Germany.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I do not accept that the presence of veterinary surgeons is essential to guarantee satisfactory standards of hygiene in abattoirs. Our arrangements for non-exporting plants, operating under the supervision of environmental health officers, are capble of ensuring satisfactory standards.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase expenditure on measures that would help to limit the incidence of food poisoning.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have a series of measures to tackle the salmonella problem. Provisions will be made for the resources necessary to implement them. In addition the joint MAFF/Department of Health national food hygiene education campaign will be launched early this year.

Rats

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is investigating the causes of the increase in rats in urban and rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food does not have responsibility for rats in urban areas, but the Department maintains an extensive research programme to ensure continued efficiency of rat control in rural areas. Work is not directed at monitoring rural populations.

Tourism

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much financial assistance has been given by his Department towards tourism for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Under the agricultural improvement scheme introduced in 1985 grants for tourism and craft facilities were available in the less-favoured areas. The farm diversification grant scheme, introduced in January 1988 extended the list of eligible activities and offered grants of 25 per cent. on capital investments both inside and outside the LFA. Over two thirds of applications under that scheme have been for tourism and recreation projects. Grant approved for craft and tourism and farm diversification projects in England has been:

1986	161,293
1987	186,181
1988	2,587,902

In addition, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service has continued to offer free general advice to individuals and to marketing groups such as the Farm Holiday Bureau.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department took to prevent distribution of animal feed contaminated with salmonella from those protein processing plants identified as being contaminated by salmonella during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 30 January 1989]: My official have routinely inspected all protein processing plants to monitor their compliance with the requirements of the Protein Processing Order 1981 and, when salmonella has been found in samples of their product, notices have been served on the plant requiring compliance with the bacteriological standard within a time limit. In all cases resampling has been carried out until a salmonella-free product has been produced. A new statutory provision to stop the supply of products from processing plants where salmonella is found, is being made today.

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the action he is taking on salmonella in eggs.

Mr. Ryder [pursuant to the reply, 18 January 1989, c. 214]: An order has now been made giving powers to Ministry inspectors to prevent movement of processed animal protein out of premises where salmonella contamination has been detected by testing samples of the product. The order is an amendment to the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1981.

Hormones

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of illegal use of steroid growth promoting hormones to fatten cattle have been reported to him in each of his Department's regions in 1987 and 1988; and in how many cases fines were levied.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Four cases of suspected illegal use of hormone growth promoters, all in Wales, were investigated by officers of the Ministry's legal department in 1988. In one case it was established that treatment took place before the hormone ban was introduced. In the other three cases the evidence was not conclusive enough to warrant prosecutions.

Pesticides

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Government's future proposals with regard to the implementation of joint research programmes involving the agrochemical industry into the factors influencing contamination of land and water supplies by pesticides.

Mr. Ryder: Following the Autumn Statement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer my Department announced extra funding of £2 million in 1990-91 rising to £5 million in 1991-92 for strategic and public good research in a number of areas within its responsibilities including protection of the environment. We are currently preparing programmes internally and will be taking into account the opportunity to involve industry in joint programmes where this is appropriate.

British Food and Farming Year

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on what Her Majesty's Government are doing to support the 1989 British Food and Farming Year; and how this fits in with the European Community common agricultural policy.

Mr. Ryder: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has assisted in the planning of British Food and Farming Year from the outset. It is taking part in many of the year's special events including the Hyde Park festival in May where there will be a major exhibition relating to the Ministry's work over the last 100 years.

The year will show how much a modern and market-oriented food and farming industry has to offer, which is very much in keeping with recent developments in the common agricultural policy.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the monthly figures for measured total beta radioactivity from the discharge from Sellafield sea pipeline and Hunterston A and B as derived from the operators' returns to his directorate of fisheries research; and the figures for the authorised discharge limits in each case, for each year since 1983.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Authorised discharge limits for both Sellafield and Hunterston for the period 1983-87 are published in the Ministry's annual reports "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Monthly records of radioactivity discharged from these sites are obtained by Departments in confidence. Annual data of discharges and of their radiological consequences are published.

DEFENCE

ROF Bishopton

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants are employed at ROF Bishopton; and what discussions have taken place with them and their trade unions as to their future employment.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are 80 civil servants based at ROF Bishopton (including part-timers and Ministry of Defence police), and informal discussions have been taking place with them and their trade unions about their future employment.

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of civilian Ministry of Defence employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are currently examining the feasibility of providing child care facilities for the children of MOD civilian staff in central London, Bath, and other locations throughout the United Kingdom. This examination will include the basis of the funding of such schemes. The schemes being examined include creches and school holiday play schemes. In conjunction with other Government Departments, we are supporting a school holiday play scheme in the Westminster area.

Lesser Horseshoe Bats

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost incurred by the Royal Air Force in converting an air raid shelter at its station at Caerwent, Gwent, into a home for lesser horseshoe bats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: There was no cost incurred by the Royal Air Force as a result of this project as it was carried out by apprentices from the Army apprentices college, Beachley, to practise their trade skills during their deployment to the station on exercise. This work was wholly consistent with the established conservation policy of the Ministry of Defence.

Vetting Policy

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy towards the vetting of prospective employees of defence contractors;

(2) what is his policy towards the vetting of labourers on Ministry of Defence construction sites.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is a condition of contract that, before anyone is employed on an MOD contract who may gain access to classified information, the prior agreement of MOD is sought.

Economic League

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the Economic League providing speakers for training courses for military personnel.

Mr. Neubert: No directives have been issued concerning the involvement of members of the Economic League in service training courses. It is my policy to give course directors maximum freedom to select speakers on the basis of the value they are likely to contribute to the course, subject only to the usual security considerations.

Patchett-Sterling Mark 5

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Sterling model L24A1, also known as the Sterling mark 5, has been issued to or used by the Army serving in Northern Ireland, since 1971.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the L34A1 (the commercial version of which is known as the Patchett-Sterling mark 5). So far as can be ascertained from the available records, this weapon has not been issued to or used by the Army in Northern Ireland.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 543, if the Army Board considered references to emotional stability or only reference to a mental problem.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend on 20 July 1988 at columns 709-10 or to my own answer of 10 January 1989 at column 543.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 543, who was the assistant adjutant-general who interviewed Captain Holroyd; and where the interview occurred.

Mr. Neubert: It is not the policy to name individual officers. The records do not show where the interview occurred.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 543, in what way Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) was informed of the findings of the special confidential report; and by whom.

Mr. Neubert: According to our records, Captain Holroyd was shown a photocopy of the special confidential report on his arrival at the depot regiment, Royal Corps of Transport. It is not our policy to name individual officers.

AIDS

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards his Department takes to ensure that no one shown by tests to be HIV-positive or to have AIDS is allowed to work in the kitchens or galleys of defence establishments of Her Majesty's ships.

Mr. Neubert: No individual in the armed forces, known to be HIV-positive or to have AIDS, is currently employed in the kitchens of defence establishments or the galleys of Her Majesty's ships. There is, however, no evidence that the human immunodeficiency virus can be transmitted through the handling of food.

Skyguard Radar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for the purchase of additional Skyguard radar systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 January 1989]: There are at present no firm plans to purchase additional Skyguard radar systems. In addition, I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces on 25 January at column 652. The results of these trials are still under consideration.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

KAGISO Trust

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the raid by security police on 19 January on the offices of the KAGISO Trust, a partner in the special programme of the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: We are opposed to the harassment of non-governmental organisations engaged in peaceful opposition to apartheid. The South African Government are well aware of our concern to see the continued development of the EC positive measures programme.

Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill (South Africa)

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to seek to dissuade the South African Government from further proceeding with the Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill.

Mrs. Chalker: We have told the South African Government that we hope that they will drop their plans for foreign funding legislation. We continue to make clear to them the unacceptable nature of any legislation which affects the provision of aid funds to the black community. We are closely watching developments on the "Disclosure of Foreign Funding" Bill and remain in touch with groups who are likely to be affected if the Bill becomes law.

Western European Union

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes Her Majesty's Government are seeking to each article of the modified Brussels treaty on Western European Union; and why.

Mr. Waldegrave: No decision will be taken on possible changes to the modified Brussels treaty until the review of the treaty agreed by the WEU ministerial council on 14 November has been completed.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards appointing members of the European Parliament as representatives to the Western European Union assembly.

Mr. Waldegrave: We believe that the membership of the WEU assembly should be drawn from national parliaments as defence questions do not fall within the competence of the European Community. Any change in the method of appointment would require an amendment to the modified Brussels treaty.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to consult the United Kingdom delegation to the Western European Union assembly on the changes he intends to propose to the modified Brussels treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Western European Union ministerial organs intend to follow up the session organised by the French Institute des Hautes Etudes de Defense Nationale in November 1988 in order to make European security requirements better known to public opinion.

Mr. Waldegrave: The European session organised by the Institut des Hautes Etudes de Defense Nationale will be followed by similar events organised by other member states including by the United Kingdom in 1990. The WEU secretariat will provide support for these events.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposal by M. Rocard, Prime Minister of France, to set up a European higher defence studies institute in the framework of Western European Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have noted the proposal to establish a new WEU institute in Paris. We believe that the WEU secretariat in London and the WEU agency in Paris should be located together in Brussels and that, in this context, a small agency working inside the secretariat general could provide valuable research support.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Western European Union council intends to pursue the political impetus it declared it wished to give to arguments co-operation; what relevant initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken in the council and with what result.

Mr. Waldegrave: The WEU council has kept the question of armaments co-operation under review with a view to intensifying such co-operation and maintaining in Europe a technologically advanced industrial base. The WEU also wishes to encourage the activities of organisations such as the IEPG which has already given a new political impetus to arms co-operation.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Western European Union council's assesment of the decision announced by the Soviet Union to make major unilateral reductions in its conventional forces in Europe and start destroying its chemical weapons in advance of the end of the Geneva disarmament conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: The recent decisions and announcements of the Soviet Union have been discussed within the WEU and are the subject of continuing analysis. But no formal collective assessment has yet been made.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government intend to intervene actively in the Western European Union council to ensure that the latter defines and makes public, in accordance with the assembly's recommendations, a joint position by Western European Union countries on specific aspects of arms limitation, giving priority to conventional and chemical disarmament; and when he expects that the Western European Union member countries will make public a collective position on this matter.

Mr. Waldegrave: The WEU council is a forum for exchanging views on security and arms control issues. The responsibility for defining and publicising joint positions on specific aspects of arms limitation rests with NATO.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Western European Union assembly has not yet been informed in any detail either of the existence or of the essential points of the collective position adopted by the Western European Union council on the Start negotiations.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not the function of the WEU council to adopt a collective position on the Start negotiations. These negotiations are bilateral between the United States and the Soviet Union. It would not be appropriate for European members of the Alliance to adopt positions in a forum where the United States is not present.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government are considering following up the Western European Union assembly recommendation inviting Governments of member countries to keep the press and public opinion better informed about disarmament issues, including the relationship between arms reductions and defence spending.

Mr. Waldegrave: We agree that the Governments of WEU member states have a responsibility to keep their press and public opinion well informed about disarmament issues. We already attach importance to such information work and will continue to do so.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Govemment's policy towards the Western European Union assembly's recommendations regarding the definition of conditions for setting up a European satellite agency in the Western European Union with the initial task of verifying a future conventional arms control agreement; and if he plans to take appropriate steps in the Western European Union council.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have noted with interest the assembly's recommendations. We agree that satellite verification may be part of a verification regime for a future conventional arms control agreement. The first step will be to undertake further work to ascertain how effective satellite verification would be. The work of the WEU agency could play a useful role in this.

Berenfeld Family

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian Government about the plight of the Berenfeld family of Moscow, who first applied for an exit visa in 1977.

Mr. Waldegrave: As far as I can establish, the Berenfeld family has not previously come to our attention. But if my hon. Friend could provide details of this case I would be happy to consider making representations to the Soviet authorities about the Berenfelds.

Pakistan and Afghanistan (Mine-clearing)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the outcome of the report to the United Nations co-ordinator for Afghan aid by a team of British Army explosive experts on an international mine clearing operation in Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Mr. Waldegrave: The team returned from their assessment visit to Pakistan on 17 October. Their report on the land mine problem in Afghanistan was forwarded to the United Nations co-ordinator who has indicated that he will make specific proposals for British help in training refugees in mine awareness and clearance.

Mozambique

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to increase the scale of military assistance to Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: No decision has been taken to alter the level of British military assistance to Mozambique. The United Kingdom currently trains Mozambican troops at Nyanga in Zimbabwe at the rate of three companies (some 360 men) per year; these troops are then dedicated to the protection of the Limpopo railway line. We have also donated a quantity of non-lethal defence equipment (Land-Rovers, communications equipment, boots, and so on) to assist in this task. A small number of Mozambican officer cadets undergo training in the United Kingdom.

WALES

Midwives

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities in Wales which anticipate a shortage of midwives over the next five years; what is the estimated shortage; and what are the measures he is proposing to overcome it.

Mr. Grist: Midwifery requirements were examined in the first round of the manpower resource planning exercise undertaken by the Health Service in Wales last year. The purpose of the exercise, initiated by the manpower steering group established by the Department in 1986, is to identify future manpower requirements and enable action to be taken to meet these requirements at the all-Wales level.

Aggregation of district health authorities' returns shows that, at the all-Wales level, shortfall in the number of qualified midwives over planned staffing levels varies from between five and 27 (whole-time equivalents) over the period to 1992. Compared to a planned staffing level in excess of 1,200, these projected shortfalls are not considered sizeable. It would not be appropriate to list individual district figures, given the tentative nature of some of the first round plans.

Based on the all-Wales figures, a report on the outcome of the first planning round has recommended that a direct entry midwifery training scheme should be considered which is currently being addressed by the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, and that DHA cross-boundary training should be explored on an all-Wales basis. It is hoped that a diploma in midwifery based on Mid and South Glamorgan health authorities will start this year at the Welsh college of medicine, and that this will eventually lead to a degree in midwifery.

Beaches (Water Quality)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those beaches in Wales which failed to meet the European Community directive on bathing water quality standards in the last year for which data are available; when it is planned for each of these beaches to meet these standards; and what is the estimated cost in each case.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The results of the 1987 bathing water survey, the latest for which data are presently available, are held in the Library of the House. The information in respect of 1988 is at present being collated and we expect it to be available shortly.

Welsh Office officials are currently discussing with the Welsh water authority their plans for improving those waters which do not yet meet the required standards.

Bilingual Policies

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is made in the rate support grant settlement to allow local authorities to develop bilingual policies.

Mr. Grist: Central Government support towards bilingual education comes from two main sources. Specific grants support expenditure on certain local authority schemes approved by the Secretary of State. Our intention for the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90 is that such grants should amount to £1·5 million. Further spending by local authorities on bilingual education is eligible for rate support grant, but information on expenditure supported in this way is not held centrally.

Handicapped Children (Educational Needs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards ensuring that there is adequate provision within the Welsh and bilingual schools system in English-speaking parts of Wales to provide for the special educational needs of Welsh-speaking handicapped children.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for local education authorities to consider the pattern of education in their areas and to determine provision for all children with special educational needs.

YTS

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people there were in Wales who had left school either at Easter 1988 or summer 1988 who had not obtained work, further education or a place on a YTS scheme by 31 December 1988; and if he will make a statement on the future of the Christmas guarantee.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the destination of all school leavers is not available. However, the Government guarantee the offer of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds not in full-time education or employment whenever they apply; this replaces the "Christmas guarantee".

The new guarantee is effectively being met in Wales and at 12 December 1988 a total of 581 young people were on bridging allowance awaiting a suitable YTS place and 4,221 places remained available at 31 December.

Non-agricultural Land

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of acres of land in Wales which are not in actual use for agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: 916,000 acres.

Pigmeat

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to formulate long-term plans to increase pigmeat production in Wales, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Pigmeat production will benefit from better marketing, and we are doing our best to encourage this.

Welsh Language Board

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any organisations have expressed any reluctance to co-operate with the Welsh Language Board because of the membership of the board of a former council member of the Economic League.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Sex Abuse (Broxtowe)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what involvement his Department has had in the Broxtowe child sex abuse case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The investigation of alleged child sexual abuse is an operational matter for the chief officer of the police force concerned.

Tote

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his plans for the privatisation of the Tote.

Mr. John Patten: No decision on the future of the Tote will be taken until Lloyds merchant bank has completed its current feasibility study on privatising it. We hope that the study will be concluded well before Easter, but the Government will then need to give full consideration to the outcome before any announcement could be made.

DSS (Fraud Investigators)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct police forces not to co-operate in the passing of information to the Department of Social Security fraud investigators.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The police may need to liaise with social security fraud investigators from time to time when, for instance, evidence of social security fraud comes to light in the course of police inquiries into other matters, or when the social security fraud investigators refer a case to the police because of its gravity.

Civil Emergency Planning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the most recent civil emergency planning questionnaire was returned to NATO's senior civil emergency planning committee; and if he will summarise the responses in the categories (a) governmental readiness, (b) food and agriculture, (c) industry, (d) manpower, (e) civil communications, (f) energy, (g) civil air transport, (h) inland surface transport, (i) ocean shipping and (j) civil defence.

Mr. John Patten: The civil emergency planning questionnaire is completed by NATO members every four years with an interim review two years afterwards. The United Kingdom returned its most recent questionnaire on 1 June 1988. The document is principally concerned with civil support for the armed forces and is classified.

Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many complaints from prisoners were (a) received and (b) investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in each year from 1980 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers of complaints from prisoners in respect of which the Parliamentary Commissioner sought a report from the Home Office between 1980 and 1987 were as follows:

	Numbers
1980	10
1981	10
1982	7
1983	3
1984	9
1985	9
1986	3
1987	4

Gipsies

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the Public Order Act 1986 has been invoked against gipsies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available.

Police Forces (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inquiry into the extent of sex discrimination in employment in police forces, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Chief officers of police are aware that the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 applies to the police and that, subject to the specific exceptions provided by section 17(2), any sex discrimination in the treatment of police officers is unlawful.

Breath Tests

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to possible changes to police powers in respect of roadside breath tests.

Mr. Hurd: The current powers to stop vehicles and to require roadside breath tests are contained in the Road Traffic Act 1972. Under section 159 a police officer may stop any vehicle at any time; and under section 7 a breath test may be required:

(a) where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has alcohol in his body; or

(b) where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has committed a moving traffic offence; or

(c) where there is reasonable cause to believe that the driver has been involved in an accident.

These powers rely on the use in combination of two widely separated sections of the 1972 Act. The courts have held that it is lawful for these powers to be used together. However, there may be benefit in clarifying the position by bringing together the two powers in one section. This would secure express endorsement by Parliament of the use of the powers and would make them more readily understandable to the motoring public.

The police service had, until recently, maintained that current powers were sufficient for the effective enforcement of drinking and driving legislation. This view was accepted by successive Governments. However, the associations of chief police officers of England and Wales and of Scotland reviewed their policy during 1988 and have proposed that the legislation should be changed to allow police officers to require a breath test at any time without requiring any grounds for suspicion.

The associations argue that current powers place unnecessary constraints on breath testing; and that there should be no necessity for a police officer to establish grounds for suspicion before requiring a breath test. They suggest that an unrestricted power would allow chief constables to deploy their resources more effectively in deterring and detecting offenders by targeting their enforcement effort on particular places, at times of day or on groups of drivers. It is implicit in this argument that the powers to test would be exercised in a targeted way, and that the use of any wider discretion than at present would not involve random testing.

The associations also argue that extended breath testing powers would be an appropriate response to changes in public opinion towards drinking and driving. They suggest that the public would now consider extended powers acceptable and desirable in the interests of deterring and detecting offenders and protecting themselves as potential victims of drunken drivers.

The Government consider that a decision on possible changes to police powers should not be taken without an opportunity for full public consultation. The three options under consideration, and the main relevant arguments can be summarised as follows:

(i) To make no change to existing police powers

Existing powers provide the restriction that although the police can stop the motorist without cause they cannot test unless there is reasonable cause to suspect that the person has consumed alcohol or has been involved in an accident or committed a moving traffic offence. This is consistent with the principle in other areas of police intervention, such as the powers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 to stop and search or arrest, that the powers rest on reasonable suspicion that an offence may have been committed.

(ii) To consolidate existing powers

This would be achieved by bringing together in one section the two separate powers contained in section 7 and 159 of the 1972 Act to clarify current powers and to seek express parliamentary endorsement of their use in combination. It would allow better public understanding of the powers which enable the police to stop and test on the basis of clearly stated legislative provisions, while preserving the current safeguards. It would not, however, make any substantive change to current powers.

(iii) To introduce unrestricted powers to require a breath test

This would allow chief constables the complete discretion which they seek and would allow a police officer to stop and to require a breath test from any motorist at any time. This would in theory permit random testing, although it is likely that the powers would be exercised in a targeted way. It would provide an enhanced deterrent in the knowledge that any driver could be stopped and tested at any time. Much would depend on the sensible exercise of discretion by individual officers.

I welcome views on these three options. Anyone who wishes to comment may do so in writing to F5 division in my Department at 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT, by 30 April 1989.

Data Protection

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider seeking to amend the terms of the Data Protection Act 1987 to (i) set guidelines as to the transfer of information by registered data users to unregistered users and (ii) to enable the Data Protection Registrar to prosecute Government Departments.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Albert Baker

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made for resettlement plans for Mr. Albert Baker, Her Majesty's prison, Long Lartin, 241254 on his release.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The terms on which a life sentence prisoner is to be released can only be settled close to the time of release. The first formal review by the local review committee and the parole board to consider whether to make a recommendation to the Secretary of State for release is normally three years in advance of the expiry of the period which the prisoner can expect to serve to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. In Mr. Baker's case this is still some time ahead and it would therefore be premature to consider the suitability of any release plan.

BBC (Vetting)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the use of vetting of potential employees of the British Broadcasting Corporation in (i) non-sensitive posts and (ii) sensitive posts;

(2) if he will make a statement on the use of vetting of current employees of the British Broadcasting Corporation in (i) non-sensitive posts and (ii) sensitive posts.

Mr. Renton: The Government believe (as have successive Governments over a long period) that it is in the national interest for the BBC to apply certain necessary security procedures. A review of these procedures was undertaken by the director-general of the BBC in 1985. This led to a clarification of the criteria for their application and ensured that the number of posts affected by them is kept to the necessary minimum. The BBC alone decides whom to appoint to any post within the corporation, and no external agency has a right of veto on the appointment or promotion of any member of staff.

Special Branch

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will define the role and purpose of special branch.

Mr. Hurd: The functions of special branches were set out in the published guidelines issued by the Home Office on 19 December 1984.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards information held by special branch being passed on to (i) commercial firms and (ii) employers' organisations.

Mr. Hurd: The published guidelines on the work of a special branch which were issued on 19 December 1984 make it clear that information held by a special branch should not be passed to commercial firms or to employers' organisations.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of accountability systems operating for special branch.

Mr. Hurd: The published guidelines on the work of a special branch which were issued on 19 December 1984 state that all members of a special branch are responsible, as is any other member of the force, to the chief officer of the force through the head of the branch and any intervening supervisory ranks in the force structure. Like other aspects of the management of police forces, these arrangements are subject to inspection under the inspection arrangements appropriate to the force in question. Any deficiencies are drawn to the attention of the chief officer of the force.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy towards links between special branch, the Economic League and the uniformed police;

(2) what is his policy towards links between special branch and (i) private security firms and (ii) private investigating firms.

Mr. Hurd: Relationships between special branches and outside organisations are governed by the principles set out in the Home Office guidelines issued on 19 December 1984.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much from the total police budget was allocated to special branch for each year from 1979 to current date.

Mr. Hurd: The allocation of resources to special branches is a matter for the chief constable of each force concerned and this information is not held centrally.

Police National Computer

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the use of the police national computer by private security firms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to give the private security industry access to the police national computer.

Immigrant Residents (Financial Affairs)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the following information on the financial affairs of immigrant residents in the United Kingdom is kept on the Home Office computers (a) income, (b) social security payments and welfare benefits and (c) mortgage commitments; whether such information is currently being collected; if any such information is available to immigration officials at ports of entry to the United Kingdom; whether any such information will be made available in the future via the Government data network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No such information is held or is planned to be held on Home Office computers. The use of all personal information held on computers in the Home Office is controlled in accordance with the provision of the Data Protection Act 1984. Within the immigration and nationality department there are some 30 registrations of computer systems under the Act. It is open to an individual to make an application for disclosure of information held under section 21 of the Act. Details of these registrations are held by the office of the Data Protection Registrar.

Prevention of Terrorism (Advisers)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the fees paid to advisers appointed under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Hurd: The current daily fee for advisers appointed under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 to consider representations against exclusion is £94.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the number of association football matches played at Wembley stadium during the 1987-88 season, (b) the total attendance during the season, (c) the total arrests in association with these matches, (d) the average attendance per match, (e) the average number of arrests per match and (f) the arrests as a proportion of the attendance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 26 January 1989]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information is as follows:

	Wembley stadium 1987-88
Number of association matches played	14
Total attendance	859,935
Total arrests	551
Average attendance per match	61,424
Average number of arrests per match	39
Arrests as a proportion of attendance	1:1,561
Arrests as a percentage of attendance	0·06

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have dropped out of employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: By the end of November 1988, the latest date for which information is available, 23,100 people had left the programme earlier than planned. Many of these people were transferees from previous programmes and so had received the benefit of a longer period of training and practical experience.

Mr. Robert Pearce

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Mr. Robert Pearce, employed at Canvey Island unemployment benefit office, whose appeal for reinstatement was successfully heard on 6 September 1988, will be reinstated.

Mr. Lee: The Department has decided not to accept the recommendation of the Civil Service appeal board to reinstate Mr. Pearce and has asked the board, in accordance with the provisions of the pay and conditions of service code for civil servants, to determine an appropriate compensation payment.

Training Managers

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the training managers who have been investigated or who are under investigation by his Department.

Mr. Nicholls: No training managers in employment training are under investigation by the Training Agency. All training managers are subject to financial and operational monitoring by Training Agency officials.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the National Council for Vocational Qualifications will define the levels of competence and training above level 4; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications has reported good progress on involving the professions in the development of levels I to IV of the national vocational qualification framework. The Government and the council therefore agree that the time is now right for the council's remit to be extended to include standards and qualifications above level IV. We have therefore asked the council to proceed with work above level IV in those sectors where all the significant professional bodies are willing to be involved on a voluntary basis. However, whilst the council will therefore now take this work forward with the relevant organisations, we have made clear that the council's first priority must continue to be the establishment of the framework up to level IV.

Tourism

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much funding under the Development of Tourism Act 1969, section 4, has been approved for each regional tourist board for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The total assistance offered by the English tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, for each year since 1983 in the area covered by each regional tourist board is as follows:

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the changes in statutes since the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 which have the effect of shortening working hours or improving working conditions for both sexes.

Mr. Nicholls: In the legislation for which my Department is responsible there have not been any changes in statutes which are known to have had the direct effect of shortening working hours. All new regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 are intended to improve working conditions.

Employment Training (Child Care Allowance)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the ET child care allowance is not available to married women.

Mr. Nicholls: Child care payments can be made available for married women on employment training provided they are lone parents. Help with child care costs is available to all lone parents regardless of their sex or marital status.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women have taken up the child care allowance on ET.

Mr. Nicholls: Comprehensive information is not yet available. Information on the number of trainees from whom child care payments are made will be regularly collected from March and the first results will be available at the end of April 1989. Early indications suggest that over 2,000 lone parents have joined employment training and many of these people will have received help with child care costs.

Working Hours

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the restrictions on the working hours of 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) France and (b) Greece.

Mr. Nicholls: According to the International Labour Office "Conditions of Work Digest", volume 5, 2/1986, these are as follows.

In France persons under the age of 18 can work a maximum eight-hour day and 39-hour week and their hours must not exceed the normal daily and weekly hours of adult workers in the establishment. Five extra hours a week can however be allowed in certain circumstances. Young persons must also be allowed time for requirements of vocational courses and they cannot work more than four and a half hours without a break. They must have 12 consecutive hours nightly rest and they cannot be employed on statutory public holidays except on work that is continuous. Sixteen and 17-year-olds are also subject to the restrictions on hours of work applying to all workers.

In Greece nightwork is prohibited for young workers up to the age of 17 in industrial enterprises, although there are a few exceptions. There are also restrictions on hours of work applying to all workers.

Employment Protection Act

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider seeking to amend the terms of the Employment Protection Act 1975 to protect individuals who are refused employment because of information given about their political views before being formally appointed.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Job Clubs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the latest figures held by his Department (a) on the number of people finding jobs as a result of attending jobcentre job clubs, (b) on the numbers of people finding jobs as a result of attending an agency job club, (c) on the average number of people going through each jobcentre job club and (d) on the average number of people going through each agency job club.

Mr. Lee: The latest figures held by the employment service are as follows:

(a) during 1987-88, a total of 35,371 people found jobs as a result of attending a jobcentre job club. The 1988-89 figure (up to December 1988) is 29,102;

(b) during 1987-88, a total of 21,709 people found jobs as a result of attending an agency job club. The 1988-89 figure (up to December 1988) is 24,262;

(c) during 1987-88 the average number of people going through a jobcentre job club each year was 114. The latest average figure for 1988-89 is 96, and

(d) during 1987-88 the average number of people going through an agency job club each year was 67. The latest average figure for 1988-89 is 69.

Training Programmes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the targets against which he proposes to measure quality in the monitoring of training programmes in the "Training for Employment" White Paper.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Quality monitoring on employment training is based on three complementary approaches. First, training agents and training managers are required to achieve approved training organisation status; secondly, their performance will be measured against a range of specific indicators; and thirdly, inspections will be carried out by the training standards advisory service. The quantifiable performance indicators are currently being developed by the Training Agency and will be published once they have been agreed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

NATO

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom representatives designated to form part of the staff of the NATO central supply agency in transition to war and in war.

Mr. Newton: This information is classified.

Hearing Aid Council

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which bodies he consults when making appointments to the Hearing Aid Council.

Mr. Forth: My Department consults the Society of Hearing Aid Audiologists and the Hearing Aid Industry Association about the appointment of members representing dispensers. The following organisations are consulted about the appointment of members representing the interests of the hard of hearing or who have specialised technical knowledge of deafness or audiological technical knowledge:

The British Association of the Hard of Hearing
British Association of Teachers of the Deaf
The National Deaf Children's Society
The Royal National Institute for the Deaf
Age Concern
Help the Aged
British Association of Audiological Physicians
British Association of Otolaryngologists
Institute of Laryngology and Otology
British Association of Audiological Scientists
British Society of Audiology
Department of Health

In addition, it is open to any member of the public with genuine involvement in the dispensing of hearing aids or with the hearing impaired or who has specialised technical knowledge of deafness to make nominations. All nominations are considered on their merits.

Mail Order Catalogues

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation requiring mail order companies to take all reasonable steps to ensure that persons applying for catalogues are over 18 years of age.

Mr. Forth: No.

Trade Marks Office

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to hear from the trade marks office committee of the EEC regarding the outcome of London's bids to host the European Community trade marks office.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission produced a short list of four possible locations (including London) for the Community trade marks office in 1987. The final choice will be made in the regulation setting up the Community trade marks system which rests with the Council of Ministers. The decision requires unanimity and it is not possible to say when it is likely to be reached.

Business Shops Pilot Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the criteria used in deciding which towns and cities participate in the Government's business shops pilot scheme.

Mr. Maude: In choosing locations, we decided on a range particularly to cover urban areas, and to give wide experience of different areas with different new business profiles. We also included locations which would enable pilot studies to be undertaken in a variety of organisations which already provide services to business, in order to build, wherever possible, on existing provision and avoid potential duplication and confusion.

The locations chosen, with the host organisation in parenthesis, are as follows:

1. Glasgow (Scottish Development Agency)
2. Merthyr Tydfil/Aberdare (MADE—Merthyr-Aberdare Development Enterprise)
3. Manchester (Small Firms Centre)
4. Newcastle (joint venture—ENTRUST and local city council)
5. Reading (Small Firms Centre)
6. Doncaster (DonBAC—Doncaster Business Advice Centre and Enterprise Agency)

Funerals

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will take steps to require funeral directors to make their price lists readily available and, in particular, to supply them to those who come into immediate contact with bereaved people so that bereaved families have ready access to comparative information;

(2) what action he is taking about the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading that there should be made generally available maximum information on what is or might be involved in arranging funerals;

(3) what action he is taking about the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading that the National Association of Funeral Directors should indicate, within six months from the date of the report, the specific steps it proposes to take in order to achieve greater compliance with its code of practice;

(4) if he will take steps to require all funeral directors to publicise the availability of a simple basic funeral;

(5) what action he is taking about the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading that the National Association of Funeral Directors should redefine the specifications of the basic simple funeral, and then publicise its availability;

(6) if he will take steps to require all funeral directors to provide accounts which specify individual charges for the main services provided;

(7) what action he is taking about the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading that the code of practice of the National Association of Funeral Directors should require funeral accounts to specify the individual charges for the main services provided;

(8) what action he is taking about the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading that funeral directors should provide doctors, hospitals, registrars and others who come into immediate contact with bereaved people with a supply of their price lists.

Mr. Forth: The right hon. Member refers to recommendations made in the recent report by the Office of Fair Trading on funerals. The recommendations are addressed primarily to the industry and the director general will be discussing their implementation with the National Association of Funeral Directors.

I look forward to learning the outcome of these discussions in due course.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what factors the Office of Fair Trading attributes its findings that people over 65 years arranging a funeral were offered a basic funeral less often than others, received less advice and were more likely to receive no price information at all, and that widows and widowers also received less advice and were less likely to be given written estimates.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I will ask him to write to the right hon. Member.

Company Records

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the particular grounds he uses to assess whether to agree to an application from a company to withhold information on any foreign subsidiaries from its public records, according to schedule 5(10) to the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Maude: The criterion against which the Secretary of State considers application for exemption from disclosure is whether the disclosure of the information would be prejudicial to exports or to overseas earnings.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many companies he has granted permission to withhold information from their public records on subsidiaries registered in South Africa or subsidiaries whose business is in South Africa in each year since the passage of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Maude: In order to protect the information for which the provisions for non-disclosure were made, and for reasons of commercial confidentiality, I do not consider it appropriate to provide a breakdown of the published statistics relating to these applications.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many companies have applied to him for permission to withhold information from their public records on any of their foreign subsidiaries on the ground that presentation of this information would be harmful to the business of the company, according to the provision of schedule 5(10) to the Companies Act 1985, and how many companies have received such permission in each of the years since the passage of the Act.

Mr. Maude: Statistics of applications made under schedule 5 to the Companies Act 1985 are published annually in the report laid before Parliament in accordance with section 729 of the Act. Copies are available in the Library.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Newton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for class V, vote 3 (administration, regulation of domestic trade and industry, and consumer protection) will be increased by £2,169,000 from £189,436,000 to £191,605,000. The increase will be offset by savings in class V, vote 2 (support for industry) of £2,128,000 and class IX, vote 2 (Department of the Environment: miscellaneous administration and housing grants) of £41,000. The increase in the cash limit for vote 3 has been partly offset by a decrease of £16,000 to reflect the transfer of costs for recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 Competition 1988 to the office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) and by £106,000 which has been made available to class VII, vote 2 (Department of Employment: administration) for a special employment service initiative in Sunderland. Overall, the cash limit for class V, vote 2 will be reduced by £2,128,000 from £568,256,000 to £566,128,000. The running costs limit for the Department has been reduced by £794,000 from £287,968,000 to £287,174,000.

In addition, the cash limit on class V, vote IX has been reduced from £2,417,000 to £1,000. Downward adjustments to the estimates of stamp duty and stamp duty reserve tax payable on the sale of shares in Rolls-Royce plc mean that receipts appropriated in aid will be sufficient to cover expenditure incurred.

These changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Ministerial Advisers (Salaries)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total expenditure on salaries of ministerial advisers in his Department for each completed year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I have nothing to add to the information I gave in my reply to the hon. Member on 27 January 1989 at column 765-66.

Electricity Consumers Council

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what remuneration is made to the chair of the Electricity Consumers Council.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 27 January 1989]: The chairman of the Electricity Consumers Council—the national body—receives a salary of £10,742 per annum. The chairmen of the 12 area electricity consultative councils in England and Wales are paid a salary of £10,024 per annum.

HEALTH

Exhaust Fumes

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has any figures of deaths due to inhaling exhaust fumes, other than suicides.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of deaths registered in England and Wales which had an underlying cause of death assigned to the inhalation of exhaust fumes, for the latest year available.

Doctors

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors by grade are employed (a) in the National Health Service exclusively, (b) in the private sector exclusively and (c) in both sectors (i) in Nottingham regional health authority, (ii) in Trent regional health authority and (iii) in the country as a whole.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available about the number of doctors in practice in the private sector. Information about National Health Service medical staff is set out in the table.

NHS Staff (Discipline)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current procedures are in force concerning disciplinary action against National Health Service staff who pass information to hon. Members.

Mr. Mellor: This is a matter for the employing health authority.

Nurses' Pay

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the median level of earnings for nurses expressed as a proportion of average earnings in each year from 1983-84 to the most recent available date, laid out in the same form as that given in the answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 833.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the median level of earnings is not available centrally. Information on the mean level of earnings up to 1987-88 is set out in the table. From this date the grades of staff nurse and ward sister became obsolete.

Midwives

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities in England which anticipate a shortage of midwives over the next five years; what is the estimated shortage; and what measures he is proposing to overcome it.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect the information in the form requested centrally. There are reported difficulties in some localities, but there is no evidence that there is a national problem. The results of the 1987 regional health authority chairman's survey undertaken for the nurses pay review body showed that at March 1987 about 4·2 per cent. of midwives' posts had been vacant for at least three months compared with the average of 3·5 per cent. for all nursing and midwifery staff.

Nationally the number of midwives has increased by 11·4 per cent. since 1981. Action is being taken centrally where appropriate to improve recruitment and retention of such staff. For example, the new clinical grading structure was designed to recognise and reward the skills and expertise of, and provide improved career opportunities for, both nurses and midwives. The results of the regrading exercise show that at both staff midwife and midwifery sister level much larger numbers have gone into the higher grades than has been the case with nurses. As a result, the average increases for midwives this year is over 20 per cent. and for staff midwives it is over 25 per cent. We are also discussing with the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting ways of stimulating more interest in direct entry midwifery courses. Health authorities have also been asked to organise campaigns to attract back nurses and midwives who have left the service and to provide more opportunities for flexible working and job sharing.

Smoking

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of treatment of smoking related diseases in the National Health Service in 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: The annual cost to the National Health Service of treating smoking-related diseases is estimated at about £500 million.

Disabled People

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received an application for funding from the International Disabled Travellers Club Ltd.

Mr. Mellor: We have no record of receiving an application for funding from this organisation, but we will follow this matter up with the organisation concerned.

Basingstoke and North Hampshire Health Authority

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what census figures have been used in determining funding for the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority for 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: The 1985-based population projections for mid-1988 were used in determining regional health authorities' allocations for 1988-89. It is for regions to decide what data to employ in making allocations to district health authorities.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants have been employed in the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority district in each year since the formation of that health authority.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold centrally information in the form requested. The hon. Member may like to contact the chairman of the Wessex regional health authority for the information that he seeks.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement, supported by statistics, on waiting lists for out-patient appointments and surgery in the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority district and at other hospitals in the Wessex region.

Mr. Mellor: The latest figures show that, at March 1988, there were 3,300 patients on the in-patient waiting list in Basingstoke and North Hampshire district and 43,700 for Wessex region as a whole. Provisional figures, currently being validated, indicate that these waiting lists reduced in the six months to September 1988.

We do not collect information centrally about waiting times for out-patient appointments or individual hospitals.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of recruitment of paramedical and clerical staff by the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may like to contact the chairman of the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority for the information that he seeks.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial and managerial running of health centres in the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority is responsible for the funding and management of health centres within its district. My hon. Friend may like to contact the chairman of the health authority for the information that he seeks.

Medical Physicists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to health authorities about staffing levels appropriate for medical physics, radiation physics or other supporting disciplines to radiotherapy; what steps he has taken to ensure any such advice has been acted upon; and if he will place the text of such advice in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: I have placed in the Library a copy of circular HC(78)32, paragraphs 21 to 25 of which give guidance to health authorities on factors relevant to the staffing of radiotherapy departments. Specific staffing levels are a matter for individual authorities to determine. Reference to this advice is made wherever appropriate in the course of normal communications between authorities and the Department.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many posts were designated head of radiation physics within the National Health Service in (a) 1983 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many medical physicists have been employed within the National Health Service in each of the last five years;

(2) how many physicists were working within the National Health Service in (a) 1983 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The only relevant information which we hold centrally is for staff in post at 30 September as set out in the table; figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Note: All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has requested from health authorities or the Whitley council about the problems of recruitment of medical physicists, and on what dates;

(2) what information he has requested from health authorities or the Whitley council about the turnover of medical physicists, and on what dates.

Mr. Mellor: None. I understand that the management Side of the Scientific and Professional Staffs Council has requested information from health authorities to assist a working party which it set up to investigate recruitment and retention of physicists and other scientists.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the pay bands for each grade of medical physicist in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The information is set out in the table. April 1987 rates are under review and increases will take effect from 1 April 1988.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has asked the National Radiological Protection Board, or any other agency, to prepare scientific standards for the calibration of radiation machines;

(2) on what dates within the last five years his Department circulated health authorities with advice on the calibration and dose standards of radiation machines; and if he will place the texts of such advice in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: In December 1985 we issued to health authorities health circular HC(85)31 which informed them of their responsibilities as employers for ensuring compliance with the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 1333). In May 1988 executive letter EL(88)P/64 was issued covering a more detailed and technical document; "Guidance Notes for the Protection of Persons against Ionising Radiations arising from Medical and Dental Use", prepared under the joint auspices of the National Radiological Protection Board, the Health and Safety Executive and the health Departments. This replaces a code of practice first published in 1957 and most recently revised in 1972. Pages 29 and 30 of the guidance notes deal specifically with calibration and maintenance. The executive letter indicated that the guidance notes provided a guide to good practice and asked managers to bring them to the attention of all relevant staff. All these documents have been placed in the Library.

In December 1988 the Institute of Physical Sciences in Medicine (IPSM) issued to its members further advice augmenting that in the guidance notes. Having consulted relevant professional bodies on the content of the IPSM advice, we shall shortly include it in consolidated guidance to health authorities on the use of ionising radiations.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant radiotherapist posts were funded within the National Health Service; and in which hospitals these posts are or were located in (a) 1983 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Mellor: Information about medical staffing is collected by employing authority and not in relation to the hospital in which a doctor is working. The employing autorities for consultants are regional health authorities, district health authorities designated for teaching purposes and special health authorities for the London post-graduate teaching hospitals. The latest available informantion about consultant radiotherapists by employing authority is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. Regional health authority figures include all consultant staff employed within the region including the numbers for individual authorities cited.

2. For the England total, staff holding two or more appointments whether with the same or different regions are counted once only. Differences in the sum of numbers of staff for all regions are due to the duplication of staff holding appointments in more than one region. Such are included in each region. This duplication does not occur in the WTE component.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that each radiaion machines has (a) a calibration logbook, (b) a maintenance logbook and (c) a patient logbook; and on what dates such steps were taken.

Mr. Mellor: This is for individual health authorities to decide. Recommendations for record keeping are given in "Guidance Notes for the Protection of Persons against Ionising Radiations arising from Medical and Dental Use", which we drew to the attention of all health authorities in executive letter EL(88)P/64 in May 1988. This replaced "Code of Practice for the Protection of Persons against Ionizing Radiations arising from Medical and Dental Use" which, originally printed in 1957, and subsequently revised in 1968 and 1972, similarly advised health authorities.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the sources of guidance for the maintenance standards of radiation machines he expects health authorities to adopt; on what dates such standards were drawn to the authorities' attention within the last five years; and if he will place the text of letters drawing attention to such standards in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: Existing departmental guidance to health authorities, bearing on the safe use and maintenance of equipment delivering radiation doses, is in the form of:

(a) Health Circular HC(85)31, issued in December 1985, which informs authorities of their responsibilities as employers for ensuring compliance with the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

(b) Health Equipment Information Booklet HE1 98, updated in August 1984, on management of equipment;

(c) Health Notice HN(87)22, issued in 1987, which sets out advice on decontamination procedures, where necessary for inspection or maintenance purposes;

(d) Executive Letter EL(88)P/64, issued in May 1988, covered issued of a detailed document, "Guidance Notes for the Protection of Persons Against Ionising Radiations Arising from Medical and Dental Use";

(e) Health Circular HC(88)29, issued in June 1988, which informed authorities of their responsibilities under the Ionising Radiation (Protection of Persons Undergoing Medical Examination or Treatment) Regulations 1988;

(f) Executive Letter EL(88)P/127, issued to Regional General Managers in December 1988, which reminded authorities of their responsibility to ensure that they and their staff observe their obligations to protect people against any harmful effect from ionising radiations and to ensure safe and effective operation of all their departments.

I have arranged for copies of the guidance specified to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the sources of guidance for the calibration and dose control standards of radiation medicines which he expects health authorities to implement, and the particular sections of such sources which particularly refer to calibration and dose standards; and if he will place all such guidance in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: In May 1988 executive letter EL(88)P/64 was issued to all health authorities, covering the guidance notes for the protection of persons against ionising radiations arising from medical and dental use, which replaced a code of practice first published in 1957, and most recently revised in 1972. Section 10.46 et seq of the guidance notes deal specifically with calibration and dose standards regarding radioactive substances, (which includes what you refer to as radiation medicines).

The executive letter indicated that the guidance notes provided a guide to good practice and asked managers to bring them to the attention of all relevant staff. All these documents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he has asked for all the incidents of radiation overdosage within the National Health Service to be reported to him; and on what dates such a request was issued to regions or districts.

Mr. Mellor: In 1972 we contributed to a revision of the code of practice for the protection of persons against ionising radiations arising from medical and dental use, which was issued to all health authorities. That code called for reporting of instances in which patients had received in excess of a prescribed dose of radiation.

The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 sent to all health authorities along with health circular HC(85)31, made it mandatory for the Health and Safety Executive to be notified, by the employer, of any incident in which a person undergoing a medical exposure was exposed to ionising radiation, to an extent much greater than that intended. The guidance notes for the protection of persons against ionising radiations arising from medical and dental use published in 1988, to replace the code of practice, gave further guidance on the interpretation of the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, and made it clear that all radiation accidents or serious defects involving equipment should be notified immediately to the Department. This document, under cover of executive letter EL(86)P/64, was also distributed to all health authorities.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant radiotherapists are actually working in the National Health Service in each of the last five years; and what percentage of such consultants are full time within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is set out in the table. Consultants with whole-time NHS contracts are not required to spend the whole of their professional time on NHS work. The number of consultant staff working exclusively in the NHS is not known and, therefore, the percentage given is that for consultants holding whole-time contracts.

Table: Consultants in Radiotherapy (at 30 September each year)
England — Numbers

[1] Includes permanent paid and honorary staff, but excludes locum staff.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what support he has given, or proposes to give, to the nationwide survey of the quality of radiation dosimetry being carried out by the Institute of Physical Sciences in Medicine;

(2) why he has refused financial support to the Institute of Physical Sciences in Medicine's nationwide survey of the quality of radiation dosimetry.

Mr. Mellor: In 1984 a decision was taken not to support this project from central research and development funds. In terms of its research and development merits it was not of as high priority as competing projects. However, its merits as a quality assurance aid to NHS management was full recognised and the Institute of Physical Sciences in Medicine was advised to seek support from health authorities on this basis.

A number of hospitals have subsequently participated in the survey, including the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital where, in 1988, it played a role in revealing an error in the radiotherapy department.

Any further proposals for central funding will be considered on their merits.

Broadmoor Special Hospital (Deaths)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the last five years the number of deaths that have occurred at Broadmoor special hospital, the cause of death and the number of deaths that were investigated by a public inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Deaths of patients at Broadmoor hospital in the five years ended 31 December 1988 are listed in the table. That which occurred on 6 July 1984 was investigated by a public inquiry. But the circumstances of all deaths arising from other than natural causes are fully considered by hospital management to see whether any lessons can be learned.

Date of death	Cause of death
20 January 1984	Inhalation of stomach contents
10 May 1984	Stroke/heart attack
6 July 1984	Inhalation of stomach contents
2 August 1984	Pulmonary thrombo-embolism/ carcinoma of colon/acute peritonitis
23 November 1984	Pneumonia
8 March 1985	Suicide (hanging)
23 August 1985	Heart attack
29 April 1986	Heart attack
6 July 1986	Heart attack
26 July 1986	Suicide (hanging)
14 September 1986	Heart attack
11 November 1986	Peritonitis/pneumonia
20 May 1987	Heart attack
21 May 1987	Pneumonia/lung cancer
11 July 1987	Suicide (hanging)
10 September 1987	Choked on food
29 October 1987	Heart attack
28 January 1988	Heart attack
8 April 1988	Cancer of the stomach
29 April 1988	Respiratory arrest/Cardio myopathy (HIV positive)
23 August 1988	Inhalation of stomach contents/cardio-respiratory failure associated with Chlorpromazine therapy
7 October 1988	Pneumonia associated with emphysema

Audiology Technicians

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure an adequate supply of audiology technicians for health authorities in the south-east of England.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 29 November to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) at column 197.

Dentists

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any additional accountancy fees arising from time taken to answer questions from the dental rates study group are to be fully reimbursed to the dentists concerned.

Mr. Freeman: General dental practitioners' practice expenses, including accountancy fees in connection with NHS work, are reimbursed indirectly through fees paid for NHS dental treatment. These fees are based on the recommendations of the dental rates study group.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether British dentists will be free after 1992 to practice within the EEC without further accreditation.

Mr. Freeman: Any United Kingdom dentist with a recognised qualification already has the right to practice within any member state of the EC under directives adoped in 1978.

Dental Reference Service

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the dental reference service in each year from 1983 to 1988; and whether he will give separate figures for salaries, travelling, pension contributions, purchase of equipment, accommodation costs, and rental of premises within that overall figure.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is set out in the table. All figures relate to the financial year and are in £000s.

Year	Total cost	Estimated salaries	Employers superannuation	Travelling
1983-84	917	690	138	89
1984-85	1,051	796	159	96
1985-86	1,229	958	192	79
1986-87	1,335	1,035	207	93
1987-88	1,455	1,121	224	110

It is not possible to provide figures for equipment, accommodation and rentals because these are subsumed in other departmental budgets and cannot easily be identified.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of weeks worked per year by all dental reference officers in each of the years between 1983 and 1988, excluding sick leave, leave, study leave and attendance at courses.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of weeks
1984	42·6
1985	42·1
1986	42·3
1987	42·6
1988	40·8

Information in respect of 1983 is not available.

Health Authority Chairmen

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to produce a register of interests for chairmen of district and regional health authorities.

Mr. Mellor: No, it is not necessary. The statutory position on this is quite clear. Under regulation 14 (1) of the NHS (Regional and District Health Authorities Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1983 a chairman or member of a health authority is required to declare any pecuniary interest, direct or otherwise, in any contract or other matter which is the subject of consideration by the health authority. He may not then take part in any consideration or discussion of the contract (or other matter) or vote in any question in respect of it.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of all British regional and district health authority chairmen indicating the length of time in which these persons have held office.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for regional and district health authority chairmen in England has been placed in the Library. The appointment of health authority chairmen in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and in Wales and Northern Ireland, of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Meningitis

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total number of cases of meningitis recorded in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many fatalities were recorded as a result of meningitis for the last year in which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Meningitis can be caused by a number of different organisms. The hon. Member may be particularly interested in meningococcal meningitis. The table shows the number of notifications received for this, plus for all forms of acute meningitis, together with the number of deaths registered with meningococcal meningitis (International Classification of Diseases 9th Revision 036.0) assigned as the underlying cause of death. Notification data for 1988 are as yet uncorrected and provisional, whilst cause of death data are available only for the first three quarters and are similarly provisional. Final data for 1987 are therefore also given.

Number of notifications of all forms of acute meningitis and meningococcal meningitis; and death registrations of meningococcal meningitis (ICD 9 036.0)
England and Wales 1987-88

	1987	1988

[1] Plus 28 days and over.
[2] From 1 October 1988 this became known simply as "meningitis".
[3] Provisional: to allow for corrected disease notifications/death registrations.
[4] January to September only.

Blood Transfusions

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any plans to seek to change the law to enable doctors to perform life-saving operations, including the use of blood transfusions where necessary, to save the lives of children whose parents refuse consent on religious grounds.

Mr. Mellor: No, there are no plans to change the law in this area. In an emergency the administration of life-saving procedures on any patient without obtaining consent is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned.

Dalkon Shields (Compensation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will request all health regions which have not already done so to seek out those women who were prescribed Dalkon shields and inform them that it is still possible to claim compensation if they were damaged by it;

(2) what steps he intends to take to publicise the fact that the date for filing late Dalkon shield compensation claims has been extended to 31 July.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans for Government intervention in relation to this matter of litigation in the United States courts. For the initial claims deadline, the court itself directed, and approved, publicity by the Dalkon shield manufacturers. Further extensions of the deadline have received independent media publicity. It is for individual health authorities to decide whether they wish to direct their resources to specific activity on this matter. Our longstanding advice has been that they should be as helpful as possible with regard to the release of information.

Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the name and health authority of each hospital with more than 250 beds.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Perinatal Deaths

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of perinatal deaths in (a) England, (b) the north-west and (c) Bolton during 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Annual figures for 1988 for perinatal deaths are not yet available, so the table shows statistics for 1978 and 1987.

Perinatal mortality (stillbirths and deaths in the first week of life): numbers and rates per 1,000 total live and still births. Usual residents of England, north-west standard region and Bolton metropolitan county district (MCD).

AIDS

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what safeguards health authorities take to ensure that no one shown by tests to be HIV positive or to have AIDS is allowed to work in National Health Service kitchens.

Mr. Mellor: I am advised that the human immunodeficiency virus is not transmitted through food. There is therefore no reason why people who are HIV positive but otherwise well should not work in National Health Service kitchens. People who are HIV positive or have AIDS who acquire other infections which could be transmitted through food would be subject to the same restrictions on food handling as any other staff with such infections.

Drug Warnings

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug companies have appealed to the Committee on Safety of Medicines against drug warnings which the committee wished to publish; which companies and which drugs were involved; and what were the results of the appeals.

Mr. Mellor: Under the Medicines Act 1968, companies have a right of appeal to the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) in respect of CSM's advice to the licensing authority on licensing matters. They have no right of appeal to the CSM about a decision of that committee to issue information or guidance on licensed medicinal products to doctors, dentists and pharmacists.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to amend the Medicines Act so that drug companies are not able to block the publication by the Committee on Safety of Medicines of warning notices about the safety of drugs by an injunction.

Mr. Mellor: I have no plans to do so.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died of lung cancer in the Trent health region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table; 1987 is the latest year available.

Number of death registrations with malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung (ICD 162)[1] as underlying cause of death to usual residents of Trent regional health authority, 1979-1987

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, further to his reply of 26 January, he will make available to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North, the grading returns received from the Trent region and Nottingham district authorities.

Mr. Mellor: The grading returns specify the number of nursing and midwifery staff in each old grade that have been assimilated to each of the new clinical grades. This information is given in the tables.

Medical Equipment Management

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many different categories of National Health Service staff are employed in the maintenance of patient-connected equipment; how many people are employed in each category; and what the change has been in the distribution and usage of these various categories since the Department of Health and Social Security issued its guidance on the management of medical equipment, HEI98, in January 1982.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 January 1989]: There are usually three categories of staff: physicists, technicians and, in some cases, works staff. We do not collect information centrally on the numbers of staff in these categories who are engaged in this type of maintenance work. We have no indication of any changes in usage patterns since the publication of HEI98.

Medical Physics Technicians

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individual health authorities employ medical physics technicians, codes F807-F814.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 January 1989]: At 30 September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, 148 of the 191 district health authorities had medical physics technicians in post and five of the 14 regional health authorities had medical physics technicians in post.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individual variation orders have been issued to medical physics technicians over the last three years on a monthly basis.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 January 1989]: The number of variation orders issued in respect of staff employed in the medical physics technician grades in the last three years ending 31 December 1988 is as follows:

	1986	1987	1988
January	1	—	—

Medicines Committees

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will review the membership of the Medicines Commission and Committee on Safety of Medicines in view of the recent revelations of close personal financial links between several members and pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 January 1989]: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 13 December 1988, at columns 557-58.

No-fault Compensation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate discussions with the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industry and organisations representing doctors and patients regarding a no-fault drug damage compensation scheme.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received supporting no-fault compensation for those people damaged by prescribed drugs or those given under medical supervision.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Only those in which the right hon. Member himself has taken part.

Drugs (Side Effects)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current procedures are used to ensure that those prescribing drugs are aware of recent findings which may indicate possible side effects or the need for precautions in the use of drugs.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) sends its publication "Current Problems" to all doctors, dentists, and pharmacists in the United Kingdom about three times a year. This covers a wide range of current drug safety issues, and often includes advice and recommendations to prescribers. The CSM also provides occasional articles and letters for medical journals. Particularly urgent issues are notified direct to prescribers using CSM "Dear Doctor" letters.

The Department also funds the distribution to prescribers of a variety of independent publications, including the "British National Formulary", "Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin", "Adverse Drug Reactions Bulletin" and Prescribers' Journal, all of which provide guidance on the prescribing and use of drugs.

Prescribers can also consult product data sheets which contain detailed information about known side effects, contra-indications and other precautions.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are being treated within the Mersey regional health authority area for drug addiction; and what treatment facilities are available.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, there were 354 admissions with a drug related main diagnosis to NHS mental illness hospitals and units in the Mersey RHA. Also, in the same year, there were 7,506 attendances at NHS drug addiction out-patient clinics.

These figures do not represent the number of people involved since an individual could be admitted to hospital or attend an out-patient clinic several times in one year. In any case, most drug misusers are treated in the community for which information is not available centrally.

There are 10 out-patient drug dependency services and two in-patient units in the region. There are also 12 syringe exchange schemes run by health authorities. These services are supported by a number of voluntary sector services including two residential centres and more than 10 providing counselling services to drug misusers and users' families.

Midwives (Regrading)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives in the Mersey regional health authority area have appealed against their regrading; and when the appeals will be heard.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: We do not hold this information centrally.

Private Hospitals

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the occasions on which he has received reports of infringements of the NAHA code of conduct for private hospitals; what actions he has taken since its inception; and what further inspections were held;

(2) what sanctions are available to his Department against private hospitals failing to comply with their statutory duty to provide and maintain adequate medical, surgical and nursing equipment; how often, following inspections by the appropriate district health authority, and an adverse report, he has acted against private hospitals, in the last three-year period; and what action he proposes to take;

(3) if he will give the dates in 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 when the following private hospitals were inspected (a) the Wellington Humana, (b) the London clinic, (c) the BUPA hospital, Harpenden, Hertfordshire, (d) the Lister hospital, (e) the Cromwell hospital, Cromwell road and (f) the Portland hospital; and whether any of the reports were adverse.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Registration and inspection of private hospitals and nursing homes is wholly delegated to district health authorities who must be satisfied that the statutory requirements are being met. We do not collect centrally details of their inspections. Authorities have power to cancel registration if the statutory requirements are not being observed. No private hospital has been added to the Department's national list of cancelled registrations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Tax-Benefit Tables

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for changing the manner of expressing the former earnings of unemployed persons on the tax/benefit tables from whole number decimal places in such a way as to make direct year by year comparisons of tax/benefit more difficult.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The tables reflect the tax, national insurance, and benefit structures in particular financial years. Nominal earnings levels in any one year cannot be compared directly with the same nominal levels in another because of changes in price levels. The first gross wage level in table II of both the 1986 and 1987 editions gives the precise upper level of former wages which is consistent with the receipt of maximum family income supplement. Higher earnings levels are then shown in £1 steps. In earlier editions, the initial level of former earnings in table II was rounded to the nearest £1. The 1988 tables revert to this presentation. These differences in convention reflect no more than the degree of rounding chosen.

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the most recently available figure for the income support live load of each of his Department's offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Young People (Benefits)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the changes since 1979, and the dates when they occurred (i) in the conditions of entitlement to supplementary benefit and income support of persons aged 19 years in non-advanced education and (ii) in the circumstances in which extra-statutory payments in lieu of benefit can be made to such persons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1989, c.415-17]: I regret the answer was incomplete. I should add that from 11 April 1988, on the introduction of income support, extra-statutory payments were made in additional circumstances to certain 19-year-olds in full-time education. Payments were available on application to young people of age 19 who either had no parents or were estranged or separated from them, and who had been receiving supplementary benefit on that basis immediately before the introduction of income support. The payments from the transitional payments unit in Glasgow were made at the rate of supplementary benefit previously paid, and continued up to the end of the 1988 school year or age 20, in the same way as supplementary benefit would have done. These special payments relating to the transition from supplementary benefit to income support are not available to young people who reached age 19 on or after 11 April 1988.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the total population of each standard planning region of the United Kingdom was dependent upon income support or its predecessor benefits in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information could be provided only by social security region and only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are claiming income support in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom; what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979; and what was the percentage increase over 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about supplementary benefit or income support claimants is not collected by standard planning region. Information by social security region is as follows:

Single Parents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the results to date of the pilot exercises being carried out by officers from his Department at Eastbourne and Leicester benefit offices on single parents' reliance on social security benefits; if he will list the benefits being claimed and by sex; what consideration in the exercise is being given to child care provision and job training; whether this exercise will be carried out at other offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Independent research exploring the motivations and perceptions of lone parents receiving benefit has been commissioned. It will look at a wide range of lone parents' circumstances including child care arrangements and job training.

A pilot of the design of the study is currently under way in Sittingbourne and Leicester. A sample of lone parents receiving income support have been selected at random and invited to participate in the study. The results from this pilot, which is scheduled for completion on 24 February, will be used to ensure that the main study is effective.

The national study will begin in April 1989 in 44 locations across the country and will include lone parents receiving income support or one-parent benefit only. The final report is due in May 1990.

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce monitoring procedures for one-parent benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: One-parent benefit is paid to 670,000 claimants and estimated expenditure on it in 1988-89 is £169 million. There is at present no procedure for reviewing entitlement to the benefit. Procedures for postal review of claims exist for a number of other social security benefits such as income support and invalidity benefit. We have therefore decided that arrangements for postal review of claims to one-parent benefit should be introduced. A postal review of existing claims will be conducted, starting in February. In addition a procedure for regular postal review of new claims will be introduced and this will begin in 1990.

Funeral Costs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ease the criteria for social security payment of funeral costs in the light of the findings of the Office of Fair Trading that the estate of a deceased person or insurance payments fails to meet the full cost of the funeral in 28 per cent. of cases, and social security payments contribute in 3 per cent. of cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The introduction of social fund funeral payments in April 1987 extended help with meeting the cost of a simple funeral, which had previously been available only to people receiving supplementary benefit, to all on low incomes, whether in work or out of it. People who are in receipt of income support, family credit or housing benefit are eligible. We plan to lay regulations before the House shortly to extend eligibility for funeral payments, as from April 1989, to people in Scotland who receive a community charge rebate and, from April 1990, to those in England, Wales and Scotland who receive a community charge benefit. We believe that it is right to concentrate help in this manner and that a family who can afford to pay funeral costs which cannot be met from the deceased's estate should be expected to do so.

One-parent Families

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing expenditure on social security benefits for one-parent families in 1969, 1970, 1980 and each year thereafter, at constant 1988-89 prices and as percentages of all social security benefit expenditure for families with children in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Data on a consistent basis are available only for the years from 1981-82. The information requested is given for the years 1981-82 to 1988-89.

£ million, Great Britain

	Social security[1] expenditure on lone parents[2] (1988-89 prices)	Expenditure as percentage of total social security expenditure on families with children[3]
1981-82	1,860	28
1982-83	2,090	30
1983-84	2,300	32
1984-85	2,420	32
1985-86	2,640	35
1986-87	2,920	37
1987-88	3,110	40
1988-89	3,390	43

[1] Benefits included are: One parent benefit, supplementary benefit/income support, housing benefit, child benefit, maternity benefit and family income supplement/family credit.

[2] Excludes widows with children.

[3] Family benefits are those paid on account of family responsibilities. Benefits included in the definition are: Child benefit, one parent benefit, family income supplement/family credit, maternity benefit and supplementary benefit/income support and housing benefit paid to lone parent families.

Widows' Benefits

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to remove the anomaly whereby a widow may claim a range of benefits on the death of her husband the level of which is dependent on his contribution record, whereas a widower is not eligible for any such benefits although his wife's earnings may have contributed equally or solely to the family's income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A draft European Community directive which aims to complete the process of implementing the principle of equal treatment for men and women in statutory and occupational social security schemes is currently under consideration. This directive, if implemented in its present form, would require the application of equal treatment to benefits for survivors.

Poverty Line

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the adult working population he assesses as being below the poverty line; and what percentage was below the poverty line in 1984 and 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no official definition of "poverty" and no generally agreed way in which to qualify it. Nor has there ever been any suggestion or acceptance by any Government, irrespective of party, that it is possible to draw any simple poverty line.

Pensions

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he will be taking following receipt of the report from the Occupational Pensions Board on the balance of interests between employers and occupational scheme members.

Mr. Moore: I have today laid before Parliament the report by the Occupational Pensions Board on the balance of interests between employers and occupational scheme members. The report is being published today as Cm. 573, "Protecting Pensions: Safeguarding Benefits in a Changing Environment". We are considering the recommendations, and will find it valuable to know the views of interested organisations and individuals to inform that process.

I am therefore, today, launching a three-month consultation exercise to seek the general reaction to the report. Responses should be sent by 30 April to: DSS, Room 429, Friars House, 157-168 Blackfriars Road, London, SE1 8EU.

Social Fund

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the revised allocation of social fund budgets for the offices at Rhyl and Deeside following the transfer of responsibility for Bagillt from Rhyl to Deeside.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 30 January 1989 the area of Bagillt previously served by the office at Rhyl became the responsibility of the office at Deeside. Accordingly the allocations to Rhyl and Deeside have been adjusted. The new allocations are as follows:

	Grants budget (£)	Loans budget (£)	Period of allocation
Rhyll	108,524	250,048	11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989
Deeside	54,380	128,567	[1]23 May 1988 to 31 March 1989

[1] Deeside office opened on 23 May 1988.

SCOTLAND

Metered Water

16. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the increased charges for metered water supplies.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received representations on behalf of six trade associations and four companies.

Ferries

17. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the transferring to the private sector of the Gourock-Dunoon and Wemyss Bay-Rothesay routes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The possible transfer of the Gourock-Dunoon and Wemyss Bay-Rothesay routes to the private sector will be a matter for the new board of Caledonian MacBrayne to consider once it has been appointed by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Constitutional Convention

18. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any request from those organising the constitutional convention for the use of the old high school buildings in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Responsibility for use of the buildings rests primarily with my learned Friend, the Lord Advocate, whose Department occupies them. I understand that no such request has been received.

Rating Reform

19. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the criteria for relief from the poll tax for disabled people.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations about the reliefs from liability to pay the full community charge that may be available for disabled people.

20. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the community charge from the police forces in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: None.

21. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what average level of community charge in Scotland he is now estimating for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the levels of poll tax declared by the regions and districts in Scotland for the year 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: The average level of community charge in Scotland in 1989-90, including community water charge will be £301, as compared with the average charge of £267, which would have been required had authorities budgeted only to increase their spending in line with inflation. It is clear that many authorities have budgeted to increase their spending by well over the rate of inflation, and I expect that their community charge payers will call them to account in due course.

23. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will seek to remove the anomaly in the community charge regulations whereby people with a severe mental impairment have been given exemption from paying the community charge whereas people with degenerative brain disorders such as Alzheimer's disease will not quality for exemption.

Mr. Rifkind: The question whether people with degenerative brain disorders should be exempt from liability to pay the community charge was considered in detail during the parliamentary stages of the community charge legislation. It was recognised that considerable difficulties and potential for unfairness would be involved in assessing precisely when such a person reached a level of impairment at which an exemption would be appropriate. I remain satisfied that there are no grounds for extending the present exemptions for people who are severely mentally impaired to include those with degenerative brain disorders.

24. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest assessment of the effect of the poll tax on medically and socially disadvantaged groups.

52. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest assessment of the effect of the poll tax on medically and socially disadvantaged groups.

53. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest assessment of the effect of the poll tax on medically and socially disadvantaged groups.

Mr. Lang: The community charge rebate scheme will ensure that nobody will be required to pay more community charge than they are able to afford. It is estimated that over 1 million people in Scotland will benefit from the scheme. The calculation of people's eligibility for rebate takes account of a wide range of circumstances including their financial circumstances and whether they are disabled. In addition, the community charge provides for exemption from the community charge for certain groups of people, including those with severe mental impairment and long-stay patients in hospitals, residential care homes, nursing homes or hostels.

26. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account he took in reaching his estimate of the 1989-90 average poll tax levy for each regional and district authority of demand for education, housing and other services that these authorities are responsible for and of the likely increase of the cost of providing such services.

Mr. Lang: Our estimates were based on local authorities' own budgeted relevant current expenditure for 1988-89, plus 6 per cent., plus allowances for the additional costs of community charge administration and school boards. Most housing costs fall on the housing revenue account and do not directly affect the levels of community charges.

27. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the use of computer tagging to assist with the community charge.

Mr. Lang: Representations that a personal identifier would be required for each individual liable for the personal community charge were made by local authority practitioners during the passage of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. Following those representations a requirement for all such individuals to supply registration officers with their date of birth was inserted into the Act. A number of individuals and organisations made representations against the proposal. The development of computer systems is a matter for individual local authorities and my right hon. and learned Friend has made no recommendation to them on whether personal identifiers should be used and, if so, on what basis.

30. Mr Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sanctions he takes against a regional council that is printing and distributing official forms which describe the community charge as a poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I strongly deprecate the use by a local authority of the term "poll tax" in relation to the community charge. It is misleading to do so because it implies, quite wrongly, that there is a connection between liability to pay the community charge and the right to vote. The community charges register and the electoral register are drawn up on different criteria for quite separate purposes.

31. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received recent representations from the Scottish Trades Union Congress about the community charge in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no recent representations from the Scottish Trades Union Congress on the community charge. The matter was not raised wth me by the STUC during my meeting with them on 27 January.

33. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what would be the cost of extending the exemption from the poll tax to people who are severely physically handicapped.

Mr. Lang: The Government do not intend to extend the exemptions from the community charge to include people who are physically handicapped and no assessment of the cost of such an extension has therefore been made.

37. Mr Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will exempt from the standard community charge owners of properties certified by them to be unsuitable for habitation.

Mr. Lang: Judgments about the habitability of properties are the responsibility of the community charges registration officer. His decisions are subject to appeal in the usual way. A system whereby such judgments were left to the owners of the properties concerned would be unworkable. The standard community charge is not payable on houses subject to closing or demolition orders or which are incapable of being lived in because they are being repaired, improved or reconstructed. Caravans, huts, sheds, bothies or other similar structures which are intended to be used for residential purposes but are not, for any reason habitable throughout the year will remain subject to rating and will not be liable for the standard charge.

38. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Alzheimers, Scotland, about the application of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from sufferers of Alzheimer's disease regarding payment of the community charge. A response to the points raised in these representations has recently been issued.

44. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures he has available for the number of persons who have thus far not registered for payment of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: Responsibility for the compilation of community charges register rests with individual community charges registration officers and precise information about the levels of registration are not available. Initial indicators suggest, however, that the average level of registration throughout Scotland is around 99 per cent. of those liable to pay the community charge. This clearly demonstrates the failure of those campaigning against the community charge to make any impact.

45. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped to discuss the implications of the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

47. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regulations he has issued for community charge registration officers concerning residential care homes.

Mr. Lang: Schedule 1A to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988, defines a "residential care home" and exempts someone who is solely or mainly resident in such a home from personal community charge liability.

The Abolition of Domestic Rates (Domestic and Part Residential Subjects) (Scotland) Regulations 1988, which were laid before the House on 24 August 1988, determine the extent to which a residential care home will be treated as a domestic subject for the purposes of section 2 of the 1987 Act.

The Standard and Collective Community Charges (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1988, which were laid on 9 September 1988, provide for exemption from the standard community charge for persons who are exempt from the personal community charge by virtue of being solely or mainly resident in a residential care home.

49. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to meet representatives of Scottish students to discuss community charge rebates.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

50. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue advice to local authorities about how best to estimate the proportion of their theoretical maximum poll tax income which will not be collected, taking into account all known factors including deliberate evasion of the registration process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No. This is a matter for the local authorities themselves. The success of the registration process so far suggests that non-collection through evasion will not be a major problem.

56. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in Scotland will be liable to pay the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that about 96,000 full-time students will be required to pay the 20 per cent. contribution towards the personal community charge and personal community water charge for which such students are liable.

57. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will agree to meet a deputation from the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss its views on the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend will as always consider any requests from the Scottish Trades Union Congress for a meeting. No request for a meeting about the community charge has, however, been received. I met the general council of the STUC on Friday 27 January when the issue of the community charge was not raised.

59. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider seeking to amend the community charge legislation, to exempt individuals with degenerative brain disorders from paying the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: The question whether people with degenerative brain disorders should be exempt from liability to pay the community charge was considered in detail during the parliamentary stages of the community charge legislation. It was recognised that considerable difficulties and potential for unfairness would be involved in assessing precisely when such a person reached a level of impairment at which an exemption would be appropriate. I remain satisfied that there are no grounds for extending the present exemptions for people who are severely impaired to include those with degenerative brain disorders.

60. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the National Union of Students, Scottish area, about the impact of the community charge on Scottish students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The National Union of Students was consulted about a number of sets of regulations concerning students which have been made under the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 and its comments were taken fully into account. It has also been consulted on a draft information leaflet about the community charge which is to be made available to students, and its comments are being considered.

66. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the community charge register to be available for public inspection in Strathclyde and every other region in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: On 1 April 1989.

67. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of mentally handicapped people in Scotland; and how many of them are eligible for exemption from payment of the poll tax.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to give exact figures or reliable estimates of the total number of people with mental handicap in Scotland since reported prevalence rates for milder degrees of mental handicap show wide variation.

People with severe mental handicap may be eligible for exemption from liability to pay the community charge if they are severely mentally impaired within the meaning of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 as amended and meet the qualifying conditions.

The joint Scottish Home and Health Department—social work services group consultation document of 22 October 1987 on proposals for exempting people with severe mental handicap indicated that an estimated three per 1,000 of the population suffered from severe mental handicap and that the figure included those who were in-patients in mental handicap hospitals and those under 18 years of age.

69. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce legislation to stop warrant sales being used against people who refuse to pay the poll tax or fines associated with the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: No. I am satisfied that existing debt collection procedures are appropriate for the collection of community charge arrears and of associated civil penalties.

70. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total number of retirement pensioners in Scotland who will not have to pay the full amount of the poll tax; and what percentage of the total number of retirement pensioners in Scotland this figure represents.

Mr. Lang: There are approximately 1,014,000 persons aged 60 or more in Scotland. It is estimated that over 50 per cent. of these will not have to pay the full amount of the community charge.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the Scottish local authorities who have written to him supporting the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: No local authority has made written representations to my right hon. and learned Friend recently about the policy of introducing the community charge.

Farm Woodland Grant

22. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with regard to the farm woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There has been considerable interest in this scheme in Scotland. Since the scheme opened at the beginning of October, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has received 102 applications containing proposals for planting almost 1,200 hectares of land.

Council House Sales

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about progress with sales of council houses and flats under the right-to-buy legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Almost 92,000 council houses and flats in Scotland were sold under the right-to-buy legislation from October 1980 to end September 1988. This is clear evidence of the success of the Government's right-to-buy policy and has made a major contribution to the diversification of ownership in Scotland.

28. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland since May 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of dwellings sold by Scottish local authorities to sitting tenants in the period from April 1979 to September 1988 was 95,075.

32. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council properties have been sold to their tenants in Scotland since 1979; and what proportion of Scottish houses are now in owner-occupation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of dwellings sold by Scottish local authorities to sitting tenants in the period from April 1979 to September 1988 was 95,075. Over 44 per cent. of Scottish houses are now in owner-occupation.

Industrial Rating

29. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has met representatives of the Chemical Industry Association to discuss the proposals on industrial rating contained in its recent representations to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I met representatives of the Chemical Industries Association in Glasgow on 13 January. We had a useful discussion on the proposals for reform of the industrial rating system in Scotland put forward by that association in its recent briefing paper "Scottish Industrial Rates: The Need for Change". The association's representatives accepted that radical change was not possible before the 1990 revaluation, but I was able to assure them that we are giving serious consideration to the prescription of decapitalisation rates north and south of the border for 1990, and to moving to a common approach on the treatment of plant and machinery as soon as possible after that. I also assured the association of our commitment to achieving harmonisation, and to moving to a common non-domestic rate in all areas.

Competitive Tendering

34. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made by local health authorities in Scotland with regard to competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: By the end of December, Scottish health boards had awarded 43 contracts for domestic and catering services producing estimated savings, for reinvestment in direct patient care, of nearly £15·4 million over the next three years. Further blocks of services are now being put out to tender.

Rating Valuation

35. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress being made in harmonising rating valuation practices in Scotland with England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: The task of harmonisation is a complex one, but significant progress is being made and the full extent of this will become apparent in 1990. Our commitment to fairness for business ratepayers north and south of the border is not in doubt, and we intend to see through the programme of reform on which we have embarked.

Scottish TUC

36. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Scottish Trades Union Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I met the general council of the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 27 January. I drew its attention to the impressive performance of the Scottish economy in 1988, which saw major advances in manufacturing, construction and services; continuing successes in inward investment; a fall of 42,000 in seasonally-adjusted unemployment; and evidence of increased business optimism and investment intentions.

Teachers

39. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to enhance the skills and standing of the teaching profession.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is primarily for education authorities to ensure that the skills of their teaching force are sustained and extended. The Government strongly support programmes that foster professional commitment and provide means to improve qualifications and expertise. To that end, my right hon. and learned Friend established the Scottish committee for staff development in education in 1987 to promote the development of in-service training and to encourage its uptake by the profession. In that year the pay and conditions settlement which followed the teachers' dispute stipulated that five days should be set aside each year for in-service training and up to 50 hours for planned activities. The Government also fund the equivalent of 190 academic staff at colleges of education as a national resource available for the provision of in-service training and for assisting central training programmes. It is also supporting at a cost of £1 million per annum a major new initiative for the management training of headteachers.

Unemployment

40. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had recent discussions with the Confederation of British Industry about the level of unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: I am in frequent touch with the Confederation of British Industry on a range of issues affecting the Scottish economy. I am sure that the CBI shares my satisfaction that seasonally-adjusted unemployment in Scotland fell by 42,000 last year and is now at its lowest level since October 1981.

Employment (Springburn)

41. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to increase employment levels in Glasgow, Springburn.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency and St. Rollox industrial development enterprise (STRIDE), the job creation enterprise set up by British Rail, are jointly commissioning consultants to identify employment, training and business development opportunities and the role of STRIDE within a wider economic initiative for Springburn. Additionally, the agency has under consideration a training and employment grants scheme aimed at the long-term unemployed and is actively pursuing with a housing development company, proposals for housing refurbishment within the Springburn area which would involve local construction jobs.

School Boards

43. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received regarding school boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 35 formal responses have been received to consultation on draft regulations and guidance.

58. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had with regard to the voting system for school boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Twenty-two formal responses have been received to consultation on draft guidance on electoral procedure. In considering the content of the guidance to be issued, my right hon. and learned Friend will take these carefully into account, along with the views expressed during debate on the School Boards (Scotland) Bill by hon. Members from both sides of the House in favour of a single election system throughout Scotland and against any form of proportional representation.

Civil Service Dispersal

46. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what benefits have accrued to Scotland arising from recent Civil Service dispersal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1979 some 2,000 civil service posts have been dispersed to Scotland, representing 35 per cent. of the total moved. Some 70 per cent. of these posts have been filled by local recruitment, providing many valuable employment opportunities, particularly for young people and school leavers. Local economies have also benefited from the creation of additional jobs in services. The momentum of dispersal is being maintained, and I particularly welcome the recent decision of the Department of Social Security to move 430 posts to Glasgow as part of its programme of relocating work out of London.

Employment Training

48. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the Government's employment training scheme is progressing in Scotland; and how many people have taken up places on the scheme.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) earlier today.

Tree Planting

51. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how far the Government's commitment to 33,000 hectares of new tree planting per annum is being met.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the year ended 31 March 1988, new planting by the Forestry Commission and by the private sector in respect of which grants were paid totalled 28,773 hectares. The figure for the current year is likely to be somewhat higher.

Woodland

54. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of land in Scotland is covered by woodland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Just under 14 per cent. of Scotland is covered by woodland.

Newbattle Abbey College

55. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reply he has sent to the submission made to him on or around 23 December 1988 regarding the future of Newbattle Abbey college, Dalkeith.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the submission made by the board of governors of Newbattle Abbey college about continued Government funding for the college. He will respond shortly.

Flagship Schools

61. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for the creation of flagship schools as centres of excellence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have already announced our intention to proceed with the establishment of technology academies in Scotland to provide practical examples of high standards and expectations for pupils, parents and teachers.

Skye Road Bridge

62. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed construction of a road bridge to the Isle of Skye.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on Wednesday 25 January.

Scottish Bus Group

63. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received with regard to the promotion of management-employee buy-outs in the Scottish Bus Group; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations on this subject from individual Scottish Bus Group subsidiaries and other interests. He has made it clear that he is keen to encourage management-employee buy-outs. The basis on which assistance will be given towards financial advice has already been announced to the House during the Second Reading of the Transport (Scotland) Bill on 14 December 1988 at columns 978-79.

Rate Rebates

64. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people who currently receive a full rate rebate.

Mr. Lang: Figures for the number of people receiving the maximum rebate in 1988-89 are not available.

European Single Market

65. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress the committee looking into the implications and opportunities for Scotland of the single market in Europe is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The single market committee of the Scottish Economic Council has been formed and held its first meeting on 13 January 1989. The committee members cover a wide range of interests including manufacturing industry, financial services, local authorities and trade unions and many of them have direct, practical experience of conducting business in Europe on behalf of both the private and public sectors. I am confident that with such a range of expertise on which to draw, the committee is very well placed to take an overview of activity in Scotland, and will be able to bring forward practical recommendations from which Scotland as a whole will benefit.

Forests

68. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected output from Scottish forests over the next 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest timber production estimates are as follows:

Year commencing 1 April	Estimated Production (000 cm)
1989	2,435
1990	2,520
1991	2,605
1992	2,690
1993	2,775
1994	2,930
1995	3,085
1996	3,240
1997	3,395
1998	3,550
1999	3,730

Heating Costs

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual cost of heating a standard three-bedroom house in Scotland by electricity.

Mr. Rifkind: Estimated average annual costs for heating a standard three-bedroom, semi-detached house by electricity in central Scotland are as follows:

	Well insulated	Some loft insulation and draught-proofing	Minimal insulation
Space heating only	235	360	425
Space heating and water heating	325	450	515

Notes:

1. Costs are calculated on the same basis as the last published (February 1986) Monergy Guides with tariffs updated to the levels operated by the South of Scotland Electricity Board from April 1988.
2. No standing charges or maintenance costs are included.
3. The calculations are based on all day heating (16 hours) using modern storage radiators and the figures are adjusted for outside temperatures prevailing in central Scotland.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland are in full-time employment; and what are the average annual figures for full-time employment in Scotland for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The table gives the available information for each of the last 10 years on the number of employees in employment and the self-employed. It does not include participants on work-related Government training programmes.

Since it is not possible to obtain estimates of the number of male employees in full-time employment in Scotland for each of the 10 years, the figures for employees in employment include a small number of part-time male employees. For the years 1978, 1981 and 1984 the censuses of employment record some 0·06 million part-time employees in employment. The employee estimates may be revised when the results of the 1987 census of employment becomes available.

It is not possible to exclude those working part-time from the estimate of total self-employed in Scotland. The vast majority are likely to have been in full-time employment (in Great Britain about one sixth of the self-employed now work part time).

Manufacturing

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the productivity growth figures in manufacturing industry in Scotland for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Over the year to March 1988, output per head in Scottish manufacturing industry was 9·8 per cent. higher than a year earlier. This compares with an increase of 7·3 per cent. in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Business (Overseas Investment)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of overseas investment attracted by Scottish businesses for each of the last three years.

Mr. Lang: There are no figures available for the total amount of overseas investment attracted by Scottish businesses. Figures for investment and jobs associated with offers of regional selective assistance projects by overseas-owned companies for the last three financial years are as follows:

	Associated investment (£m)	Associated jobs created and safeguarded
1985-86	646·8	4,380
1986-87	316·6	4,360
1987-88	240·2	5,820

Earnings

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average earnings rate in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees on adult rates in Scotland in April 1988 are estimated in the Department of Employment's new earning survey to have been £204·50. Scotland continues to rank highly among the GB standard regions, and was behind only the south-east and north-west in April 1988.

Single Parent

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the application by the Scottish Council for Single Parents for renewal of funding for its training unit under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1988; and whether he will make it his policy to take into account the work already being done by this and similar organisations on the reliance of single parents on social security.

Mr. Rifkind: Decisions on the large number of applications received for funding under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 will be announced shortly. The contribution made by applicant organisations in their respective areas of social work provision is one of a number of factors taken into account in reaching a decision on funding.

Alcohol

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many alcohol-related offences were reported to children's panels in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is available only for 1987 and for three social work authorities. Referrals for drunkenness and liquor licensing offences in that year were:

	Number
Central	9
Grampian	6
Strathclyde	145

They accounted for 0·9 per cent. of offence referrals in those areas. No information is available on offences where alcohol was a contributory factor.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet representatives of the Scottish Football Association to discuss the issue of alcohol abuse involving persons under 18 years of age and to seek their assistance in banning all advertising at football grounds throughout Scotland of alcoholic drinks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The codes of practice relating to the advertising of alcohol generally have recently been strengthened, particularly in their requirements about advertising and young people. The ministerial group on alcohol misuse, which initiated the review of the codes, intends to monitor the effects of the changes.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish councils concerning alcohol abuse and the consumption of alcohol in public places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Three district councils have written concerning the possible use of byelaws to prohibit consumption of alcohol in specified public places and one has written to express support for a Bill to control under-age drinking in public.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Scottish churches; and whether he discussed with them the problem of alcohol abuse.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no recent discussions with representatives of Scottish churches or any request for such a discussion on the problem of alcohol abuse.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many prosecutions there were for the offence of drinking under age in Scotland in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the average fine for the offence of drinking under age in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table. Persons under 18 consuming exciseable liquor in a bar are not separately identifiable from persons under 18 purchasing such liquor.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children were taken into care where alcohol abuse was involved in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to make it an offence for a person under the age of 18 years to consume alcohol in public places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no present plans to do so, but I am consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to seek their views on those problems and on whether changes in legislation might assist in dealing with them and will take their views into account.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will support the request from a number of Scottish councils to impose a bye/law to prohibit the consumption of alcohol in designated public places; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: To date only one council has requested agreement to the making of a byelaw that would prohibit the consumption of alcohol in designated public places. In that case I have indicated that in its particular circumstances it may be possible to achieve the desired objective by the use of a management rule. As two other councils have also indicated interest in making such a byelaw, I am consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to seek their views on the need for such byelaws and on their likely effectiveness in dealing with the problems commonly associated with drinking in public. Once I have had an opportunity to study their replies I shall decide whether it may be possible to approve such byelaws as part of an experimental scheme of limited duration.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Police Federation about the problem of alcohol abuse by persons under the age of 18 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chief constable of Strathclyde; and whether he discussed the problem of alcohol abuse involving persons under the age of 18 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the chief constable of Strathclyde police at the Lockerbie memorial service on 4 January when this topic was not discussed.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many convictions for the offence of breach of the peace where alcohol was directly or indirectly involved there were in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give details of the number of convictions of persons under the age of 18 years, for violent crime where alcohol has been directly or indirectly involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of representations made to him on the problem of persons under the age of 18 years consuming alcohol in public; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Only three representations have been received, one from a district council and two from community councils, specifically on the problems associated with persons under 18 years drinking alcohol in public. While the consultation paper we issued on the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1986 did not include this particular topic, some 60 respondents expressed concern about underage drinking in general. I am consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to seek their views on these problems and on whether changes in legislation might assist in dealing with them.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many retailers were convicted of selling alcohol to persons under the age of 18 years in each year since 1979;

(2) how many people were convicted of being agents in the sale of alcohol to persons under the age of 18 years in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table. Retailers are not separately identifiable, but in general, licensees are legally responsible for the actions of their agents in this matter.

Children in Care

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children have been taken into care in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of children admitted into care in Scotland, excluding Strathclyde, in each year between 1979 and 1987 is given in the table.

Year ending 31 March	Number of children admitted into care
1979	3,306
1980	3,105
1981	3,093
1982	3,016
1983	2,758
1984	2,556
1985	2,692
1986	2,891
1987	2,664

Comparable information for Strathclyde is not available for years before 1987 when 5,390 children were admitted into care in the region.

Aluminium

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with Scottish water authorities about pollution from aluminium contained in drinking water.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department is in frequent contact with the water authorities about the quality of drinking water supplies, to monitor compliance with EC standards. Aluminium is one of the substances concerned. The Department keeps closely in touch with research on aluminium in drinking water and provides guidance to the water authorities on the findings of such research as and when necessary.

National Farmers Union

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend and my noble Friend have regular meetings with union representatives to discuss issues of current concern; most recently my noble Friend met the president and other representatives on 30 January to discuss the reform of the EC beef regime.

Salmonella

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been made to him by groups or individuals about the effects of salmonella from eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As at 30 January, my right hon. and learned Friend had received three letters from hon. Members expressing concern about the implications of salmonella from eggs. In addition officials have received one letter from an individual and about 70 telephone inquiries, largely on the cooking implications.

European Commission

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the European Commission on 4 October 1988 when he led a mission to Brussels organised by Scottish Financial Enterprise. The mission consisted mainly of representatives of financial sector companies but included representatives of manufacturing industry, local government and the Scottish Trades Union Congress. The purposes of the mission were to allow the participants to learn about the likely effects of the completion of the single European market on their areas of interest and to ensure that the Commission was fully aware of the distinctive characteristics and potential of the Scottish financial community.

Cold Weather

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of pensioners; and whether he discussed fuel poverty and cold weather payments for the elderly.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend Lord Glenarthur, then Minister of State, Scottish Office, met representatives of Age Concern in 1987. I understand that fuel poverty and cold weather payments were not raised at that meeting.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of deaths recorded in Scotland each year since 1979 from cold weather-related illnesses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is available on deaths from hypothermia. This is as follows:

Deaths with any mention of hypothermia, Scotland, 1979-88

Coal Imports

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what tonnage of imported coal is presently stocked by the South of Scotland electricity board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland electricity board that coal from different sources is not stocked separately at the power stations.

Ministers' Offices

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of expenditure on the refurbishment of his and other Ministers' offices at the Scottish Office, Edinburgh, since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: There has been no expenditure on refurbishing my office in Edinburgh or those of my ministerial colleagues since 1979 other than that incurred in the recent removal to St. Andrew's house. Final costs of that removal are not yet available, but are likely to be in the order of £150,000.

Appointments

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the appointments within his control as Secretary of State and all appointments made by him since June 1987, with salaries and expenses.

Mr. Rifkind: The list of non-departmental public bodies to which I make appointments is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies", a copy of which is available in the Library. The list includes information about the numbers of appointments and the remuneration paid to members. One major body has been set up since the publication of "Public Bodies 1988". This is Scottish Homes to which I have appointed a chairman (remuneration £27,600 per annum) and eight members (£3,775 per annum).

While a list of all appointments made since June 1987 could be provided only at disproportionate cost, a list (correct at 5 December 1988) of all the members of the bodies listed in "Public Bodies" was placed in the Library in response to a Question from the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) answered on 7 December 1988 at column 211.

I also make appointments jointly with other Ministers. The majority of these are shown in the appropriate chapters in "Public Bodies". Other bodies in this category are:

Potato Marketing Board Wool Marketing Board	Remuneration determined by Boards
Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce	Chairman £4,920 per annum Members expenses only

I make appointments of two members to each of:

Board
Scottish Milk Marketing Board Aberdeen and District Milk Marketing Board North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board	Remuneration determined by Boards

Other appointments for which I am responsible are:

Body	Appointment	Remuneration
Preliminary Review Committee for Life Sentence Prisoners	Chairman and 4 members	As for Parole Board for Scotland
Appeals Tribunal Panel under Section 64 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968	12 members	£98 per day
Advisory Group on Breast Cancer Screening	Chairman and 15 members	Expenses only
The Single Market Committee of the Scottish Economic Council	Chairman and 11 members	Expenses only
St. Andrew's Links Trust	Chairman	Expenses only

Body	Appointment	Remuneration
Post Qualification Education Board for NHS Pharmacists in Scotland	Chairman and 10 members	Expenses only
Consumer Committee for Scotland under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958	Chairman	Expenses only
Committee of Investigation for Scotland under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958	Chairman	Expenses only

Coal Industry

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he last met Mr. Albert Wheeler; and whether he discussed the future of the Scottish coal industry;

(2) when he last met representatives of the National Union of Mineworkers to discuss the Scottish coal industry.

Mr. Lang: Government responsibility for the coal industry in Great Britain, including Scotland, rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has therefore not discussed the industry with Mr. Wheeler or the National Union of Mineworkers.

Electricity

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with Scottish voluntary consumer groups about the setting up of consumer committees responsible for the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Lang: The existing electricity consultative councils for the north and south of Scotland, which operate under the provisions of the Electricity (Scotland) Act 1979 and which have been in existence broadly in their present form since 1947, include representatives nominated by voluntary consumer groups. The councils have been consulted by the Scottish Office about the Government's proposed regulatory regime for the electricity supply industry after privatisation, including the setting up of consumer committees which will be responsible to the Director General of Electricity Supply (DGES) in Scotland.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated average additional cost to the Scottish consumer of the recent increase in electricity prices yearly until 2002.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland electricity board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board that the estimated average additional costs to electricity consumers within their areas of the most recent increase in tariffs, which took effect on 1 April 1988, are as set out in the table.

	SSEB		NSHEB
	Increase £/pa	Average consumption KWh/pa	Increase £/pa	Average consumption KWh/pa
Domestic tariff	10·96	3,800	13·41	4,921
Domestic white meter tariff	19·55	11,400	19·99	12,589

The effect of these increases will remain the same for each year up to 2002, assuming that the average consumptions and patterns of usage remain the same.

An Comunn Gaidhealach

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he hopes to respond to An Comunn Gaidhealach's structure plan for 1987 to 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In March 1987 my Department asked An Comunn Gaidhealach to present a financial plan setting out its policies and expenditure proposals for the period 1987 to 1991. The plan was intended to inform decisions on grant aid to An Comunn for 1988-89 and generally to help with the assessment of the Society's aims, objectives and capabilities. This is the approach followed with non-departmental public bodies and other organisations requesting financial assistance. My officials have discussed the plan with An Comunn on several occasions, and will continue to do so.

Special Branch

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much from the total police budget was allocated to the special branch for each year from 1979 to the current date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. The allocation of expenditure on special branch activities is a matter for the chief constable of the force concerned.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bodies and organisations which have responded to the consultation document "The Scottish New Towns—Maintaining the Momentum".

Mr. Lang: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Housing Estates (Sale)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has been notified of any approaches for buying estates owned by the Scottish Special Housing Association.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars) on 10 January at columns 558-60.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his instruction to Scottish Homes over the sale of housing estates, or their transfer outside the public sector;

(2) what is his policy towards permitting the sale of housing estates that are currently part of the Scottish Special Housing Association and consultation with tenants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes will have a central role in implementing the Government's housing policy including arrangements to diversify tenure in public sector housing to give tenants a wider choice of housing. In certain circumstances, therefore, it will be appropriate for Scottish Homes to consider proposals by other landlords for the voluntary transfer of houses in its ownership. A number of such proposals have been submitted to the Scottish Special Housing Association and I have announced that it will be for Scottish Homes to respond formally to these proposals after 1 April 1989. The Government have said that Scottish Homes will apply to any such proposals the principles underlying the statutory safeguards for proposed sales by local authorities set out in the Housing Act 1988. Scottish Homes has been invited to draw up detailed procedures which follow closely relevant aspects of the guidelines, issued in September 1988, to local authorities on the voluntary transfer of housing to private bodies together with supplementary guidance which is relevant to disposals by Scottish Homes. A copy of the supplementary guidance will be placed in the House of Commons Library as soon as possible. The procedures to be adopted by Scottish Homes will be published when they have been agreed with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 30 January 1989 that he has agreed a number of basic principles to be adopted by Scottish Homes in handling these matters after 1 April 1989. In particular proposals will in the first instance be assessed rapidly by Scottish Homes and those not rejected will be made public immediately. Scottish Homes will then consider the proposals in greater detail and, where these are judged to be practicable, tenants and other interested organisations such as local authorities will be consulted. My right hon. and learned Friend has agreed Scottish Homes' proposal that in all cases tenants' views will be ascertained by means of a postal ballot. Only where a majority of tenants replying are in favour of the proposals will Scottish Homes approve proposals and submit them for my right hon. and learned Friend's consent.

My right hon. and learned Friend will not consent to any proposals submitted by Scottish Homes unless he is satisfied that they are in the public interest and in particular that the tenants' interests are properly safeguarded, that the proposals constitute good value for money, and that the arrangements for consulting tenants were properly handled.

Rents

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the increase in average rents for (a) council houses and (b) Scottish Special Housing Association houses since 1979; and what is his estimate of likely increases from 1989 to 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 1979-80 and 1988-89, the average annual council house rent in Scotland increased by £587·35. The increase in council house rents for future years is a matter for the local authorities concerned.

Between 1979-80 and 1988-89, the average rent for Scottish Special Housing Association houses increased by £716·80. The increase for 1989-90 in such rent will be £84·80. The increase in 1990-91 and 1991-92 will be for Scottish Homes to determine.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the numbers on council house, new town and Scottish Special Housing Association waiting lists.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reliable and consistent information on council house waiting list figures is not available centrally. I must therefore refer the hon. Member directly to the local authorities in which he is interested.

With regard to new towns, figures supplied by the development corporations to the Industry Department for Scotland show that waiting list numbers at 31 December were as follows:

New town	Number
East Kilbride	[1]4,272
Glenrothes	1,017
Cumbernauld	1,188
Livingston	686
Irvine	729

New town	Number
Total	7,892

[1]Common waiting list with East Kilbride District Council.

The Scottish Special Housing Association does not maintain waiting lists for its general needs houses. When such houses become vacant the local district council is normally invited to nominate tenants. There are 4,081 names on the association's direct waiting list which covers areas where local authorities have such nomination facilities. The latest available figures show 1,628 names at present on the waiting list for economic expansion housing.

Sub-standard Houses

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homes in Scotland he estimates to be sub-standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department does not make such estimates. Latest estimates by local authorities of the number of houses below the tolerable standard in their areas were published in SDD statistical bulletin HSU No. 3 "Housing Trends in Scotland—Quarter ended 31 March 1988".

SSHA Homes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest figure for the number of Scottish Special Housing Association homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at 20 January 1989, the number of SSHA homes was 77,856.

Radiation (Rannoch)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the most up-to-date figures for the level of air and land radiation for the Rannoch area of north Tayside; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Air sampling, which is appropriate only immediately after an incident, has not been undertaken in the Rannoch area. Soil and vegetation sampling has been undertaken throughout Scotland as part of a comprehensive research programme commissioned by the Department of the Environment and the Scottish Development Department.

The measured level of caesium 137 in the upper 7·5 cm of the soil sample taken in the Rannoch area of north Tayside in 1987 was 2,200 bec/sq m, although levels in an adjoining area were as high as 20,000 bec/sq m.

Final reports on the work are in the course of preparation and when published will be placed in the Library.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the levels of support grant to each local authority in Scotland for each year since 1979, and the percentage increase or decrease above the level of inflation these represented.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Veterinary Medicine (Graduates)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list in the Official Report the total number of women graduates in veterinary medicine in each British college in each of the past five years, showing this figure also as a percentage of the total number of graduates;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the total number of graduates in veterinary medicine at each veterinary college in Britain in each of the past five years.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is shown in the following table. Information prior to 1986 is not readily available.

Women graduates in veterinary medicine in institutions in the United Kingdom

Mr. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the total number of British-domiciled graduates in veterinary medicine who (a) found employment in Britain and (b) found employment outwith Britain in each of the past five years.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is as follows:

Destinations of first degree graduates in veterinary medicine (United Kingdom[1])

1986-87	227	4	231	313

[1] Includes a small number of students at university in Northern Ireland and a small number of non-United Kingdom domiciled students.

Children (Medical Conditions)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the statutory provision made for children of normal ability whose academic progress is impeded by irregular school attendance caused by the crises of chronic medical conditions such as a sickle cell anaemia or asthma.

Mr. Butcher: It is the responsibility of local education authorities to make suitable education available for all children in their area. Such provision can be made either in schools or "otherwise than in schools"—for example, home tuition or hospital education. It is for each authority to determine what provision is appropriate for each child, after having taken account of individual circumstances, such as any particular medical condition.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to introduce additional facilities for additional voluntary contributions within the teachers' superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The prudential pension fund services have been appointed to provide a new additional voluntary contributions (AVC) scheme for teachers who are members of the teachers' superannuation scheme for England and Wales. They have also been appointed to provide these facilities for members of the teachers' scheme in Scotland.

The AVC scheme will offer a flexible, money-purchase alternative to the existing provision for buying-in added years. Members will be able to choose to invest their contributions in a with-profits or a unit-linked fund, or on cash deposit at building society rates of interest, or to apply them to the purchase of additional life insurance cover, or in any combination of these investments. Members will also be free to vary their contributions, and their allocation between investments, at any time.

We intend to lay regulations before Parliament shortly to give effect to the new scheme, and to seek approval for it under section 592 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 so that teachers' contributions are allowable as a deduction from income before assessment to tax. Subject to these requirements, the scheme will come into operation on 1 April 1989, enabling members to secure tax relief on single premium payments in the 1988-89 tax year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he will propose at the coming meeting of the Southern Africa Development co-ordination conference in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her answer, 1 February 1989]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has today told the annual donors meeting of the Southern African development co-ordination conference (SADCC) that commitments of British aid for SADCC projects now stand at £60 million. This follows his approval of a £15 million project to finance the second phase of the rehabilitation of the Limpopo railway linking Zimbabwe to Maputo. He has announced that Britain will contribute £500,000 to the programme co-ordinated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to repatriate Namibian refugees from Angola and Zambia; and that we are ready when appropriate to provide technical assistance to help reopen the Benguela railway in Angola. He has also announced an additional £250,000 to help finance UNHCR's programme for Mozambican refugees in Malawi, bringing total British aid for this purpose to £3·328 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recently available index figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the figure for the same month in 1973, 1979, 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Atkins: The figures are as follows:

	Manufacturing Output (1985 = 100)
November 1973	111·2
November 1979	106·6
November 1983	94·9
November 1986	104·1
November 1988	116·4

Credit

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what efforts are being made by the credit card companies and associated banks to assist those borrowers with problems of excessive personal indebtedness.

Mr. Maude: The clearing banks through the banking information service provide information on credit and debt, through educational visits, videos and literature. Some 20 financial organisations, of which seven are banks, are providing £750,000 over a period of three years for money advice.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the average merchant service charge paid by retailers accepting (a) Visa, (b) Access, (c) American Express and (d) Diners Club for each year since 1984.

Mr. Maude: Merchant service charges paid by retailers accepting credit cards are a matter for commercial negotiation between the retailer and card company, and information about these charges is not held by my Department.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what range of interest rates are available to personal borrowers in the following categories: (a) bank credit cards, (b) store credit cards, (c) mortgages, (d) bank loans and (e) other forms of credit.

Mr. Maude: Detailed information on ranges of interest rates available to personal borrowers is not centrally available. The Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980 (SI 1980/51) prescribe the items to be included in and the method of calculating the annual percentage rate of charge (APR) so that consumers can compare the various rates on offer.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what proportion of credit card applicants have been rejected by the credit card companies in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Maude: The information requested is not available. Whether to accept or reject a credit card application is a commercial decision for the card company concerned. However, a major credit card company recently announced that it rejects about one in three applications.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has as to what proportion of borrowers in each of the following categories pay interest at the full annual percentage rate; and what is the average percentage paid in each category (a) bank credit cards, (b) store credit cards, (c) bank loans and (d) other forms of credit;

(2) what information he has as to the annual increases in borrowing on which interest is paid for (a) bank credit cards, (b) unsecured personal loans, (c) secured personal loans and (d) loans from retailers for each year since 1984.

Mr. Maude: Credit business statistics published by the Department (there is no earlier comparable data) show that the amounts outstanding to lenders from borrowers were:

£ million

	Bank credit cards	Retailers	Bank loans (on personal accounts)	Finance houses etc.
1986	838	95		1,452
1987	889	357	1,711	2,619
[1]1988	449	70	940	1,500

[1] First half.

However, the statistics do not distinguish the proportion of borrowers who pay interest on the credit available from those who only borrow for a free credit period.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what weighting is given, when calculating annual percentage rates, of the effect of the free credit period which holders of bank credit cards receive from the day of their purchase to their statement date.

Mr. Maude: Items to be included in the annual percentage rate of charge and the way it is calculated are set out in the Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980 (SI 1980/51). Any period of interest-free credit is not taken into account in the calculation of the annual percentage rate of charge.

Energy Saving Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on the development and encouragement of energy saving schemes in the public and private sector.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 26 January 1989]: Payments made over the past six years by my Department to the private sector under schemes explicitly designed to encourage and develop energy savings are itemised in the table.

£000's

Scheme	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	Total
Energy audit scheme	20	13	0	0	0	33
Industrial energy thrift scheme	2	3	0	6	—	11
Renewable energy source scheme	24	11	0	2	0	37
Energy conservation demonstration scheme	338	194	134	16	0	682
Industrial heat recovery consultancy scheme	291	594	878	173	7	1,943
Total	675	815	1,012	197	7	2,706

The responsibility of the then Department of Industry for improving energy efficiency in United Kingdom industry was passed to the Department of Energy in 1982 on the recommendation of a Rayner review. The payments shown in the table (excepting those for the industrial heat recovery scheme) arose from contracts entered into prior to the review. The industrial heat recovery scheme closed to new applicants in 1986. The activities of the regional energy efficiency officers located in the Department's regional offices are paid for by the Department of Energy under an agency agreement. Payments made under other DTI industrial support schemes contain conservation-related components but these are not separately identifiable.

Funds devoted by the Department to savings on the costs of its own energy consumption are likely to be some £208,000 in 1988-89.

EMPLOYMENT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if in the light of the training and experience required of workers in the Channel tunnel, he will take steps to bring this and similar activities under supervision of Her Majesty's inspectors of mines and within the Mines and Quarries Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The decision on which inspectorate supervises a particular activity is an internal management matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, and it is for them to decide on that allocation. The Channel tunnel project is a work of engineering construction and is regulated by the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and the construction regulations, which are enforced by HM factory inspectorate.

Docks (Deaths and Injuries)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of deaths, serious injuries and minor injuries sustained in the docks industry (a) in dock labour scheme ports and (b) in non-scheme ports, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The figures are not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

YTS

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, on 30 January, he will give such information as he has as to the level of compensation or damages received by the families concerned following fatalities on YTS schemes from: (a) departmental or Training Agency payments and (b) insurance cover of YTS managing agents and training managers.

Mr. John Cope: The Department or Training Agency does not offer compensational damages to families of trainees fatally injured on YTS. However YTS managing agents and training managers are contractually obliged to obtain insurance to cover any claims to compensation or damages. Compensational damages paid by either insurance companies or YTS managing agents and training managers are a private matter between them and the trainees' families. The Training Agency is not informed of these settlements.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Extradition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has made extradition applications for terrorist offences; and how often, by whom, and for what reasons such requests have been rejected.

The Attorney-General: With respect to extradition requests to the Republic of Ireland I refer the hon. Member to answers given on 8 and 13 December 1988 by my hon. Friends the Minister of State for the Home Office, the Scottish Office and the Northern Ireland Office and to the answers I gave on 19 December 1988 to my hon. Friends the Members for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow and for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook).

Applications for extradition from other countries are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Land Registry Offices

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average time taken by each of the land registry offices from receipt to completion of property transfers for each of the years 1984 to 1988.

The Attorney-General: The average completion times in weeks at each office for all categories of substantive applications at the end of December for the year indicated are shown in the table.

PRIME MINISTER

Environmental Protection

Q7. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to improve co-ordination between Government Departments to promote the protection of the environment.

Q23. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to improve co-ordination between Government Departments to promote the protection of the environment.

Q87. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to improve co-ordination between Government Departments to promote the protection of the environment.

Q124. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to improve co-ordination between Government Departments to promote the protection of the environment.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the present arrangements effectively promote environmental protection.

Q95. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to create a department of environmental protection; and if she will make a statement.

Q115. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to create a department of environmental protection; and if she will make a statement.

Q98. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to create a department of environmental protection; and if she will make a statement.

Q155. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to create a department of environmental protection; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We already have a Department of the Environment whose duties include environmental protection matters.

Scottish Development Agency

Q27. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister whether, following to the recently published White Paper, "Scottish Enterprise", it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to retain the name of the Scottish Development Agency.

The Prime Minister: It seems sensible to have a new name for a new body, but we shall consider carefully all the comments received on the White Paper.

Global Environment

Q66. Mr Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to convene an international conference on global environmental issues.

Q113. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to convene an international conference on global environmental issues.

Q135. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to convene an international conference on global environmental issues.

The Prime Minister: In March my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I are convening an international conference in London to address the major global issue of saving the ozone layer. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will attend a dinner for heads of delegations hosted by my right hon. Friend. President Moi of Kenya will give the keynote speech at the opening ceremony.

Hormone Ban

Q126. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Hyndburn to discuss the threat to steak pie and ox tongue production posed by the EEC hormone ban.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Zeus and Securipol

Mr. M. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all Government contracts with (a) Zeus and (b) Securipol Ltd. since 1979; and if she will give the purpose of each contract.

The Prime Minister: Details of contracts placed by other Government Departments are not held centrally. Records for my office are readily available only from April 1984. No contracts have been placed with, or payment made to, Zeus or Securipol Ltd. by on behalf of my office during that period.

Monitoring (Contracts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government has contracted out to any private company the monitoring of individuals or organisations who are concerned about or object to the sub-sea disposal of nuclear waste; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The recent consultation exercise undertaken by UK Nirex Ltd. on the options for a deep disposal facility for radioactive waste has enabled individuals or organisations to make their views known. I know of no monitoring of those concerned about or objecting to the sub-sea disposal option.

Engagements

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Key: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Brussels Treaty

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to present to the House the amendment to the treaty of Brussels of 1948, providing for the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The accession of Spain and Portugal to the Western European Union does not require an amendment to the treaty of Brussels which was modified in 1954. However, the protocol of accession of Spain and Portugal to the organisation will be laid before the House shortly.

HEALTH

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what foods have been found to be contaminated with listeria following diagnosis of a medical condition which has resulted from the consumption of such foods.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Two cases of listeriosis in the United Kingdom have been associated with the consumption of soft cheese, one with cooked chicken and one with vegetable rennet.

Resources

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate for each English regional health authority the percentage resource difference from its resource allocation working party target in 1989-90 on the basis of the resource allocations presently outlined.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The allocations for 1989-90 which I announced on 21 December 1988 allow every regional health authority to benefit from the additional resources available. These allocations were even handed and not based on the old RAWP method. As the White Paper published on 31 January makes clear, the Government now intend to move on from RAWP to a simpler and fairer system. Distances from target on the old basis are therefore no longer relevant and will no longer be produced by my Department.

Haemoglobinopathy Services

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many replies are still outstanding to his Department's questionnaire on haemoglobinopathy services from the district health authorities canvassed.

Mr. Freeman: Four replies to the questionnaire on screening and counselling for sickle cell and thalassaemic diseases are still outstanding.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, 16 January, Official Report, columns 36-37, what is (a) the number of batches of the blood product factor 8 which have been discarded due to viral hepatitis B infection, (b) the dates on which such batches were discarded and (c) the percentage of overall production which the discarded batches represent.

Mr. Freeman: I am advised that since 1982 when the Central Blood Laboratories Authority was established, batches of factor 8 were discarded for this reason in 1983, 1984 and 1988. A total of 10 batches representing approximately 1 per cent. of batches produced were involved.

Listeriosis (Plymouth)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients with listeriosis were treated in Plymouth hospitals during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold this information centrally. However, the information we have obtained from South Western regional health authority is as follows:

Number of patients with listeriosis treated in Plymouth hospitals

Financial Year
1986-87	information not available
1987-88	none
1988-89	not yet available

Cook-chill Meals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield, Official Report, 23 January, column 411, he will indicate the sources of the evidence presented to his Department's expert group which suggested that the cook-chill meals produced would be safe and microbiologically sound.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The expert group which recently reviewed the existing guidelines considered published and unpublished papers on the microbiological safety of the system, including papers on low temperature pathogens.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield, Official Report, 23 January, column 411, there was any evaluation of cook-chill catering in relation to possible dangers from listeria and other psychrotrophs undertaken by the Department of Health and Social Security between 1970 and 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The expert group which produced the cook-chill catering guidelines between 1977 and 1980 did not evaluate possible dangers from listeria and other psychrotrophs. At that time there was, and there remains, no evidence to indicate that the recommendations in the guidelines would lead to problems from listeria monocytogenes or other pathogenic psychrotrophs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has prepared draft regulations to cover cook-chill food at retailing outlets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) and my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 23 January 1989 at columns 410-11 and 27 January at column 801.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nursing Staff

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many nursing staff at all levels are employed in the Mourne hospital, Kilkeel; how many of these staff have been advised of their new grades under the clinical grading review; and how many appeals have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 37 nursing staff employed in the Mourne hospital, Kilkeel all of whom have been advised of their new grades. Twenty-six asked to have their grading reviewed under the informal review procedure and eight nursing staff who remained dissatisfied have invoked the formal grievance procedure.

Empty Properties

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent figure for empty local authority housing; how many of these properties have been vacant for periods over six, 12 and 24 months, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Provision of public sector housing in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am informed by its chief executive that at 31 December 1988 the information requested is:

	Number
Total number of vacant properties	2,525
Vacant 6-12 months	335
Vacant over 12 months	1,072
Vacant over 24 months	n/a

The figures include properties which are not available for letting—properties awaiting demolition, those used for decanting purposes and those awaiting improvement or repairs.

Alcohol-related Illness

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in the Greater Belfast area are estimated to be suffering from alcohol-related illnesses; and what has been the trend during the past ten years.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available.

Bathing Water

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those beaches in Northern Ireland which failed to meet the European directive on bathing water quality standards in the last year for which data is available; when it is planned for each of these beaches to meet these standards; and what is the estimated cost in each case.

Mr. Needham; Information on the quality of Northern Ireland's bathing water during the 1988 bathing season is at present being collated. I expect the results to be announced before the start of this year's bathing season. We have recently improved the sewage treatment facilities at Ballycastle, Co Antrim, at a cost of almost £1 million and are currently providing sewage treatment facilities at Newcastle, Co Down, at an estimated cost of £5 million. Further improvements will be considered if the 1988 results show that they are necessary.

Elderly People (Residential Care)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of continuing care residential places are provided for the elderly (a) by local authorities, (b) by voluntary organisations and (c) by the private sector in each health board for (i) the year 1987 and (ii) the year 1988.

Mr. Needham: The information is not held centrally in exactly the form requested. At 31 December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the percentage of all available places for the elderly (including a small number of places designated for rehabilitation or respite care) in each of the health and social services board was as follows:

Type	Eastern per cent.	Northern per cent.	Southern per cent.	Western per cent.	NI average
Statutory[1]	55·6	70·5	73·9	74·5	64·1
Voluntary	28·9	11·1	16·0	24·0	22·4
Private	15·5	18·4	10·2	1·5	13·6

[1] In Northern Ireland local authorities have no responsibility for statutory residential homes: these are provided by the four health and social services boards.

Milk Quotas

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to allocate milk quotas to those producers who had temporarily entered into Community schemes for the cessation of milk production at the time when the original milk quotas were established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The Council of Agriculture Ministers has agreed measures to comply with the ruling of the European Court in the Mulder case. When the necessary Community legislation has been published, steps will be taken to implement the arrangements in the United Kingdom.

WALES

Hospitals (Locum Services)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much each health authority spent in 1988 on the fees paid to medical employment agencies for providing locum services for their hospitals; and what was the highest, lowest and average hourly rate paid by each health authority.

Mr. Grist: Details of the hourly rates paid by Welsh health authorities for locum services are not collected centrally. The health authorities' annual accounts do not disaggregate expenditure on locum services within hospitals from overall expenditure on such services. During 1987-88 the total expenditure on medical locum services by each District Health Authority in Wales was as follows:

Clwyd	198·8
East Dyfed	221·4
Gwent	0·7
Gwynedd	348·5
Mid Glamorgan	569·3
Pembrokeshire	392·7
Powys	4·5
South Glamorgan	1·9
West Glamorgan	221·6
Wales	1,959·4

Source: Health Authorities Annual Accounts.

Building (Ceredigion)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he can make an estimate of the acreage of land available with planning consent for building homes in Ceredigion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being taken in the current year to build nursery factories in Ceredigion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Development Board for Rural Wales' factory construction programme for 1988-89 includes plans for the construction of four 1,500 sq. ft. units in Cardigan and six 750 sq. ft. units in Aberystwyth. The board has offered grant assistance to Ceredigion district council to provide a workshop of 1,500 sq. ft. in Cardigan.

Elderly People (Residential Care)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of continuing care residential places are provided for the elderly (a) by local authorities, (b) by voluntary organisations and (c) by the private sector in each health authority for (i) the year 1987 and (ii) the year 1988.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the table:

Percentage of total residential places in homes for the elderly[1]

	Local authority homes		Voluntary homes		Private homes
	1987	1988	1987	1988	1987	1988
Clwyd	27·5	26·0	4·6	4·2	67·9	69·8

Welsh Language Board

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make a statement on the work of the Welsh Language Board.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend will respond to the Welsh Language Board's findings as they emerge.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the extent to which Mr. Edward Rea's membership of the Welsh Language Board is compatible with his current membership of and recent position as council member of the Economic League; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the Welsh Water Authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letters to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied.

Mr. Grist: The Authority has not advised any intention to seek consent variations in respect of works of this size.

THE ARTS

Museum and Gallery Attendances

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 24 January, Official Report, column 486, which figures of museum and gallery attendances during 1988 in his answer were actual and which were estimated.

Mr. Luce: The term "estimated" allows for a margin of error at those institutions where the number of visitors is counted manually. In such cases figures are usually regarded as being accurate to within 5 per cent.

Libraries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts why his Department failed to include the Library Association in the organisations consulted about the European Community's proposed programme on "A European Space for the Book" which includes specific recommendations relating to libraries.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 31 January 1989]: No European Community proposals for "A European Space for the Book" have yet been put forward for discussion, although some preliminary ideas are in circulation, including those of the current Presidency of the Community. The Library Association will be among those organisations consulted if proposals are put forward with a library component.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his estimates of future rates of inflation for (a) the next five and (b) the next 10 years; and what assumptions were made in their calculation.

Mr. Lilley: The Treasury does not publish such forecasts.

Personal Borrowing

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to what levels of personal borrowing are attributable to (a) bank credit cards, (b) store credit cards, (c) mortgages, (d) bank loans and (e) other forms of credit.

Mr. Lilley: The table is adapted from figures in table 9.3 of the January edition of Financial Statistics.

Outstanding Stock of Personal Sector Borrowing, September 1988

	£ billion	Percentage of total
Total	286	100
of which:
Bank credit cards	6	2
Non-bank credit, including store credit cards	7	3
Mortgages	215	75
Other bank loans[1]	57	20
Other credit (with insurance companies)	1	—

[1] Includes some borrowing by unincorporated businesses.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to what percentage of bank credit card holders on average repay in full each month, for each year since 1984.

Mr. Lilley: Data are not collected centrally in the form requested.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his practice when answering questions by reference to previous written answers which have been published in the Official Report to attach the answer so referred to.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No; to copy extracts from the Official Report for hon. Members would be an inappropriate use of resources.

Community Charge Tribunals

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with whom he consulted before imposing a pay settlement, without negotiations, on staff of the new community charge tribunals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. The Department has not imposed a settlement. An offer increasing the pay of local valuation panel staff has been tabled, which the Society of Clerks and NALGO are considering.

ENVIRONMENT

Whitehall Car Services

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure continued security of the Whitehall parcel delivery and self-drive car service subsequent on its contracting out.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will take whatever steps are necessary.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement his Department's proposals to enable the site licensing authority to take into account the previous performance of an applicant for a waste disposal site licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a full list of the waste disposal authorities in England, indicating those that have not yet completed their waste disposal plans and deposited them with his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following is a list of waste disposal authorities in England grouped according to the current status of their disposal plans:

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he issues on the circumstances in which information used for the maintenance of the community charge registers may be disclosed to (a) other Departments of Government, (b) the police and (c) public utilities;

(2) what guidance he issues on the use of the personal data collected by the community charge officer for community charge purposes as a general information resource for the charging authority to use for other purposes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We have made no provision for personal data to be disclosed for the purposes or to the organisations mentioned by the hon. Member. Guidance has been issued to registration officers on the disclosure of information in practice notes entitled "The Community Charges Register" and "Data Protection and the Community Charge". Copies of both practice notes are available in the Library.

Housing Defects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department is able to offer to tenants of precast reinforced concrete houses designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984 whose local authorities are unable to afford to repair, or who are unable to secure a mortgage to cover buying or selling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Tenants of properties designated under the housing defects legislation have the right to buy their homes. They will be eligible for discount in the normal way and have a right to a mortgage from their local authority. If the property is unrepaired we advise tenants to get a survey, to establish the structural condition of the property including how soon works might be needed; and to satisfy themselves that the valuation properly reflects this. If tenants are unhappy with the authority's valuation they can seek an independent one from the district valuer.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to exempt from the 1988

Budget changes on tax relief for home improvement those living in precast reinforced concrete houses designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Trippier: Changes to the tax system are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of houses seriously defective, or defective, as defined by statute, in each local housing authority and standard region.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the numbers and distribution, by local authority and region, of properties designated under the housing defects legislation is available in the House Library. This is based on survey material obtained in 1983 and updated in 1986 and again in 1988.

Housing Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 25 January to the hon. Member for Leeds, West, he will give the number of properties repossessed by mortgagors for each six month period from January 1982 to June 1988.

Mr. Trippier: This information is published in table 17 of the BSA bulletin Nos. 49 and 56 copies of which are in the Library.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make a statement on any changes to the home improvement grant entitlement regime.

Mr. Trippier: The Local Government and Housing Bill, published today, contains provisions introducing a new system of home improvement grants to replace those in part XV of the Housing Act 1985. Entitlement for grant will depend on an applicant's financial resources.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of home improvement grants made in each year from 1983 to 1988; and what is his estimate for 1988-89 (a) nationally, (b) for each local housing authority and (c) by standard region;

(2) what was the expenditure in current and standard prices on home improvement grants in each year since 1983 and estimated for 1988-89 (a) nationally, (b) for each local housing authority and (c) by standard region.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested has been laid in the House of Commons Library. The figures, including the advance estimates for 1988-89, are those provided by local authorities on their HIP2 returns.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will hold a public inquiry on section 7(1) submissions from Warrington and Runcorn development corporation affecting Appleton Cross and Graffenhall Hays.

Mr. Trippier: I have yet to receive these submissions. Local inquiries into submissions under section 7(1) of the New Towns Act 1987 are exceptional, but are held when necessary.

Land (Hounslow)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Housing Corporation will purchase the freehold of the land in Hounslow on which the Beaver estate is situated and of which the United Kingdom Housing Trust is the leaseholder.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation, but I understand that it is not its intention to purchase the freehold.

Housing Associations

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the policy of his Department concerning the ability of established housing associations to manage property for temporary letting to homeless people; and whether the Government will facilitate the transfer of council housing to such associations;

(2) if he will explain the policy of his Department concerning cheaper alternatives to bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless households in housing association property.

Mr. Trippier: Housing associations can help provide temporary accommodation for homeless people through lettings both of their own stock and of short life property leased from local authorities. These leasing arrangements work well and I am not aware that any special action is required to facilitate associations' access to council housing.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the reasons for the delay of 347 days before his Department replied to the request of 27 November 1987 by the London borough of Ealing to enter into agreements with Shepherd's Bush housing association and others to manage properties for temporary letting to homeless people, under section 10 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986; and if he will give a date for a reply to this request.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has written to, or telephoned, officers of the London borough of Ealing on eight occasions since the council's application was received in November 1987. We hope that, when they have replied to the latest letter of 29 December 1988, it will be possible to make a final decision.

Superannuation Fund (Norfolk)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to grant the Norfolk local authorities' superannuation fund a sanction under section 19(1) of the Local Government Act 1982 in the even that the legality of the adjustment of contributions, as proposed at the superannuation committee of 26 July 1988, were challenged.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Water Industry

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy that the Director General of Water Services designate will play a role in fixing the cost of water to the consumer;

(2) whom he will be meeting to discuss the value of K, prior to flotation of the water industry.

Mr. Howard: The setting of the initial charges limit applying to water undertakings on their appointment is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. In order to promote consistency of procedures on matters such as consultation with those that the director general is likely to follow in subsequent reviews of the charges limit, he will hold discussions with the director general designate when his/her appointment has been made.

Water Authorities (Sewage Treatment Works)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for the Southern water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(2) if he will list for Wessex water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(3) if he will list for the Severn-Trent water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(4) if he will list for the Northumbria water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(5) if he will list for the Anglian water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(6) if he will list for the South West water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(7) if he will list for the North West water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(8) if he will list for the Thames water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied;

(9) if he will list for the Yorkshire water authority the number of sewage treatment works serving populations of less than 1,000 which are eligible to apply for consent variation, following his letter to the chairman of 21 November 1988, and the number which have applied.

Mr. Howard: The information is not held centrally. No applications from water authorities for variations in the consent conditions for small works serving populations of less than 1,000 have yet been received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations of the 63 sewage treatment works in the Yorkshire water authority area which exceeded their discharge consents in 1987.

Mr. Howard: Seventy-four sewage treatment works in the Yorkshire water authority area exceeded their discharge consents in 1987. Copies of the returns submitted by Yorkshire water authority were placed in the Libraries of both Houses in June last year. The works are identified by name.

Rating Reform

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further developments have taken place since his announcement in December 1988 of the proposed maximum rate limits for rate capped authorities in 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: Of the seven rate-capped authorities, Tower Hamlets has accepted the proposed rate limit within the statutory period.

The remaining six authorities have not accepted the proposed limits. I have carefully considered all the representations made by these authorities, including their proposals to agree a different limit with me, and all other relevant information and representations.

In the case of Camden, I am now seeking from the council further information in relation to certain factual matters it has raised during its representations.

For the remaining five authorities I am now proposing:

(a) in the case of three of these authorities—Greenwich, Lewisham and Thamesdown—no increase in the proposed rate limit;

(b) in the case of Hackney and Southwark a higher limit, on which I am seeking agreement as follows:
Hackney 113p (10.83p above the proposed limit)
Southwark 97p (3·55p above the proposed limit)

Where I am unable to reach agreement with an authority on a different limit from the one I proposed in December, I am required under the Rates Act to prescribe the maximum by order.

Local Authority Business (Conduct)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government have reviewed the proposals on the conduct of local authority business set out in the White Paper Cm 433.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have considered very carefully the many views that have been expressed since the publication of Cm 433. On a number of points they are convinced that the legislation should be adapted to take account of these points. The Local Government and Housing Bill, presented yesterday, is accordingly drafted to give effect to these changes.

The points where the Bill differs from the proposals in the White Paper are as follows:

a. The White Paper proposed that restrictions on public political activity should apply to chief executives of local authorities, chief officers and their deputies, and to the holders of posts which each local authority would be under a duty to designate on the basis of statutory criteria.

The Government have decided that the restrictions on public political activity should also apply, in the first instance, to all local authority staff to whom the Widdicombe committee recommended that they should apply, that is, staff in the grade of principal officer and above.

Such staff would, however, be able to apply to an independent adjudicator for exemption from the restrictions, which would be given if their posts were, in the adjudicator's opinion, ones which could properly be so exempted. The adjudicator would be appointed by the Secretary of State after consultations with representatives of local government.

b. The White Paper proposed that local authorities should be required to designate an officer with duties to advise on the management of the authority's service, and an officer to advise on questions of legality and propriety—the "monitoring officer". It was to be left to the authority whether the chief executive, if there was one, should hold either or both of these posts, except that the chief finance officer could not also be the monitoring officer.

The Government are now persuaded that each local authority should be required to designate one officer as head of their paid service, and that that officer should have the duties to advise on management questions. It would still be left to each authority whether those duties should be combined with those of the monitoring officer or the chief finance officer; the combination of the two latter offices would still not be permitted.

c. The White Paper proposed that there should be a ban on the appointment of advisers to political groups on councils. The Government have decided, in the light of the representations that they have received, that local authorities should be permitted to appoint a very limited number of assitants to political groups, to help councillors in those groups with their duties as councillors. A council will not be required to make such appointments, but where they decide to do so, each of the three largest political groups will be able to make one such appointment, provided that the group contains at least one tenth of the membership of the council. The terms of such appointment will broadly parallel the terms of appointment of special advisers in central Government: they will not be able to discharge functions on behalf of the council; they will not be permitted to manage other council staff; they will not be permitted to be paid at a rate of more than £13,500 a year; and they will be subject to the main restrictions on public political activity. Political groups will decide on their own choices, and will be expressly permitted to take the political views of candidates into account.

d. As an additional safeguard on the appointment of senior local authority officers, the Government have decided that the monitoring officer should be required to report to the authority, in every case in which an appointment is made by the full council, a committee or a subcommittee, either that, in his opinion, the appointment can be made consistently with enactments and standing orders and without taking into account any matter which could not properly be taken into account, or the reasons why he cannot so certify.

Local Authority Capital Finance

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he received to his consultation paper on local authority capital finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The consultation paper "Capital Expenditure and Finance" was published on 7 July 1988. Four hundred and fifty two responses were received by my right hon. Friend and a further 17 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. My right hon. Friends are grateful to all those who set out their views.

The consultation paper proposed, in light of the accountability that will be brought about by the community charge, a switch from controlling capital expenditure as such to controlling the use of credit to pay for it. That proposal appears to have generally been welcomed and the majority of the responses related to individual features of the new system as outlined in the consultation paper, and in particular the method of equal instalments of principal by which it was proposed that provision should be made from revenue accounts to meet existing and future credit liabilities.

Part IV of the Local Government and Housing Bill provides for a new local authority capital finance system broadly on the lines set out in the consultation paper. But, in light of the comments made by respondents, the Bill specifies that revenue account provision for credit liabilities should normally be made by the reducing balance method, though it will be possible for other methods to be specified in regulations.

Under the Bill, local authorities would be able to finance capital expenditure:

a. by credit up to the level specified in credit approvals to be issued by Government departments;

b. without restriction from the usable balance of their capital receipts after part has been set aside to reduce their indebtedness; and

c. without restriction from revenue contributions.

To assist them with their planning, a letter setting out details of part IV is being sent to the local authorities to which it will apply. I am placing a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

"Local Authorities' Interests in Companies"

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached as a result of the consultative paper "Local Authorities' Interests in Companies" issued in June 1988.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales have considered the responses received to the consultation paper and have decided to make a number of amendments to the proposals which are set out in the document which I have today placed in the Library of the House.

The amendments are:

(i) the addition of mutual companies, combined heat and power companies and waste disposal companies to the categories of companies in which local authorities are permitted to have a minority interest;

(ii) the exemption of bodies funded by grants under section 56(9)) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 which are deducted from the aggregate amount available for block grant; other exemptions will be considered case by case where companies are, in effect, dependent on central Government grant, since their activities can then be monitored in other ways.

(iii) the relaxation of the proposed rule that companies controlled by local authorities at arm's length should not have any local authority members or officers on the board of the company.

(iv) the spouses of officers of a local authority will no longer be a category of persons whose involvement in a company would establish a link with a local authority.

Rating Reform

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a typical ward sister would pay (a) in rates, (b) in community charge and (c) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroom flat in Walthamstow.

Mr. Gummer: A ward sister earning £15,000, living in a flat in Walthamstow worth £55,000 with a rateable value of £300, would pay a rates bill of £634, a community charge of £269, disregarding the transitional safety net, and £665 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon.

Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), Official Report, 12 January 1989, column 742, updating table F5 of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), he will publish a table (a) showing for each band of equivalent net income what percentage of all households fall into that band, and what percentage of adults live in households falling in that band, (b) on the same basis as Table F5 in the Green Paper, but with the bands of equivalent net income adjusted so that 10 percentage of households fall into each band, and showing what proportion of those households whose net community charge is projected to be higher than their net rates, fall into each income band.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1989]: Table A shows the percentage of households, the percentage of adults, and the percentage of households whose illustrative net community charge for 1988-89 would have been higher than net rates, in each band of net household income. Table B shows the same information in bands of equivalent net household income. Figures on a decile basis are not available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of gainers and losers and the amount of gain or loss, broken down by family type and net equivalent income bands, from the introduction of the community charge;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) couples with children and (b) one-parent families who gain or lose from the introduction of the community charge and how much they gain or lose, broken down into net equivalent income bands.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1989]: The information requested for household and tax unit types is given in the tables below in ranges of equivalent net income and actual net income. The figures have been calculated in the same manner as those I placed in the Library on 15 December exemplifying the distributional impact of the community charge.

The figures show that 83 per cent. of single pensioner households and 75 per cent. of other single adult households would gain from the introduction of the community charge. Similarly 79 per cent. of lone parent families and 57 per cent. of couples with children would gain.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to prevent future oil spillages in the English channel to protect the south coast from pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Under the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships 1973, and its protocol, no oil or oily mixtures may be discarded within prescribed distances from land; and ships are required to be so designed, equipped and operated that when a discharge is permitted the oil content has to be kept to the minimum specified. We have taken a number of positive measures to enforce the convention. Ships in the United Kingdom port are inspected to check that their pollution prevention equipment and operational practices are satisfactory. Reception facilities are made available to receive oil residues retained on board. At sea, as from April last year surveillance aircraft have been employed by the United Kingdom to undertake regular patrols over the shipping lanes around the United Kingdom to detect and deter ships discharging oil in contravention of the convention.

TRANSPORT

Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will advise how many pedestrians were involved in accidents caused by reversing vehicles during 1988, 1987, 1986, 1985, 1984 and 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not collect causes of accidents. These are often disputed, or unclear, at the time of the accident.

The following table shows the total number of pedestrians injured, and the numbers injured by a vehicle reversing, for the years 1983 to 1987.

Pedestrian casualties, and those injured by reversing vehicles: Great Britain 1983-1987

Year	Total pedestrian casualties	Total involving reversing vehicle
1983	61,674	1,928
1984	63,474	1,937
1985	61,390	2,005
1986	60,875	2,100
1987	57,453	2,152

The full figures for 1988 are not yet available. However, among the accidents reported to date, there were 41,905 pedestrian casualties, of which 1,616 occurred while a vehicle was reversing.

Because of the obvious risks, the highway code contains clear advice to drivers to be especially careful when reversing, and not to reverse vehicles for longer than is necessary.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to remove from the United Kingdom register fishing vessels that do not comply with part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

Mr. Portillo: The Merchant Shipping (Registration of Fishing Vessels) regulations which came into force on 1 December 1988 set a four-month transitional period before closure of the old fishing vessel registers. In order for their vessels to be accepted for the new register owners are required to confirm ownership particulars and submit a signed declaration of British character. These are then checked against the criteria in section 14 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 before new certificates of registry are issued.

Vehicle Licence Holders

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licence holders in the United Kingdom have had their licences revoked or have had a non-renewal on health grounds for each of the years from 1985-1988;

(2) what is the total number of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licence holders operating within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures for Great Britain are as follows:

	April to March
	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
PSV licences revoked on medical grounds	502	734	865	880
HGV licences revoked on medical and other grounds	2,281	2,772	3,066	3,249

No separate figures are available for revocations of HGV licences on medical grounds.

The figures for Northern Ireland are as follows:

	January—December
	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988

Figures are not held for the number of vocational licence holders operating within the United Kingdom. The number of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle drivers' licences issued annually are as follows:

	April—March
	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Foreign Aircraft (Compensation)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number and geographical location of cases where United Kingdom citizens who have been killed in the United Kingdom by foreign aircraft have failed to obtain any compensation from the foreign owner, operator or pilot in the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not collected by the Department.

Road Accidents (Derbyshire)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents have taken place in the county of Derbyshire in every year since 1979; and what are the figures for the number of (a) fatal and (b) serious injuries for each year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures requested are shown below. They show personal injury accidents and the casualties resulting from those accidents.

Accidents and casualties in Derbyshire: 1979 to 1987

	Accidents	Casualties
		Fatal	Serious
1979	4,079	111	1,423

Vehicle Speeds (Motorways)

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the proportion of cars exceeding the 70 mph speed limit on motorways continues to fall as it did between 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not yet possible to determine whether car speeds on motorways have fallen since the last of the periodic national speed surveys in 1987. The 1983 and 1987 surveys were conducted using video technology at 54 sites on two days in the months of July and August. In future, vehicle speeds will be collected continuously at about 200 sites using automatic vehicle detectors. At present, data are available from ten of these sites. As only one is on a motorway, proper comparisons cannot be made with the earlier surveys.

Automatic Weighbridges

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 465, which are the main ferry ports to be equipped with automatic weighbridges; when each will come into use; and whether their use will be compulsory for all commercial vehicles entering the United Kingdom through these ports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During the next three months we intend to install automatic weighing equipment on a trial basis in the ports of Dover, Newhaven, Ramsgate, Poole and Felixstowe. Subject to the outcome of the trial, we will consider further installations in other ports. Under existing legislation there is no provision to make the use of the equipment compulsory but it will be capable of weighing all commercial vehicles using the ports.

Road Haulage

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to deregulate road haulage throughout the European Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The EC Council agreed in June last year to abolish all quantitative controls on road haulage within the Community from the end of 1992. The conditions under which non resident operators may carry out road haulage wholly within another member state are under discussion. We are also still discussing the qualitative criteria for access to the profession of road haulage.

Domestic haulage in the United Kingdom itself was effectively deregulated in 1968.

Road and Footpath Surfaces

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to implement the recommendations of the Horne Report relating to the reinstatement of road and footpath surfaces following works done by statutory undertakings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. I refer my hon. Friend to the fuller answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 19 January, column 292.

Dial-a-Ride

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trips were provided by London dial-a-ride in 1988; what proportion of registered disabled used this service each week; how many new buses were provided; how many drivers are currently employed; and what constraints were placed upon the service.

Mr. Portillo: London dial-a-ride services are run by local voluntary management committees and funded by grant which is allocated by London Regional Transport. Membership, staffing, use of other resources, and operating procedures are matters for them and LRT. Government grant for dial-a-ride services in 1987-88 totals £6·27 million which is a 50 per cent. increase on the 1985-86 figure.

Manchester Airport (Accident)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish the report on the Manchester airport disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect the report to be published on 13 March.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to initiate any hearings in Cardiff, Newport, Swansea and other locations in South Wales on the proposals to raise Severn bridge tolls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inquiry will be held at Thornbury, near Bristol. If the inspector is satisfied that there are objectors who cannot get to Thornbury, and providing a suitable venue can be found, the hearing may continue in south Wales for a limited period.

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value of the opening tolls on the Severn bridge in current prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1966 the tolls charged for all types of vehicle crossing the Severn bridge was 2/6d (12½p). The equivalent, at current prices, is 90p.

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what levels the debt at the Severn bridge will reach if (a) there is no increase in tolls or (b) the current proposal to increase tolls to £1 for cars and £2 for lorries is implemented.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If tolls are not increased, our forecasts show that debt would rise indefinitely, so that at the end of the toll period in 2006 it would have reached almost £400 million.

If the proposed tolls are introduced debt will reach a peak of £127 million in 1991, declining thereafter so that tolls would cease by 2006.

The latest figure for the Severn bridge debt is £85·5 million.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will place in the Library copies of his Department's statement of case for increasing the tolls on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am placing copies in the Library today.

Coastguard

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the total amount of overtime worked at each Scottish coastguard rescue centre in 1988, indicating the total cost of such payment.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1989]: The total number of overtime hours worked at each Scottish coastguard rescue station in 1988 was:

Station	Hours
Aberdeen	3,776
Forth	4,871
Shetland	4,267
Pentland	5,127
Moray	6,600
Clyde	6,626
Oban	5,435
Stornoway	4,966

Overtime costs are not recorded by individual station and consequently are not readily available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits and Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North, 16 December 1988, Official Report, column 751, what is the assumption on expected caseload for each of the social security benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to table 15·6, page 7, of Cm 615 "The Government Expenditure Plans 1988-90 to 1991-92".

Single Payments (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount has been paid out in single payments through his Department's office covering Tooting, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amounts paid in single payments by the Department's local offices covering Tooting are shown in the table.

Amounts of single payments made by DSS local offices in the Tooting area during the period 1985-88

	Year[1]
Office[3]	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88[2] £

[1] The periods are from April to April each year.
[2] The figures for 1987-88 are provisional and subject to amendment.
[3] Tooting is covered partially by the two local offices shown.

National Insurance Credits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people had national insurance credits withdrawn in 1987-88 in the United Kingdom, the North West region and Warrington area, respectively; and for how long these credits were withdrawn on average.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is as follows:

Unemployment benefit: Decisions of adjudication officers on contribution credits
Number of fresh or renewable claims disallowed 1987-88[1]

	Number
Great Britain	42,274
North West Region	4,399

[1] Year ending 30 June 1988.

Information shows the number of persons disallowed contribution credits because they were disallowed unemployment benefit. Statistics on disallowance of sickness benefit credits are not available. No statistics are available for Warrington, nor for the average length of time the credits were withdrawn.

Invalidity Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people had their entitlement to invalidity pensions withdrawn during 1988; how many of these have lodged appeals; and, of those, how many have been (a) successful, (b) unsuccessful and (c) how many are still awaiting determination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested on the number of cases where entitlement has been withdrawn is not readily available. The latest administrative statistics on social security appeal tribunals relate to appeals heard in the quarter ending 31 March 1988 and they are given in the table provided.

Social Security Appeal Statistics—quarter ending 31 March 1988

Total number heard and decided	1,241
Number heard in claimant's favour	529
Number outstanding at end of quarter	[1]2,365

[1] Includes appeals outstanding from previous quarter.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of married women whose contributions to the national insurance fund would have entitled them to a pension less than the Category B married woman's pension in each of the last five years; and for each year what was the total amount paid in national insurance contributions by this group.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that these figures are not available.

Hostel Charges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has reached any conclusions on the "Help with Hostel Charges" proposals published in 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We expect to announce final decisions shortly.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if will publish table 15·1 of Cm. 615 in constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

(i). Income support would be reduced by the amount that the earnings exceed the £15 disregard.

National Insurance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total annual revenue received from employees' national insurance contributions paid by employees earning (a) less than £70 per week, (b) less than £105 per week and (c) less than £155 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows

Total annual revenue received from employees' national insurance contributions 1988-89

Earnings of employees	£ billion
Less than £70 a week	0·25
Less than £105 a week	0·85
Less than £155 a week	3·00

All figures are net of contracted out rebate, and exclude the reduced rate contributions paid by some married women and widows.

Single Homeless

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has received a copy of the report of the Nottingham university single homeless monitoring project and from agencies serving the homeless in the Nottingham area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department can trace no record of having received this report.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people live in hostels for the homeless in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The only figures collected centrally are the latest estimates of households placed in hostels by English local authorities. They are given in table 7 of the publication "Local Authorities' Action under the Homelessness Provisions of the 1985 Housing Act; England. Results for Third Quarter 1988, Supplementary Tables" which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Local authorities provide quarterly estimates of the numbers of people accepted as homeless under the terms of the homeless provisions of the Housing Act 1985.

An extract from table 7 of the Supplementary Tables Third Quarter 1988 reads as follows:

Number of households in temporary accommodation at the end of quarter

	Bed and breakfast	Hostels[1]	Others[2]
Ashfield	—	4	—
Bassetlaw	—	—	[3]245
Broxtowe	2	1	19

Mansfield	—	8	16
Newark and Sherwood	—	48	—
Nottingham	1	60	21
Rushcliffe	1	8	9

[1] Including women's refuge.
[2] Including short-life dwellings.
[3] Bassetlaw often let temporary accommodation to homeless families and then rehouse them later.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Active Citizenship

14. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further initiatives he is taking to promote active citizenship.

Mr. Hurd: We are committed to encouraging active and responsible citizenship in people of all ages and from all sections of society. Much can be and is already being done through involvement in charitable work and voluntary groups—for example, through neighbourhood watch and victim support schemes. The Ministerial Group on the Voluntary Sector meets regularly to discuss promotion of volunteering. The Home Office's VSU—voluntary services unit—makes grants of £10 million to support voluntary organisations, many of which exist to promote voluntary activity and to support volunteers.

The Government as a whole spend some £2 billion in helping to fund the voluntary sector.

There is a need for even closer partnership between the public, private and voluntary sectors. I have been having and will continue to have discussions with representatives of all three sectors in order to identify and publicise ways in which people can turn concern into effective voluntary action.

Violent Crime

15. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further action his Department is taking to combat violent crime.

19. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to combat violent crime.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have already strengthened the police, increased maximum sentences and cracked down on the possession of knives and other offensive weapons. New measures this year will include a further addition to police manpower of 1,100 more officers. From yesterday, there exists a new right of appeal for the prosecution against an over-lenient sentence, in addition the private ownership of lethal firearms, like the Kalashnikov rifle, is banned. The Prevention of Terrorism Bill, now before Parliament, will give the police and the courts the special powers which they need to counter the violent terrorist threat.

Chief Constables (Wales)

16. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last had a meeting with the chief constables of police forces in Wales; and how frequently he holds such joint meetings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In exercising his responsibilities for the police service in England and Wales my right hon. Friend frequently has meetings with chief constables. My right hon. Friend has not found it necessary to hold meetings with chief officers of police forces in Wales as a separate group.

Airports (Security)

17. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of police forces for security purposes at airports.

Mr. Hurd: Police are employed on work requiring police skills. Airport staff conduct other procedures such as screening of passengers and baggage. A working party has been examining those recommendations of the Transport Select Committee particularly directed to the police, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I have now asked the working party to consider whether they wish to make any further recommendations in the light of the Lockerbie disaster.

Infant Life Preservation Act 1929

18. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the case for amending the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

66. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the case for amending the Infant Life Preservation Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the past year our records show one leter received in favour of amending the Act.

51. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when was the last prosecution for child destruction under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The last prosecution for which information is available centrally was 1987.

83. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to set up a working party to look into the working of the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

West Mercia Police

20. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in securing greater efficiency and value for money from the West Mercia police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is advised by Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary about the efficiency of provincial police forces. The West Mercia police have improved the value for money they obtain from their resources by means such as the streamlining of administrative procedures and the introduction of operational support units; and the use of information technology for crime pattern analysis and fingerprint identification.

29. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of progress in securing greater efficiency and value for money from the West Mercia police force in considering applications for increases in its establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend announced on 30 January his decision to approve an increase of 28 police posts for West Mercia constabulary with effect from 1 April 1989. Full account was taken of the force's commitment to a programme of civilianisation over recent years.

Television (Scotland)

21. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his proposals for the future of television broadcasting from viewers in the Grampian, Scottish and Border television areas.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of representations from viewers in Scotland, including a preliminary submission from Comunn Na Gaidhlig. We would welcome any further comments during the consultation period which ends on 28 February.

Random Breath Tests

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in favour of random breath testing in the past 12 months.

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the introduction of random breath testing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received representations both for and against random breath testing from a number of organisations, from hon. Members and from individual members of the public. On 1 February, my right hon. Friend announced a period of public consultation on possible changes to police powers to require breath tests.

Crime (Rural Areas)

23. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had about the incidence of public disorder and crime in rural areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had discussions within Government and with representatives of the police, the courts, and the licensed trade about the problems of hooliganism and alcohol-related disorder. Non-metropolitan disorder was considered by a working group comprising Home Office officials and representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the results of which my right hon. Friend announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 21 December.

Radio

24. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking in advance of any future Broadcasting Bill to increase the choice available to radio listeners.

69. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he is doing in advance of any future Broadcasting Bill, to increase the choice available to radio listeners.

Mr. Renton: As I stated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 26 January, at column 671, we have endorsed IBA proposals to award 20 contracts for community radio and a further contract for a station covering Heathrow and Gatwick. In addition, we have authorised BBC and independent local radio stations to provide separate programmes if they wish on each of their current frequencies.

61. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to widen choice for radio listeners.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 26 January to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), at column 671.

Prison Kitchens

25. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request prison governors to liaise with local authority environmental health officers to ensure that the prison service inspections of prison kitchens are of the same standard as those of local authority environmental health officers in other establishments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The existing internal arrangements in the prison service are considered to be sufficient to set and monitor standards equivalent to those that would be required by local authority environmental health officers.

In addition, guidance has recently been issued which encourages governors, together with prison medical officers, to liaise with local authority environmental health officers. The liaison may include informal visits by these officers to prison in an advisory capacity.

Police Cells

26. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held in police cells in England and Wales on 31 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Tuesday 31 January, 349 prisoners were held in police cells in England and Wales. Every effort is being made to reduce that number as quickly as possible in the face of the renewed growth of the inmate population.

72. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the most recent figure for the number of prisoners housed in police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At unlocking on Wednesday 1 February, 322 prisoners were held in police cells in England and Wales.

73. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had recent discussions with the Metropolitan police concerning conditions for remand prisoners in custody in police station cells in the Greater London area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Problems arising from the accommodation of remand prisoners in police cells are often discussed at the meetings which my right hon. Friend holds regularly with the commissioner of the Metropolitan police. I am well aware that conditions for remand prisoners in police cells are often far from satisfactory although the police do all they can in difficult circumstances.

Hooliganism

27. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with chief constables concerning the problems of hooliganism inside and outside football grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office is in regular contact with the Association of Chief Police Officers about these problems. The association was represented on the Minister for Sport's working party and will continue to be involved in discussions on the implementation of the Football Spectators Bill.

56. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to deal with unruly behaviour outside football grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Much has already been achieved by alcohol restrictions, the powers for the police and the courts under the Public Order Act 1986 and the advice which my right hon. Friend recently gave to the courts on the need for swift justice following incidents of hooliganism.

The proposed football membership scheme, although designed primarily to prevent those intent on unruly behaviour from gaining admission to football grounds, is also intended to remove the football match as the central focus for the activities of hooligans. Those who know they are not going to be admitted to a match are unlikely to travel long distances to stand outside.

I believe that the scheme will curb football-related hooliganism, both inside and away from grounds.

Abortion

28. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to change the criteria used to decide whether it is in the public interest to order an inquest on babies born alive following abortions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

32. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further representations he has received about his decision not to order an inquest on the baby of 21 weeks gestation aborted at the Carlisle city general hospital in July 1987.

45. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many further representations he has received following his decision that it was not in the public interest to order an inquest on the baby of 21 weeks gestational age, aborted at the Carlisle city general hospital in July 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. I would refer to my reply to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 15 December, column 711. We have received no further representations since then.

Carriers Liability Act

30. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the receipts to date under the Carriers Liability Act; and what are the arrears.

Mr. Renton: Charges totalling £7·366 million had been incurred by carriers under the Act up to 31 December 1988. Of this sum, £3·539 million had been paid, leaving £3·827 million outstanding.

Sunday Trading

31. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in response to his request for views on the reform of Sunday shopping.

82. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in response to his request for views on the reform of Sunday shopping.

84. Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received from interested parties on ways to amend the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Renton: I would refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier to the question from the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

85. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from churches and other religious bodies concerning proposals to update the law on Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: Since November 1986 we have received 66 written representations on behalf of a church or other religious body. Among the correspondents have been the Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinal Hume, the Chief Rabbi and the Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council. I have also met the Bishop of Gloucester, chairman of the General Synod's Board for Social Responsibility, on three occasions, and the Bishop of London.

Magistrates Courts

33. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the administration of the magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: It is because I see scope for improvements in the efficient management of the magistrates courts system that I have decided to set in hand a scrutiny as explained in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 17 January, column 140.

Broadcasting Standards Council

34. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Broadcasting Standards Council; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Broadcasting Standards Council as often as circumstances dictate in order to discuss the work of the council and other matters.

Police Training

35. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he is planning to improve police and police cadet training.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police training is kept under constant review and a number of developments are in hand. A new modular training course for recruits is to be introduced later this year, a centrally developed training package for newly promoted sergeants has recently come into use and a new course for inspectors on promotion is in the final stages of development. Cadet training is carried out in the seven police forces which run cadet schemes.

We have no plans to issue new guidance on this subject.

Crime (North Yorkshire)

36. Mr Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making towards reducing the level of crime in north Yorkshire.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in north Yorkshire from January to September 1988 fell by 5 per cent. when compared with the same period in 1987. The national decrease was 3·7 per cent. In particular, burglaries in north Yorkshire decreased by 14·2 per cent. This coincides with an increase of over 250 good neighbour schemes in the area, bringing the total number of schemes there to 1,331, covering almost 32,000 households.

British Nationality

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it now takes to process applications for British nationality.

Mr. Renton: The average time taken to complete applications for naturalisation and registration in December 1988 was 21 months and 14 months respectively.

Guardian Angels

39. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the need to regulate the activities of guardian angels operating on London local authority housing estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Neither my right hon. Friend nor the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is aware of any so-called guardian angels operating on local authority housing estates in London. Members of the public who wish to support the police can most usefully do so through the special constabulary or active participation in neighbourhood watch schemes.

Metropolitan Police (Precept)

40. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations were made by London local authority associations on 17 January regarding the rise in the Metropolitan police precept for 1989-90; and what replies he gave them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The representations of the London local authority associations were mainly concerned with the size of the proposed Metropolitan police precept for 1989-90, which they regarded as excessive. My right hon. Friend was able, with the assistance of my right hon. Friend and Minister of State for Local Government, to explain the reasons for the proposed increases and to describe the steps which are being taken to strengthen the force's arrangements for securing greater efficiency and value for money in the deployment of its resources.

Tagging

41. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the Green Paper proposals for the use of electronic tags to monitor offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a number of representations, some commenting on the suggestion that electronic monitoring might be used to enforce a curfew as part of the new court order proposed in the Green Paper. We shall consider the future use of electronic monitoring in the light of these comments and the pilot studies—monitoring defendants remanded on bail—which will begin later this year.

54. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the technology for the tracking tag, as opposed to the curfew tag, to be demonstrably effective; and if he will then introduce it into pilot schemes on tagging throughout England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that some companies are working on monitoring devices which allow the wearer to be tracked. This technology is still at the development stage and I do not expect its effectiveness to be reliably demonstrated in time for the forthcoming pilot studies.

Political Asylum

42. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past 12 months police officers have been used to arrest persons seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Under the Immigration Act 1971 a constable or immigration officer may arrest or detain certain persons in breach of the Act. Information about the number of occasions when police officers have exercised those powers is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. An application for political asylum is a separate issue which is considered entirely on its merits.

Police Surgeons

43. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many doctors are retained by police on a part-time basis to act as police surgeons attending to victims of crime and scenes of crime; and what was the position three and five years ago.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police surgeons are appointed by police authorities and no central record is maintained.

46. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on present arrangements for the work of police surgeons.

48. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to alter the arrangements under which general practitioners work as part-time police surgeons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police surgeons are appointed by police authorities. The joint negotiating committee for the fees of doctors assisting local authorities issues national guidance about their conditions of service. But the onus rests with individual police authorities to ensure that suitable arrangements are made to secure the necessary coverage by police surgeons within the force area.

Firearms Licences

44. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to prohibit the granting of a firearms licence to those under a certain age.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under section 22(2) of the Firearms Act 1968 it is an offence for a person under the age of 14 to have in his possession any firearm or ammunition to which section 1 of the Act applies, except in the limited circumstances specified where a firearm certificate is not required anyway. These include target practice at an approved club and shooting at a miniature rifle range. Accordingly, firearm certificates are issued only to those over 14 years of age. We have no proposals to change the law in this respect.

With regard to shotgun certificates, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller).

Mr. Roberto Fiore

47. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with the further consideraton of the case of Mr. Roberto Fiore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. Friend to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 15 December, column 721. No further request has been received from the Italian Government—the possibility of deportation is being considered. Representations against such action have been lodged.

Mr. Viraj Mendis

49. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from citizens of Manchester in respect of the extradition of Viraj Mendis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Up to 23 January 1989, 115 letters had been received from the Manchester area about the case of Mr. Mendis, of which 40 were in support of him. About 150 campaign postcards from the Manchester area and a number of petitions, some of which were signed by residents of Manchester, had also been received.

53. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the case of Viraj Mendis.

58. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration he has given to the case of Viraj Mendis.

Mr. Renton: I would refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 26 January, column 672.

Franchise

50. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to produce proposals to widen the franchise for Britons living abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We attach considerable importance to extension of the franchise for British citizens living overseas and intend to bring forward legislation in this Parliament.

Prisoners (Escapes)

52. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from custody in 1988; and what crimes were they originally convicted of.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information held centrally shows that, during 1988, 267 inmates escaped from within closed prison service establishments in England and Wales or from outside escorts. This figure includes both convicted and unconvicted inmates. The offences of which they had been convicted, or with which they had been charged, are categorised in the table. Multiple offences or charges are categorised according to the most serious offence.

Offence categories (including attempts)

	Number
Murder or Manslaughter	6
Sexual offences	3
Other offences against the person	24
Burglary	120
Robbery	29
Theft, forgery and related offences	37
Others	48

West Midlands Police

55. Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of progress in securing greater efficiency and value for money from the West Midlands police force in considering applications for increases in its establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend announced on 30 January his decision to approve an increase of 62 police posts for west midlands police with effect from 1 April 1989. Full account was taken of the progress which the force has made in recent times in obtaining police officers in considerable numbers through civilianisation.

Chief Charity Commissioners

57. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief charity commissioner, Mr. Robin Guthrie; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend will be meeting the chief charity commissioner shortly to discuss the proposals the Government will be putting forward in the forthcoming White Paper on charities. My right hon. and noble friend has met the chief charity commissioner on seven occasions in the past year to discuss a wide range of matters concerning charities and the work of the commission.

Vietnamese Refugees

59. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of Vietnamese refugees accepted to settle in the United Kingdom to date; and whether provision for Vietnamese refugees will be increased.

Mr. Renton: Between 1979 and the end of the third quarter of 1988 some 20,400 Vietnamese refugees were admitted for settlement in the United Kingdom. For the future, I refer to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) on 22 December, columns 588 and 589.

Tackling Crime (European Co-operation)

60. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department is doing to promote greater European co-operation against crime.

75. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department is doing to promote greater European co-operation against crime.

Mr. John Patten: We attach great importance to closer European co-operation to tackle crime and have actively sought to strengthen bilateral links; my right hon. Friend recently signed an agreement with Italy to combat terrorism, drug trafficking and organised crime. Further action is in hand to improve bilateral and multilateral co-operation in a number of areas including mutual legal assistance and extradition arrangements, the exchange of drugs intelligence and the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets.

Broadcasting

62. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards a Council of Europe convention on broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from him on 23 January, column 393.

63. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss the White Paper on the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend met Mr. Russell on 10 January and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met him on 17 January to discuss our recent White Pa[per] on broadcasting. My right hon. Friend keeps in regular touch with the chairmen of the BBC and IBA on a wide range of broadcasting matters.

Football Matches (Policing)

64. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether steps are being taken to reduce the cost of policing football matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The aim of the national football membership scheme envisaged in part I of the Football Spectators Bill [Lords] is to break the link between football and hooliganism by disqualifying troublemakers from attendance at all League grounds. In the longer term, the scheme should reduce considerably the heavy police commitment required to maintain order at football matches.

Burglaries

65. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the latest figures for burglary in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Burglary fell by 8 per cent. in the 12 months to September 1988 compared with the previous 12 months. This information is published in table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 36/88, a copy of which is in the Library.

Right of Silence

67. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on his conclusions concerning the right of silence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is awaiting the report of the working group which was set up last year to consider what changes in the law are necessary. We expect to receive its report around Easter.

77. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received relating to the possible abolition of the right of silence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters from right hon. and hon. Members, including one from the hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull, West (Mr. Randall) on behalf of the Opposition, and from members of the public. I understand that the working group on the right of silence which my right hon. Friend set up to consider this issue has received responses to its consultation document from a wide range of interested bodies.

Metropolitan Police

68. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to promote greater efficiency in the Metropolitan police.

79. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in securing greater value for money from the Metropolitan police.

81. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in securing greater value for money from the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Measures have been introduced on a number of fronts to improve the efficiency, effectiveness and economic use of Metropolitan police resources and to ensure value for money of Metropolitan police expenditure. Changes were made last year to the systems of estimating, monitoring and controlling expenditure and to the composition of the cash limit in order to strengthen the controls on running costs and other current expenditure. An estimate screening process has been introduced to concentrate attention on the relative priorities of competing demands, increasing value for money in the use of resources and identifying policies or projects which require more detailed examination. Work is being done on the improvement of financial management information and pilot schemes to assess the effectiveness of divisional budgets. There is a programme of civilianisation to release police officers for operational duties and to ensure that functions are carried out in the most economic way. Independent inspections by Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary will augment the internal system of inspections in measuring the efficiency of the force.

Other initiatives aimed at improving greater Efficiency and value for money include a continuing programme of scrutinies and reviews, contracting out of services, and the wider use of output measures and performance indicators.

Some recent achievements include: 218 headquarters posts abolished through reorganisation in the last three years; 1,300 posts devolved from headquarters to areas in the last three years; 322 posts civilianised since March 1986; 500 cleaning posts contracted out; hours spent on street duty in 1988 up by some 7·5 per cent. over the previous year; a reduction of 10 per cent. in real terms in the overtime budget; a 7 per cent. improvement in arrest rates; and a 6 per cent. improvement in clear-up rates.

Police Forensic Service

70. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to establish a full-time police forensic service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office forensic science service provides forensic science facilities to police forces outside London through its six regional laboratories. The Metropolitan police and the City of London police are served by the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory.

It would not be economical, or effective, for each provincial police force to establish its own laboratory.

Prison Sentences (Remission)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent remission of prison sentences is based on the severity of the crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Remission may be earned on all prison sentences of more than five days. Those not exceeding a total term of 12 months may be reduced by up to half; longer sentences may be reduced by a third. The maximum amount of remission will, thus, reflect the length of sentence or sentences imposed on a prisoner, which is determined by a number of other factors in addition to the severity of the offence.

Drugs

74. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in securing greater international co-operation against the illegal drug trade.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier this afternoon to a similar Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

Prisoners

76. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Friday 27 January 48,867 prisoners were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 298 prisoners were held in police cells.

Police Efficiency

78. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to implement the recommendations of the Audit Commission on police efficiency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Audit Commission recommendations contain valuable guidelines for improved value for money in the use of police resources. The Home Office and Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary will fully support and encourage chief officers of police and police authorities in implementing the recommendations.

Italy (Ministerial Visit)

80. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his recent visit to Italy.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Italy from 11 to 14 January at the invitation of Signor Antonio Gava, the Italian Minister of the Interior. During the visit I had talks with Signor Gava and his officials about matters of common interest, and I signed a joint arrangement for co-operation between our two Governments on developing measures against terrorism, organised crime and drug trafficking. Copies of this arrangement have been placed in the Library.

I called on a number of parliamentarians in Rome, and visited Turin and Milan where I met local officials and members of the business community, and visited a drug rehabilitation project.

Prisons (HIV Testing)

86. Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce compulsory HIV testing in all prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Practice in prisons follows Government policy for the general community. A test is carried out only with informed consent.

South Yorkshire Police

87. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to increase the current manning levels in the South Yorkshire police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend announced on 30 January, column 6, that he had approved an increase of 16 police posts for South Yorkshire and that he was prepared to approve a further 11 posts for stage II probationer training if the police authority made formal application for them.

Shops Act 1950

88. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to seek the views of the local government authorities on ways of amending the Shops Act 1950; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have met with the Association of District Councils on 14 July, 21 September and 13 December 1988 to exchange views on Sunday trading and have received the proposals which it published on 30 December.

Intoxicating Liquor

89. Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to introduce legislation to amend the present definition of intoxicating liquor in the Licensing Act 1964; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are considering, in consultation with other Departments, whether it would be desirable to amend the definition of intoxicating liquor in the 1964 Act to relax restrictions on the sale of low alcohol products now becoming available. In particular, we are concerned to assess any possible effect on children and young persons of unrestricted access to low alcohol drinks.

Reparation and Mediation Schemes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the results of his Department's research into the experimental reparation and mediation schemes will be published.

Mr. John Patten: In the spring.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is provided to police authorities on the provision of neighbourhood watch signs.

Mr. John Patten: There is no central guidance on the provision of neighbourhood watch signs. The permission of the highway authority—usually the county council or the London borough council—is needed when a sign is to be erected on highway land, and some authorities use this as a means of achieving standardisation of signs.

Child Abductions

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom children have been abducted overseas in defiance of orders from British courts over the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally.

Football League Matches

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 492, regarding events at Football League matches for the first part of the 1988-89 season, if he will give a further breakdown of the figure of 543 arrests at fourth division matches up to 31 October 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following my reply of 10 January, ACPO was informed of a substantial error in the return from one police force and the provisional total for division 4 has now been amended to 248.

At the end of each football season the Association of Chief Police Officers carefully reviews the returns from 43 individual forces relating to the number of arrests made at matches of the 92 Football League clubs. One part of a season is not comparable with another and where interim figures have been collected they have not been subjected to the same scrutiny. Since the provisional totals to 31 October 1988 have not been given a full end of season check, it would be inappropriate to publish a detailed breakdown, club by club, across the Football League or any division as a whole.

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy for the reception of an inmate into prison who is known or thought to be suffering from AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All prisoners are questioned about their medical history and are medically examined on reception. Where AIDS is diagnosed the prison medical officer will devise a clinical management plan appropriate to the individual case. Facilities for the care and support of prisoners with AIDS, AIDS-related illness and other infectious conditions are being developed on a contingency basis.

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women known to be suffering from AIDS were in prisons in England and Wales on 1 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There was no reported case of AIDS. Fifty male prisoners and seven females were known to be HIV antibody-positive.

Prison (Woolwich)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will be responsible for the naming of the new prison at Woolwich; when a final decision will be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for the naming of new prisons rests with the Secretary of State. In accordance with usual practice the local authority—the London borough of Greenwich—has been invited to suggest a name for the new prison at Woolwich. A decision will be taken as soon as possible after its response is received.

Buckingham Palace Security

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on Buckingham Palace security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Arrangements for security at Buckingham Palace are regularly tested and kept under constant review.

A routine exercise, restricted in scope and using limited resources, was conducted by the royalty and diplomatic protection department of the Metropolitan police to test the security systems at Buckingham Palace on the evening of 17 January. The exercise met its objectives, and I understand that the commissioner is satisfied with the results.

Kerb Crawlers (Electronic Tagging)

Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of electronic tagging in relation to kerb crawlers.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans as yet to introduce the use of electronic monitoring for convicted offenders. We shall review the use of electronic monitoring in the light of the forthcoming pilot studies monitoring defendants on bail.

English Folk Dance and Song Society

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Charity Commission as to why it refused to look into allegations of ballot rigging in the affairs of the English Folk Dance and Song Society.

Mr. John Patten: No. The propriety of the Society's recent election is a matter for the society itself and ultimately for the courts.

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a report from the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding its recent emergency exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A report on COMTEST '89 is being prepared by the Association of Chief Police Officers. Any conclusions on operational matters will be for chief constables to consider, but we are following developments closely.

SCOTLAND

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for levels of manufacturing investment in Scotland, both in cash and real terms; and what are the annual figures for each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The latest available figures relate to 1986. The volume estimates have been estimated using the United Kingdom deflator for manufacturing investment.

Bathing Water

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those beaches in Scotland which failed to meet the European Community directive on bathing water quality standards in the last year for which data is available, when it is planned for each of these beaches to meet these standards; and what is the estimated cost in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on results for 1987, the latest year available, was given in my answers on 5 May at column 536, and 29 June 1988 at column 247, to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro). A copy of the report "Bathing Waters in Scotland, Results of Monitoring: 1986 and 1987" is available in the Library.

The information on the quality of Scottish bathing waters during the 1988 bathing season is being collated at present. I expect to announce the results before the start of the 1989 bathing season. Discussions are currently taking place with the authorities concerned about plans and programmes of improvement for those bathing waters which did not meet the directive's standards in 1987.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the unemployment figures for each constituency in Scotland for each of the last three years; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the previous year.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

Crofters' Commission

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has drawn following his review of the Crofters' Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has accepted the main recommendation that the commission should remain in being as consituted. Most of the other recommendations were addressed to the commission which is now considering them. Consideration is also being given to those concerning the relationship between the commission and the Scottish Office and their respective responsibilities.

Turnhouse Airport (Transport Interchange)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study his Department has made of the proposal put forward by Bridgehead 2000 for a central Scotland transport interchange to be located at Turnhouse airport, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The proposals by Bridgehead 2000 raise in the first instance matters for consideration by BAA plc, as owners of the airport, and the British Rail board.

Drug Offences

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Law Commission last examined the law as it relates to drug offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission has never examined the law in relation to drug offences.

Population

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the population of Scotland at present; and what projections there are for how this will change over the next 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The registrar general's latest estimate of the population of Scotland, which relates to 30 June 1987, is 5,112,129. Projected populations based on this figure are given in the table.

Year	Projected population ('000s)
1988	5,104
1989	5,097
1990	5,091
1991	5,085

Pupils

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils there are in Scotland at present in both primary and secondary sectors; and how these figures are expected to change over the next decade.

Mr. Rifkind: The provisional numbers of pupils in education authority primary and secondary schools at September 1988 were 432,500 and 311,900 respectively. The most recent projections of pupil numbers are based on actual pupil numbers at September 1987 and are set out in the table.

	Primary	Secondary
1989	436,700	296,800
1990	439,000	289,800
1991	438,500	289,200
1992	439,400	291,900
1993	443,400	296,700
1994	451,100	299,600
1995	459,900	300,300
1996	468,700	299,400
1997	476,500	298,300
1998	483,900	298,200

Students

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time and part-time students there are in both further and higher education in Scotland; and what projections there are for changes in these figures over the next decade.

Mr. Rifkind: The latest available student numbers and projections for Scotland are given in the table.

Session	Higher education		Vocational non-advanced further education
	Full-time and sandwich	Part-time	Full-time and sandwich	Part-time
Actual:
1986-87	81,600	45,900	30,200	154,700

1995-96	78,600	68,000	n/a
1996-97	78,100	69,100	n/a

Notes:

1. The higher education projections have been taken from the high variant published in statistical bulletin No. 7/J1/1988 "Higher Education Projects for Scotland" which is available in the House.
2. Vocational non-advanced further education comprises various types of student, such as school leavers continuing education, adults returning to education, persons on government employment schemes, and employees undertaking training on a part-time basis. Projections of student numbers for the whole group of students are not available.
3. Over the period shown the base population of 17-year-olds is projected to fall by 25 per cent.

Prisoners

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners there are in Scottish prisons; and what is the average number for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of persons held in Scottish penal establishments at lock-up on Friday 20 January 1989 was 4,997. The average daily penal population in 1987 and 1988 is provisionally estimated as 5,446 and 5,229 respectively. For earlier years, corresponding figures are given in appendix 2 of the annual report "Prisons in Scotland Report for 1986" (Cm. 223) copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners in Scotland are on remand; and what this is as a proportion of the total number of prisoners at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of persons held on remand in penal establishments at lock-up on Friday 20 January 1989 was 782—16 per cent. of the penal population at that time.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scotland's prisoners have been imprisoned for non-payment of fines; and what is the average amount of fine involved at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: During December 1988 a total of 4 per cent. of the average daily prison population in Scotland had been imprisoned for non-payment of fines. Information is not available on the average amount of fine involved.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to health boards concerning the procedures to be followed before issuing a press release on competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards copy press releases to the Scottish Home and Health Department as part of their routine progress reports on competitive tendering.

Elderly People (Residential Care)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of continuing care residential places are provided for the elderly (a) by local authorities, (b) by voluntary organisations and (c) by the private sector in each health board for (i) the year 1987 and (ii) the year 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information by local authority area is set out in the table.

Percentage of residential places in homes for the elderly at 31 March 1987

Note: Because of roundings, the national totals exceed 100 per cent.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the survey undertaken by East Kilbride district council on the attitudes of the residents of East Kilbride district to the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns, Maintaining the Momentum", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Lang: I welcome the findings of the survey as a constructive contribution to the consultation process and recognise the professional manner in which the survey was conducted.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the method by which he will consult tenants within the Scottish new towns on the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns, Maintaining the Momentum".

Mr. Lang: I expect shortly to consider proposals from my officials regarding the conduct of a survey in the Scottish new towns. I intend that the results of that survey will be published to inform the debate on the future of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the timetable of the consultation process that he proposes to undertake involving new town tenants in relation to the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns, Maintaining the Momentum".

Mr. Lang: I expect that the fieldwork element of the Government commissioned survey will be completed in April and that a full report on the findings should be published in the early summer.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to commission a survey into the attitudes of new town residents to the issues raised within the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns, Maintaining the Momentum".

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations which have responded to the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns, Maintaining the Momentum", identifying district councils as potential landlords on the wind-up of the new towns.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his previous question of yesterday's date. It has not yet been possible to analyse the detailed contents of the responses received to date. I shall write to the hon. Member once these details are available.

NHS (Reorganisation)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit East Kilbride to explain to the residents the Government's proposed reorganisation of the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I do not have any plans to visit East Kilbride for this purpose. We have given wide publicity to the Government's proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" and the Lanarkshire health board is making information available locally.

Fisheries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations his Department is having with the Federation of Highlands and Islands Fishermen to discuss stock conservation, licensing and fisheries management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland is in regular contact with the Federation of Highlands and Islands Fishermen and its constituent bodies on matters of mutual concern, including conservation, licensing and fisheries management.

City Technology Colleges Trust

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any meetings have taken place with the City Technology Colleges Trust involving Ministers or civil servants.

Mr. Micheal Forsyth: Yes.

Locate in Scotland

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of inward investment projects attributed to Scotland by Locate in Scotland in each of the years 1981-82 to 1987-88, including the number of jobs involved, and the volume of expenditure.

Mr. Lang: The following table shows the number of decisions to locate inward investment projects in Scotland as announced in the years 1981-82 to 1987-88.

	Number of projects	Planned jobs	Planned investment £ million
1987-88	88	11,852	337
1986-87	50	5,084	427
1985-86	58	8,217	562
1984-85	69	9,443	689
1983-84	54	6,900	166
1982-83	46	5,400	186
1981-82	32	7,000	234

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place with the Scottish Development Agency about the future of Locate in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: There have been no discussions with the Scottish Development Agency regarding the future of Locate in Scotland. We recognise the substantial benefits which flow to Scotland from its activities and no changes are foreseen to its present method of operation.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any meetings have taken place with the Grant Maintained Trust involving Ministers or civil servants.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

Chernobyl

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission a special study of areas near Kinloch, Rannoch and Carstairs in Scotland of the exposure experience to radioactivity from fall-out from the Chernobyl accident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Studies already commissioned by the Department of the Environment and by the Scottish Office to evaluate exposures in Scotland resulting from the Chernobyl accident have been in progress for some time. The areas covered include Kinloch, Rannoch and Carstairs.

Teachers (Incentive Allowances)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what incentive allowances exist for teachers in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Teachers in Scotland do not receive incentive allowances; these are paid to certain teachers in schools in England and Wales. The average salary of teachers in Scotland is higher than that of England and Wales—£14,250 against £13,600 based on current pay scales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potatoes

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom potato production was treated with tecnazene in 1988 and in any of the previous five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder: No figures are available for the 1988 crop. Figures available from the 1986 crop in Scotland indicate that some 20 per cent. of stored ware potatoes were treated with tecnazene. This proportion is likely to be similar in the rest of the United Kingdom. New potatoes and main crop potatoes which are sold to consumers without being stored will not have been treated with tecnazene.

In 1982 the latest year to which figures are available for England and Wales, they indicate that some 5 per cent. of potatoes stored on farms were treated with tecnazene but no data is available for off-farm stores. A further survey of the current use of tecnazene is planned for the 1988 crop.

Meat Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made on the meat content of meat products; and what is the number of cases of inaccurate labelling of meat content in each of the last two years.

Mr. Ryder: Where there is a statutory requirement regarding the meat content of a meat product or where such information is declared on the label, the enforcement of the relevant food law is undertaken by local authorities who are food and drugs authorities. Information on infringements of these laws is not held centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what standards exist to specify and require the contents of meat products including beefburgers, sausages, salami, saveloys, haslet, and white pudding; what measures are taken to enforce those standards; and what information he has as to standards for meat products in other countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Ryder: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 require most meat products to bear a declaration of their minimum meat content on the label. In addition, they contain minimum meat content requirements for a number of products, including burgers and sausages. White pudding is not regarded as a meat product for the purposes of the regulations but, in common with all foodstuffs, is subject to the general provisions of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 and the Food Act 1984. Enforcement of this food law is carried out by those local authorities which are food and drugs authorities.

My Department does not keep detailed information on standards for meat products in other member states of the European Community.

Nitrates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to implement, following the European Community directive on nitrates in drinking, ground and sea water, to minimise the leeching of nitrates from agricultural land.

Mr. Ryder: The document referred to is only a proposal at this stage and will have to be examined in detail and agreed by the Council of Ministers before any question of implementation arises.

Farmers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those subsidies, grants, tax-allowance and schemes currently available to British farmers.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 26 January 1989]: Market support measures, provided under the CAP, vary according to commodity but generally include some or all of the following: intervention purchase, private storage aid, production aid, livestock premia, import levies and export refunds, and minimum prices.

In addition, national schemes have been introduced under EC and United Kingdom legislation. These include capital and non-capital grant schemes, the farm diversification grant scheme, hill livestock compensatory allowances, environmentally sensitive areas, set-aside and the farm woodland scheme.

Questions concerning tax allowances are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor.

ENERGY

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether there is any connection between the Central Electricity Generating Board's nuclear power stations and the manufacture of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no connection between the Central Electricity Generating Board's nuclear power stations and the manufacture of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what system nuclear materials have been deemed to be civil or military after the co-processing of safeguarded and unsafeguarded spent Magnox nuclear fuel at BNFL Sellafield since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 11 March 1988 at column 362.

Cash Limits

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits or running costs limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made. The cash limit for Class VI, Vote 2 will be increased by £58,223,000 from £277,922,000 to £336,145,000. This is to cover restructuring costs relating to the fast reactor programme and outstanding liabilities of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to British Nuclear Fuel plc for decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations. This increase is partly offset by savings of £5,077,000 on this Vote. The net increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit for Class VI, Vote 3 is increased by £1,275,000 from £26,788,000 to £28,063,000. This is the net effect of higher than forecast costs arising from the Piper Alpha technical investigation and public inquiry and on departmental staff and supporting services, plus provision for an extra Minister and the transfer of £3,000 to Class XX, Vote 1 as a contribution towards the costs of the direct entry grade 7 competition 1988. Savings of £291,000 have also been taken into account. The net increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The Department of Energy's running cost limit will be increased by £827,000 from £28,249,000 to £29,076,000.

Electricity Supply Industry Employees

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the rights of those electricity supply industry employees and former employees currently enjoying concessionary electricity tariffs will be protected after privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am pleased to be able to confirm that we have received an assurance from the electricity supply industry that benefits such as this will not be affected by the changes resulting from privatisation.

Plutonium

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has anything to add to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, (Dr. Thomas) Official Report, column 157, 17 January, concerning the total export figure for plutonium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In compiling figures for the earlier answer, officials made a simple clerical error in combining sub-totals. The underlying data were not affected.

DEFENCE

Infantry Soldiers (Ulster)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional pay rate or leave entitlement is granted to an infantry soldier serving in Ulster to that granted to one in the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Neubert: In the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, soldiers of the rank of corporal and below are entitled to 30 days leave. (All leave includes weekend days). In order to reflect the special circumstances of service in Northern Ireland soldiers serving in the Province:

(a) Receive Northern Ireland pay at a current rate of £2·75 a day (taxable) to compensate them for the abnormally long and unsocial hours which they are required to work there.

(b) Are exempted from paying food and accommodation charges if living in single accommodation, or receive the equivalent financial compensation if living in married accommodation.

(c) Have an additional leave entitlement of seven four-day long weekends, which must be taken outside Northern Ireland.

(d) Receive a total of seven leave warrants annually, if single or six if married and accompanied; married and accompanied soldiers are able to use their warrants to enable their families to travel with them to Great Britain three times per year.

A soldiers basic pay does not vary from one theatre to another. In the British Army of the Rhine a soldier is entitled to local overseas allowance (not taxable) to compensate for the higher costs of living in Germany and is entitled to 42 days leave per year. He is entitled to three leave warrants annually. When battalions are sent from BAOR to Northern Ireland on four-month unaccompanied tours, married soldiers are entitled to retain 75 per cent. of their local overseas allowance, and single soldiers to retain 40 per cent. This is to compensate them for continuing commitments which they may have in Germany.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to visit RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Neubert: I expect to visit RAF Upper Heyford when the full study into the costs and implications of realigning the runway at the base has been completed.

Low-flying Exercises (Accidents)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of accidents in the United Kingdom and abroad during low flying exercises in 1987 and 1988, for each of the three services; and what is the cost of damage to, or loss of, aircraft of each of those services, at 1989 prices.

Mr. Neubert: It would not be possible, without disproportionate cost and effort, to provide this information for all accidents—many of them extremely minor—affecting aircraft of the three services. Since 1980 it has been the practice of this Government to publish in the statement on the Defence Estimates a complete list of all major accidents to aircraft of the three services. The information sought for 1987 was set out in considerable detail by my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman), in his two letters to the hon. Member dated 23 March and 16 August 1988.

The information for 1988 is as follows:

	Number
Royal Navy	1
Army	1
Royal Air Force	4

As for the publication of information on unit costs of equipment, I refer the hon. Member to column 811 of the Official Report for 14 December 1987.

Procurement Executive (Unfilled Posts)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many posts in the Procurement Executive remained unfilled in each grade at the most recent convenient date; what steps he is taking to fill vacancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest figures available as at 1 September 1988 show that a total of around 1,100 posts for scientists or engineers, and around 400 posts for administrative/clerical staff, were unfilled in the procurement executive, there were negligible numbers of vacant posts in the service grades and industrial grades. These unfilled posts are out of a total of some 35,000 posts, which include the research establishments, quality assurance, project management and procurement executive headquarters.

A wide range of initiatives is in hand to make good these manpower shortfalls such as new pay arrangements and special pay additions to assist with recruitment and retention, national recruitment campaigns, changes in work patterns to introduce more flexibility, job sharing and short service contracts. Looking further ahead, relocation of major parts of the procurement executive away from the south-east is being considered, which should assist in recruitment and retention.

Pilots (Voluntary Retirement)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many trained fast-jet pilots took premature voluntary retirement in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982, (e) 1983, (f) 1984, (g) 1985, (h) 1986 and (i) 1988.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of trained fast-jet pilots who took premature voluntary release are recorded within financial years; since 1979-80 the numbers are as follows:

	Number
1979-80	20
1980-81	21
1981-82	21
1982-83	15
1983-84	12
1984-85	28
1985-86	32
1986-87	24
1987-88	33
[1]1988-89	31

[1] To January 1989.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many trained fast-jet pilots requested premature voluntary retirement in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982, (e) 1983, (f) 1984, (g) 1985, (h) 1986 and (i) 1988.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested was not separately maintained prior to 1 April 1985. Since that date the number of trained fast-jet pilots who have requested premature voluntary release have been recorded within financial years, as follows.

	Number
1985-86	56
1987-87	51
1987-88	39
[1]1988-89	33

[1] To 1 January 1989.

Airmen (Engineering)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Royal Air Force airmen currently serve in each of the following categories (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering;

(2) how many Royal Air Force airmen became qualified in 1988 to serve in the following branches (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering;

(3) how many Royal Air Force airmen left the Royal Air Force in 1988 in each of the following categories (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of ground airmen (including airwomen) in each category in each of the specified groupings of trades are as follows:

	Groupings of Trades
	Armaments	Mechanical	Electrical	Electronic
1988
Total trained outflow	170	1,005	310	808
Numbers who failed to complete engagement	107	517	164	436

	Armaments	Mechanical	Electrical	Electronic
Numbers who entered trained strength in year	275	572	246	381
Total trained numbers serving at 1 January 1989	3,390	15,447	4,372	11,127

Radioactivity (Holy Loch)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), Official Report, 23 January, column 407, he will set out the methods used to monitor the Holy Loch for radioactivity since 1960; on how many occasions annually such monitoring has been done; and where the results have been published.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food had carried out monitoring of radio-activity in environmental materials and gamma dose rates in air at Holy Loch since 1961. The results have been published annually since 1975 in aquatic environment monitoring reports, which also explain the frequency and methods used. Copies of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

The Ministry of Defence has carried out its own monitoring of Holy Loch since 1965, which has comprised gamma dose rate measurements and analysis of sediment and biological samples. The frequency of monitoring has varied: at present, dose rate measurements are taken monthly and combined with quarterly sample analyses.

The results of the MOD's own monitoring are not published; they are, however, consistent with those produced by MAFF.

Contour Mapping Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has access to data from the United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration sea beam seafloor contour mapping programme.

Mr. Neubert: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the hydrographic surveying and charting of the United States exclusive economic zone which the NOAA is currently conducting. My Department has not had reason to seek to acquire data from this exercise.

Royal Naval Shipyards (Radioactivity)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost, in each year at 1989 prices, since the commencement of the Military Atomic Energy programme began, of cleaning up radioactive contamination from accidents, leaks or routine operation at (a) AWE Aldermaston, (b) AERE Harwell, (c) AWE Burghfield, (d) AWE Caerwent, (e) Royal Naval shipyard, Chatham, (f) Royal Naval shipyard Rosyth, (g) Royal Naval shipyard Coulport, (h) Royal Naval shipyard Devonport, and (i) Royal Naval shipyard Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement on present progress in the environmental clean-up programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has never been an accident or leak at a United Kingdom naval or AWE establishment which has required a major remedial radioactive decontami-nation programme or has resulted in any need to decontaminate the public environment.

AERE Harwell is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

United States (Nuclear Production Facilities)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to offer technical assistance to the United States Department of Energy in the remedial clean-up programme of its military nuclear production facilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Any decontamination of United States military nuclear production facilities would be a matter for the United States Government.

Falkland Islands (Argentine Yacht)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the Argentine yacht which breached the Falkland Islands security cordon on 29 or 30 January obtained clearance to do so from the British security forces;

(2) whether he will order an investigation into the alleged breaching of the Falkland Islands exclusion zone by an Argentine yacht on 29 or 30 January.

Mr. Neubert: An Argentine yacht entered Port Stanley harbour on 27 January with a damaged rudder. Following repairs, it was escorted out and sent on its way the next day. It did not obtain the permission of the British Government to be in the area. Security measures in the Falklands are kept under review, and this episode will be taken into account in that process.

Low Flying

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the average decibel level created at ground level by (a) Tornado aircraft, (b) Buccaneer aircraft, (c) Harrier aircraft, (d) Jaguar aircraft, (e) Phantom aircraft and (f) Hawk aircraft when flying at 450 mph and at a height of 250 ft;

(2) what is the average decibel level created at ground level by (a) Tornado aircraft, (b) Buccaneer aircraft, (c) Harrier aircraft, (d) Jaguar aircraft, (e) Phantom aircraft and (f) Hawk aircraft when flying at 450 mph and at a height of 100 ft.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of low-flying training carried out by the Royal Air Force was undertaken in the United States of America and Canada in each year from 1974 to 1988.

Mr. Neubert: My Department does not keep records of the proportion of the Royal Air Force's training at low level conducted in the countries listed, and it would require disproportionate effort to cull this information from available statistics.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were flown by United States Air Force aircraft in the United Kingdom in each year since 1980.

Mr. Neubert: Records of low-level sorties by the United States Air Force in the United Kingdom were not kept prior to 1985. They flew 25,157 sorties in 1985, 25,217 in 1986 and 21,869 in 1987. The total statistics for 1988 are not yet available.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were flown by British military aircraft in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Statistics for 1988 are not yet available.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the rate of major accidents for Royal Air Force aircraft which occurred during low-level operations in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 22 December 1988 at col. 371-72.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many major accidents have occurred to: (a) Tornado aircraft, (b) Buccaneer aircraft, (c) Harrier aircraft, (d) Jaguar aircraft, (e) Phantom aircraft and (f) Hawk aircraft during the low-flying operations in each year since 1980.

Mr Neubert: Since 16 August 1988, the following aircraft suffered major damage during low flying operations:

	Date
Gazelle	19 October 1988
Jaguar	7 September 1988

Information on previous such accidents is contained in a letter dated 16 August 1988 from my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman), to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Cash Limits

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any changes to the defence cash limits and running costs limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Younger: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring Supplementary Estimates the following changes are being made:

Defence Cash Limits

Class and Vote	Current Cash Limit	Increase /Decrease	£'000s	Revised Cash Limit
I, 1	7,775,660	+72,434	72,447 transferred from I, 3, I, 4 and I, 5, less 13 transferred to XX, 1	7,848,094
I, 3	1,101,516	−12,447	Transferred to I, 1	1,089,069
I, 4	1,581,212	−30,000	Transferred to I, 1	1,551,212
I, 5	471,789	−30,000	Transferred to I, 1	441,789

These changes allow for transfers within the Ministry of Defence's block cash limit to reflect the pattern of expenditure now expected, and a decrease of £13,000 to offset a corresponding increase in the limit of the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) for the transfer of costs for recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 competition 1988. These changes will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Running Costs Limit

This limit is being increased by a net £3,221,000 to £5,411,054,000. It reflects an increase of £8,033,000 in respect of the running costs element of the restructuring costs of the PSA as it moves towards untying in 1990; and a decrease of £4,799,000 to compensate for an overspend in 1987-88. This follows the normal practice of reducing the limit for one financial year by the amount of the previous year's overspend. In addition, a decrease of £13,000 is required to offset the transfer to class XX, vote 1 mentioned above.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of those commitments.

Mrs. Rumbold: The activities of the European Community, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and the Council of Europe each have an education component and this Department provides the United Kingdom representations. In addition, the Department participates appropriately in the scientific activities of these organisations. The Government's contribution to the budgets is provided through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. In addition, this Department makes specific contributions to the centre for educational research and innovation of the OECD (£97,143 in 1987-88) to the International Baccalaureate organisation (£16,100 in 1987-88) and to the European university institute (£1,232 million in 1987-88).

Boarding Schools (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the establishment of a London special boarding schools trust to take over responsibility for these schools after the abolition of the Inner London education authority; and what response he has given.

Mrs. Rumbold: Representations have been received from representatives of the London special boarding schools trust to establish a trust which would take responsibility for all ILEA's residential special schools. Representations in support have also been received from the heads of the residential special schools and in correspondence to the Department. The trust is one of the options being considered by the working party that my right hon. Friend set up to consider the future of the schools.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for alternative locations for his Department's offices, following the sale of the property currently occupied in York road, London SE1.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is currently planning to relocate its headquarters staff in Sanctuary Buildings towards the end of 1990. The new headquarters will not provide for all London-based staff and some supplementary accommodation is being sought. Studies are being undertaken to examine the feasibility of relocating some London based staff outside the London area. The lease of the present headquarters is held by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. He is considering its future.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Court of Justice (Advocacy)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Attorney-General whether under the proposals in the Green Paper "The Work and Organisation of the Legal Profession", it is envisaged that advocacy before the European Court of Justice will require a full or limited advocacy certificate.

The Attorney-General: Under article 17 of the protocol on the statute of the Court of Justice of the European Economic Community, parties other than the states and institutions of the Community must be represented by a lawyer entitled to practise before a court of a member state. Under the proposals in the Green Paper on the work and organisation of the legal profession, advocates with both limited and full advocacy certificates would have rights of audience before the courts, although the extent of these rights would depend on whether their certificates are full or limited. If the proposals in the Green Paper are implemented, lawyers with either full or limited advocacy certificates should be entitled to practise before the European Court of Justice.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

ODA (Outstanding Debt)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by country the amounts of debt outstanding to the Overseas Development Administration as at 31 March 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: Amounts due to be repaid to the Overseas Development Administration as at 31 March 1988 are shown in the table. Repayments of past aid loans are added to the annual public expenditure survey provision for overseas aid and are thus available for new aid spending.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Fixed Capital Formation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give total gross domestic fixed capital formation for the United Kingdom at market prices as a percentage of GDP(E) at market prices for each year since 1959 to the most recent available date, together with the average for (a) 1974 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Major: This information may be obtained from the Central Statistical Office databank, a collection of macroeconomic time series in computer readable form to which the House of Commons Library has direct access.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for take-up of profit-related pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Profit-related pay has just completed its first full year of operation, under the innovatory scheme for tax relief which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced. At the end of 1988, a total of 830 schemes were registered, covering well over 120,000 people.

The progress of PRP is encouraging, but experience has suggested that one of the rules has discouraged some employers from setting up schemes and complicated things unnecessarily for others. This is the rule that PRP should be at least 5 per cent. of total pay if profits are unchanged from the base year. The Government have therefore decided to abolish it.

I am authorising the Inland Revenue to operate an extra-statutory concession to this effect from today. This means that employers whose accounting years begin on 1 April will be able, if they wish, to register schemes before then without having to meet the 5 per cent. test. We shall put forward the necessary legislation in the Finance Bill.

This change should simplify considerably the operation of profit-related pay. I hope that it will help those who have already opted for PRP, and encourage others to follow in their footsteps. Full details of the changes are available in a press release published by the Inland Revenue today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quota

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to set a date limit for the notification of milk quota transfers in England and Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following discussion with the industry, I have decided to make use of the powers provided by the Dairy Produce Quotas (Amendment) Regulations 1989. Quota transfers notified after 21 April, even if they are notified as having occurred in the previous quota year, will not affect the calculation of supplementary levy liability until the start of the new quota year on 1 April.

I hope that this will encourage producers to notify transfers of quota in good time, which should in turn facilitate the smooth running of the quota system.

Milk and Dairies Regulations

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about charges for work in connection with the enforcement of the milk and dairies regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following consultations with interested parties about the recommendations on the efficiency scrutiny report published last year, my right hon. Friend the Minister and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales propose to make certain adjustments which will enable us to reduce the charge for work in connection to the enforcement arrangements with a scheduled dairy farm inspection visit. We are proposing that this should be set at £78 with effect from 1 April 1989. The existing charge is £90 but it would otherwise have had to be increased to £105 to take account of increased costs since April 1987. We also propose to increase the concession for producers with fewer than 20 cows from £10 to £18, giving a proposed charge of £60 compared with the current charge of £80.

The scrutiny report did not identify any savings in the system for sampling and testing untreated milk and private water supplies. In order to recoup costs associated with the work it will be necessary to increase these charges from £22 to £26 to take account of increased costs since 1987. The charge will also need to be increased by a further £5 if the efficiency scrutiny's recommendation for changes to the tests on untreated milk is implemented. These changes are still to be considered.

The overall effect of the proposed changes will be to give a worthwhile reduction for virtually all milk producers.

Proposals for revised regulations reflecting these changes will be circulated shortly to interested organisations.

Untreated Milk

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the sale of untreated milk.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have recently been reviewing our arrangements for the sale of untreated milk, which represents 2 to 3 per cent. of milk sales in England and Wales. Effective heat treatment is the only way to minimise the risks of transmitting milk-borne diseases to the consumer. My right hon. Friend and I propose therefore to consult the interested parties with a view to prohibiting the sale of untreated milk from the earliest possible date. We shall consult also on what arrangements should be applied to sales of untreated milk in the interim period.

A consultation document will be issued shortly inviting comments on this proposal and on the detailed arrangements for its implementation.

SCOTLAND

Education Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public expenditure there has been on education in Scotland in the current year; and what are the figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: Estimated outturn for total public expenditure (by central and local government) on education in 1988-89 is £2,126 million. The equivalent figures for the past 10 years are set out in the table:

	£ million
1978-79	901
1979-80	1,051
1980-81	1,273
1981-82	1,432
1982-83	1,505
1983-84	1,574
1984-85	1,616
1985-86	1,676
1986-87	1,802
1987-88	1,948

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland are presently on the enterprise allowance scheme; and what are the figures for each year since its inception.

Mr. Rifkind: On 24 January 1989, the latest date for which information is available, there were 7,979 people participating in the enterprise allowance scheme in Scotland. The number of people entering the scheme in Scotland in each year since its inception in August 1983 is set out in the table.

Part-time Work

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland are in part-time work; what is the average number of part-time workers for each of the past 10 years; and what proportion these figures represent of the total work force in employment at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on part-time workers in Scotland for each of the past 10 years is available only for female part-time employees in employment. These estimates, given in the table, exclude part-time male employees, the self-employed and participants on work-related Government training programmes. For the years 1978, 1981 and 1984 the censuses of employment record some 0·06 million male part-time employees in employment. In September 1988 female part-time employees comprised 20·6 per cent. of all employees in employment in Scotland and 18·2 per cent. of the civilian work force in employment.

Lockerbie Air Disaster (Statements)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on behalf of the Lord Advocate on the police investigation of David Johnstone of Radio Forth for statements relating to the Lockerbie air disaster.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lord Advocate has no intention of requiring Mr. David Johnston, head of news, Radio Forth, to be brought before a sheriff to be precognosced on oath. If Mr. Johnston has new information of value to the investigating authorities, it is to be expected that, out of a proper sense of public responsibility, he will disclose it to them.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the name, location and size of each of those forest estates sold by the Forestry Commission from 21 June 1984 to date; and if he will list the price obtained for the sale of such public assets in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1989]: In view of its length, I have arranged for copies of the list to be placed in the Library of the House. This covers the period from 22 October 1984 to 21 December 1988, the latest date for which information is available. Lists of forest areas sold between 22 June 1984 and 21 October 1984, or which were in the process of being sold at the latter date, were provided on 5 December 1984 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) at columns 139-50.

THE ARTS

National Theatre for Dance

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the chairman of the London residuary body to discuss plans to build a national theatre for dance.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 February 1989]: No.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on plans to build a national theatre for dance on the south bank.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 February 1989]: None. The plans were put forward by the private sector.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the reasons for the withdrawal of plans to build a national theatre for dance on the south bank.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 February 1989]: I am informed that a bid was made for the county hall site, which included the building of a dance theatre; but another bid worth £20 million more from the County Hall Development Group was accepted by the London residuary body, under its statutory obligation to obtain the maximum benefit for the ratepayers, in June 1988.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Overseas Investment

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will supply figures on levels of overseas investment in the United Kingdom by region for each of the past five years.

Mr. Newton: Figures for net inward direct investment in the United Kingdom are not available by region. For the United Kingdom as a whole they are as follows:

	£ million
1983	3,301
1984	−246
1985	4,123
1986	4,078
1987	[1]5,664

[1] Provisional.

Wireless Telegraphy (Licensing)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what additional measures are being taken to reduce the burden of licensing requirements under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is today laying a statutory instrument under section 1 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 further to reduce licensing requirements, in line with intentions expressed in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm. 512), published in November 1988.

Following the outcome of the review announced on 20 December 1988 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Wireless Telegraphy Apparatus (Receivers) (Exemption) Regulations 1989 will exempt from licensing requirements the use of radio equipment used for receiving —as distinct from transmitting—with one important exception. The television licence fee will continue to be charged as the arrangements for licensing users of television to receive authorised broadcasts are not affected by these proposals.

Licences for receivers are not required for radio spectrum management purposes. Reception of authorised sound radio broadcasting and of radio amateur transmissions was exempted some time ago. In particular, people will no longer need a separate licence to use television receive-only (TVRO) equipment such as satellite dishes for television broadcasts direct to the home from fixed-service satellites. Removal of licensing will, moreover, avoid the costs to users and to Government caused by changing requirements as new services develop.

The statutory instrument will come into force on 27 February 1989.

Water

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the European Commission to establish whether the proposal of his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on merger policy with regard to the water industry of 11 January, Official Report, column 841, is likely to contravene European Economic Community competition policy and what response he has received.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Formal clearance by the EC Commission of the proposals for mergers in the water industry is not necessary. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will, however, be keeping the Commission informed about the details of his proposals.

Chemical Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any guarantees and conditions on the use and production of chemical weapons have been attached to the Britain-Iraq £340 million trade credit.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The UK-Iraq £340 million financial protocol makes no specific reference to imports which might conceivably relate to the production of chemical weapons. However, it can be used only to finance goods which meet United Kingdom export licence requirements, and these specifically prevent the supply of a number of key precursors. The protocol makes an important contribution to Government policy of developing economic and commercial relations with Iraq and is based on a commercial assessment of the risks involved. We have made clear to the Iraqi Government our condemnation of the use of chemical weapons and we expect the Government of Iraq to honour their pledge not to use these weapons in the future.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Rules

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce immigration rules to consolidate the rules contained in HC 169 and all subsequent amendments of those rules.

Mr. Renton: Yes. We propose to do so on the next occasion on which changes are made to the immigation rules.

Police Surgeons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley, 20 January, Official Report, column 352-53 about the numbers of female victims of sexual offences treated by (a) male and (b) female police surgeons, if he will list by police authority comparable figures for the other police authorities in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

River Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions prosecutions have been brought under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in relation to river pollution; if he will list such occasions in date order and by court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information held centrally for 1987, which may be incomplete, is given in the table. Provision of corresponding information for other years would involve disproportionate costs.

Prisoners (Ethnic Origins)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make public the ethnic origin of prisoners held in Her Majesty's prison, Wormwood Scrubs at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is given in the table.

Population[1] of Wormwood Scrubs prison: by ethnic origin 30 September 1988

	Number
White	657
West Indian, Guyanese, African	276
Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi	39

Other, not recorded, refused	19
All persons	1,010

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to what standard classifications are used when recording the ethnic origin of prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The standard classification used to record the ethnic origin of prisoners, is that currently used in the EC labour force survey. Details are to be found in "The ethnic origins of prisoners: the prison population on 30 June 1985" and persons received July 1984 to March 1985 (Home Office statistical bulletin 17/86).

Prisoners (Training Courses and Jobs)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how prison governors ensure that all inmates have equal access to training courses and to jobs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In general, inmates are informed of the opportunities for education, training, and employment, and are invited to express their preferences at the beginning of their sentence. An assessment is then made of their suitability for the activities of their choice in terms of medical fitness, educational standard, and motivation.

While the wishes of inmates are taken into account, access to a particular course or specific type of employment is dependent on the suitability or otherwise of the individual and on the constraints of local circumstances. Opportunities for choice may be more limited in local prisons and remand centres and for prisoners with special needs.

Prisoners (Racial Discrimination)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that all prisoners are aware of their right to write to the Commission for Racial Equality at the same time as raising internally any complaint of racial discrimination.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance was issued to establishments in 1977 about the right of prisoners to write to the Commission for Racial Equality. Specific reference to this will be included in the next revision of the information booklet for prisoners.

Metropolitan Police (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the extent of employment discrimination against women within the Metropolitan police and the action he is taking to counteract it.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Like the chief officers, the Commissioner is aware that, subject to the specific exceptions provided by section 17(2) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, any sex discrimination in the treatment of police officers is unlawful.

Over the last four years, the Metropolitan police has worked with the Equal Opportunities Commission on the implementation of its equal opportunities policy, as the commission recognised in its 12th annual report. The force has a dedicated equal opportunities unit, and a formal grievance procedure which can be used by officers who consider that they have suffered from sexist behaviour or language.

Equal opportunities training is included in central and local training programmes. Detailed guidelines on equal opportunities legislation and practice are issued to all officers of inspector rank and above, and are available to other ranks.

Police Officers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends removing the requirement for police officers (a) to serve warrants for non-payment of fines and (b) to act as coroners' officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements for service of warrants for non-payment of fines are settled locally between police forces and the courts. As much as possible should be dealt with by civilian staff rathern than police officers in order to release the latter for operational duties.

As regards coroners' officers, it has been suggested to police authorities, chief officers of police and the coroners' service that civilians rather than police officers should be appointed to such posts. This is in line with the conclusion of the Broderick committee on coroners.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police have been allocated to the West Midlands police force for each year between 1974 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Year	Posts approved
1974 and 1975	—
1976	38
1977 to 1980	—
1981	175
1982 to 1987	—
1988	70

Prisons

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has plans for changing the way in which the regions and headquarters of the prison service are organised.

Mr. Hurd: Fresh start has brought fundamental changes over the past two years to the way in which individual establishments in the prison service operate. I have decided that the time is now ripe for carrying this process a stage further and undertaking a comprehensive study of the organisation and location of the service's headquarters and regions. The terms of reference for the review are:

To study the organisation of the prison service in England and Wales above the level of individual establishments and the locations at which work is done and to make recommendations for changes to improve effectiveness and value for money.

The work is being done by a small team of consultants and civil servants and is due to be completed by the end of July.

Prisoners (Cruelty to Children)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were sent to prison in each of the last three years for cruelty to children.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not all available in the form requested. The number of persons given immediate custody for offences of cruelty to or neglect of children under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables 1.1(a) and 2.1(a). The number of offences of homicide where the victims were children is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", Cm. 498, tables 4.6, 4.12 and 4.13. Copies of these publications are in the Library of the House. The number of persons sentenced for other offences of violence against children is not available separately.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prison association is allowed for inmates at Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The position before the recent intensification of industrial action was that, apart from the hospital ward complex, there was no general association other than that which occurred during exercise periods and other group activities.

Remand Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average time a person on remand in custody has spent in prison during the last 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information was published in table 2.1 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1987" (Cmnd. 547), a copy of which is held in the Library.

Firearms and Shotguns

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will extend the validation period of shotgun certificates from three years to six years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to extend the validation period of firearms certificates to six years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the extension of the validation period of shotgun certificates from three years to six years; what the percentage the latter is of the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received occasional representations on this matter but details are not available in the form requested. Proposals for extending from three to six years the validity of shotgun and firearm certificates were made during the passage of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. These were not acceptable to the Government. I remain of the view that review of the conditions attached to a certificate and the circumstances of the holder at three-yearly intervals is right, and that to extend the period to six years would represent an unacceptable relaxation of the controls. We have, however, made provision in the 1988 Act for the co-termination of firearm and shotgun certificates, which will represent a substantial saving in costs for those holding both types of certificate.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make the sale of live shotgun cartridges dependent upon the production of a valid shotgun certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Section 5 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 makes it an offence to sell shotgun ammunition to a person (other than a dealer in such ammunition) unless that person produces his shotgun certificate, or produces a certificate belonging to some other person together with a written authority from the holder to purchase the ammunition on his behalf, or shows that he is entitled to possess a shotgun without holding a certificate. This is an important strengthening of the law which it is intended to bring into force, with other relevant new provisions, by way of a second commencement order early in the summer.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to how many (a) men, (b) women, (c) boys under 18 years of age and (d) girls under 18 years of age were reported as missing in the Thames valley during each of the last five years for which records are available; and how many and what percentage in each category were subsequently traced;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to how many (a) men, (b) women, (c) boys under 18 years of age and (d) girls under 18 years of age were reported as missing in Warwickshire during each of the last five years for which records are available; and how many and what percentage in each category were subsequently traced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information in the form requested is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of persons aged 18 years or below who were refused leave to enter the United Kingdom by virtue of relationship with a person resident in the United Kingdom, and whose application was refused on the ground that they could not establish such relationship, in each year since 1975.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available centrally. Information on the total number of children under 18 years of age in the Indian subcontinent initially refused entry clearance to the United Kingdom in 1977-87 is given in table 7 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1987" (Cm. 415), and 770 children were refused in the first three quarters of 1988. The estimated corresponding numbers of children initially refused a certificate of entitlement to, or confirmation of, the right of abode in the United Kingdom were negligible prior to 1986, 560 in 1986, 350 in 1987, and 200 in the first three quarters of 1988. Some applications refused initially are subsequently granted on appeal.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 31 January, if he will call for a report from the Comissioner of Police of the Metropolis summarising the specific criteria applied by traffic wardens and police officers in deciding (a) to tow away an illegally parked vehicle, (b) to clamp an illegally parked vehicle and (c) to issue a fixed penalty notice for an illegally parked vehicle and as to what account is taken of the gravity of the infringement and the likelihood of the vehicle causing an obstruction; and if he will publish this summary in the Official Report.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The enforcement of road traffic law is a matter for individual chief officers of police. I am generally content that the enforcement of parking restrictions is conducted with common sense, tact and discretion and that there are adequate safeguards for those motorists who feel they have been treated unreasonably.

Lincolnshire Constabulary

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serious offences were committed in the area covered by the Lincolnshire constabulary in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The information is published annually in table S3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables, volume 3, a copy of which is in the Library.

DNA Test

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy under a DNA testing scheme to permit the test to be taken by individuals over 18 years who applied for entry as dependants under the age of 18 years and were turned down;

(2) if he will list the countries of origin of dependants who may apply to join relatives already settled in the United Kingdom to whom the DNA testing scheme, if approved, will apply.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 July 1988 that we were considering whether DNA testing should continue to be left to private initiative or organised on a centrally run scheme. We will announce our conclusions on these matters as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in the light of her answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South Official Report, 29 November 1988, column 178, she will take steps to ensure that the Department of Health will not seek crown immunity from prosecution for health authorities when the anticipated controls on pollution emissions come into effect.

The Prime Minister: I confirm that we do not intend there to be any crown immunity for health authorities in respect of the proposed new controls on emissions to the atmosphere.

Cabinet Office (Cash Limit)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any proposals to change the 1988-89 cash limit and running costs limit for the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: Both the overall cash limit and the running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Services (class XX, vote 2) have been reduced by £3,000, from £16,137,000 to £16,134,000 and from £19,616,000 to £19,613,000 respectively. These decreases will be offset by corresponding increases in the cash limit and running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) and reflect the transfer of costs for recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 competition, 1988.

There is no overall increase in either cash limits or gross running costs limits for Government as a whole as a result of these changes, which will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ENERGY

Electricty Generation (Land Use)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the land use impact of electricity produced by nuclear power compared to that used by coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB advises me that the construction process of an 1,800 MW coal-fired power station equipped with FGD plant requires some 100 hectares of land of which about half would be retained for operational use. The construction process of a 1,200 MW PWR nuclear power station requires some 75 hectares of which about a third would be retained for operational use.

In general a coal-fired power station requires more land for operational use than a nuclear power station.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by type and location the total land holdings of the Central Electricty Generating Board in the three counties of Yorkshire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Wind Turbine Generators

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on information available to his Department on the merits of three-bladed steel wind turbine generators as a source of energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department's research and development programme is intended to examine the merits of wind energy, in particular its economic and environmental acceptability. On the basis of information available from our studies to-date we believe that wind energy has the potential to make a substantial contribution to United Kingdom energy supplies and that the three-blade, horizontal axis configuration is one of the more promising options.

Steel is used extensively in the manufacture of wind turbines, for both the rotating components and the support structure. It can be used for making the rotor blades, but lighter composite materials are preferred by most manufacturers.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the Central Electricity Generating Board or his Department has calculated the fissile plutonium content of the approximately 18 tonnes of fuel discharged from Berkeley reactor 1 between 4 April and 17 July;

(2) on what dates in 1987, 1988 and 1989 Bradwell nuclear power station was refuelled; if he will give the figures for fuel discharged and loaded; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether the Central Electricity Generating Board or his Department has calculated the amount of fissile plutonium in irradiated fuel discharged from Bradwell nuclear power station between January 1987 and January 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the typical period or length of time that the fuel remains in the core of a typical Magnox nuclear power reactor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are operational matters for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

North Sea Safety

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he plans to issue any further safety notices in respect of practices in the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. I have today issued the following safety notice:

The Department is concerned that the provision of alcohol offshore, even on a strictly controlled basis, may provide opportunities for abuse.

Operators are asked to ensure that all their staff are aware that if such abuse occurs they may render themselves liable to prosecution under S.7 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Operators may also render themselves liable under S.2.

However, the Department consider that operators should not allow any such opportunities to arise. This can be done only by barring the possession or use of alcohol offshore. The Department expects operators to ensure that they implement such a policy.

WALES

Drinking Water

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those water supplies in Wales which fail to meet the standards set out in the European Economic Community directives on the safety of drinking water and whether or not these are are the subject of derogations; how and when it is proposed for each of these water supplies to meet the standards laid down; and what the latest estimated cost of complying with the standards is in each case.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following sources of supply in Wales, many of which serve populations of less than 1,000, are the subject of derogations under article 9 of the drinking water directive (80/778/EEC):

Source
Alwen
Caerau
Carno
Crai Reservoir
Elan Aquaduct
Garret Lwyd
Garw Levels
Georgetown
Lovesgrove Borehole
Nantybwch
Nantymoel
Portis
Strata Florida
Ystradfellte

Small Sources (serving population of less than 1,000)
Afon Cwm-y-Llan
Bettws-y-Coed

Llanbedr Springs
Llanfynydd
Llan Penmachno
Nantmor
Penygoyallt
Rhyd
Rhyd-Ddu
Rhydyronnen
Tir-Garwen
Upper Wenallt Springs
Wern Ddu

The temporary relaxation of the directive's standards does not pose any threat to public health and the Welsh water authority has an ongoing programme of remedial works which should ensure that supplies regularly comply by 1992. The full cost of the programme is still being evaluated.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time hill farmers there are in Wales; what was the corresponding figure 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In June 1977, there were 9,960 whole-time farmers, partners and working directors on holdings in the original less-favoured area, (now known as the severely disadvantaged area). In June 1987, there were 16,637 whole-time farmers, partners and working directors in the extended LFA, of which 9,902 are estimated to be on land directly comparable to the original LFA.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned expenditure by his Department on trunk roads in Ceredigion district for the years 1989 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Planned expenditure on new construction and improvement (excluding renewal) is £2·4 million for 1989-90 and £3·5 million for 1990-91. This does not include local authority expenditure. Information about major scheme starts will be given in the Welsh commentary on the public expenditure White Paper and in the forthcoming edition of "Roads in Wales".

Montgomery Canal

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with British Waterways about the future of the Montgomery canal.

Mr. Grist: The Secretary of State discussed the proposal to restore the Montgomery canal with the chairman of the British Waterways Board last November.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions his officials have had with Powys county and Montgomeryshire district council, the Welsh tourist board and the Mid Wales Development Board about funding restoration work on the Montgomery canal; what estimate has been given for this work; and whether any European Economic Community funding was available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office officials have had many discussions with members of the steering group seeking to restore the Montgomery canal. Restoration proposals have been variously estimated to cost £14 million to £18 million. No decision was taken on whether EC funding would have been available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

AVCs (Teachers)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether in the light of the voluntary contributions requirements of article 14 of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, he proposes to introduce additional facilities for AVCs within the teachers' superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Prudential Pension Fund Services has been appointed to provide a new additional voluntary contribution (AVC) scheme for teachers who are members of the teachers' superannuation scheme for Northern Ireland.

It is intended to make regulations as soon as possible to give effect to the new scheme, and to secure approval for it under section 592 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 so that teachers' contributions are allowable as a deducation from income before assessment to tax. Subject to these requirements, the scheme is intended to come into operation on 1 April 1989, enabling members to secure tax relief on single premium payments in the 1988-89 tax year.

The AVC scheme will offer a flexible, money purchase alternative to the existing provision for buying in added years. Members will be able to choose to invest their contributions in a with-profit or a unit-linked fund, or on cash deposit at building society rates of interest, or to apply them to the purchase of additional life insurance cover, or in any combination of these investment vehicles. Members will also be free to vary their contributions, and their allocation between investments, at any time.

ENVIRONMENT

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the information available to him about the relative environmental record of HCFC 22 and chlorofluorocarbons 11 and 12.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: HCFC22 is estimated to have a very low ozone depletion potential—one twentieth of that of CFC 11 and CFC 12. The Government's view on the use of HCFC22 is set out in its reply to the first report from the Environment Committee (Session 1987—88HC 270-1) on air pollution. (Cm. 522).

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects HFA 134a to be in use as a substitute for chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants; and what steps his Department is taking to ensure that it is available for use as a refrigerant as soon as possible.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are encouraging the manufacturers of chlorofluorocarbons and halons to develop suitable and safe substitutes as quickly as possible. HFC134a is expected to be available in commercial quantities in the early 1990s, subject to the satisfactory outcome of toxicological testing.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will take steps to bring the disposal of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants in industrial premises under safety at work legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures his Department is taking to ensure the safe disposal of chlorofluorocarbons from air conditioning systems in trains, airplanes, motor coaches and cars;

(3) if he will take steps to make it illegal to discharge chlorofluorocarbons used in refrigeration into the atmosphere;

(4) if he will make a statement on the facilities available in the United Kingdom for (a) the safe disposal and (b) the recycling of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants;

(5) what steps he is taking to ensure that adequate facilities exist for the disposal and recycling of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This question, together with others by the hon. Member, reflects the recommendations of a report prepared by the Heating and Ventilating Contractors' Association called "Safe Disposal of CFC Refrigerants". My right hon. Friend and I have recently been sent copies of the report. Officials are discussing it with the association and with other industry representatives.

Tourism

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much financial assistance has been given by his Department towards tourism for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Expenditure on a number of the Department's programmes assists tourism particularly those concerned with the heritage, including parks and palaces, the countryside, rural development, inner city initiatives and activities by local authorities. Overall figures are not available.

Gipsies

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present number of caravan sites for gipsies in Greater London under the Caravan Sites Act 1986.

Mr. Trippier: Currently, there are 28 sites, two of them temporary.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the allocations for 1989-90 for inner area programme authorities and the corresponding figures for 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 1 February, at columns 215-17, when I announced the initial urban programme allocations for 1989-90. The initial allocations for 1988-89 are in the table.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have received allocations in 1988-89 and are to receive proposed allocations in 1989-90 under the private sector renewal initiative; and if he will indicate the respective figures.

Mr. Trippier: We gave additional allocations under the private sector area renewal initiative as follows:

1988-89
Allerdale	245,000
Birmingham	400,000

Rating Reform

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exemplify the figures applicable for the London borough of Hillingdon under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

Mr. Gummer: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to figures equivalent to those quoted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 25 January at column 1012 concerning a ward sister. A ward sister earning £15,000 living in a flat in Hillingdon worth £60,000 and with a rateable value of £275 would pay rates bill of £558, a community charge of £242, disregarding the transitional safety net, and £640 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

St. Edmundsbury Council

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how many full-time equivalent employees the staff of St. Edmundsbury council has increased over the 12-month period to the latest count by his joint manpower watch; by what percentage this figure varies upwards or downwards from the national averages for shire county districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The number of staff, full-time and part-time, employed by St. Edmundsbury district council increased by 34 (+4·5 per cent.) in the 12 months to September 1988. In this same period, the overall increase for non-met district councils was 83 employees (less than +0·05 per cent.). Full-time equivalent figures are not available at individual authority level.

SSSIs (Registration)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that all land in England and Wales notified as a site of special scientific interest under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act has been registered as such by the appropriate local land charge office.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that details of SSSI notifications are forwarded to local land charge offices, who are requested to register them as a local land charge as required by section 28 (11) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, as amended.

Anglian Water Authority (SSSIs)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in the ownership of the Anglian water authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is currently being assembled by the Nature Conservancy Council. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Endangered Species

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will produce an annual report on his Department's progress in the implementation of the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We propose to include details of the Department's activities in the appropriate yearly supplementary reports on the implementation in the United Kingdom of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora. Copies of these reports are placed in the Library.

Pollution (Chichester Harbour)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what direction Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has given to the Southern water authority in respect of pollution in Chichester harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is aware of the problem of Chichester harbour, which appears to emanate from the authority's Bosham sewage treatment works during periods of heavy rainfall. The authority has plans to remedy the situation, which the inspectorate is discussing with it.

Water

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Southern water authority's announced need for an increase in charges.

Mr. Howard: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on 1 February at columns 213-14. Southern Water will be announcing its own charges for 1989-90 in due course.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what European Economic Community directives on the disposal of hazardous and toxic waste have yet to be implemented by the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All directives in respect of waste disposal have been implemented except for directive 87/101 on waste oils, for which the implementation date is 1 January 1990, and directive 84/631 on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste in respect of Northern Ireland. Regulations to implement the latter are expected to come into force next month.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the sites and the local authority areas in the west midlands used for the disposal of hazardous and toxic waste; and if he will indicate whether they are council operated or operated by a private firm.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a record of some 151 waste disposal facilities in the west midlands area. These are listed by local authority area and by ownership:

	Council	Private
Birmingham	5	31
Coventry	2	7
Dudley	6	13
Sandwell	9	28
Solihull	2	12
Walsall	1	22
Wolverhampton	3	10

Details of the sites, including information on the types of waste for which they are licensed, can be obtained from the appropriate waste disposal authorities, who are required to maintain a public register.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to answer parliamentary questions relating to those activities of residuary bodies which have a direct effect on (a) individuals in contact with those bodies or their tenants or (b) their staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Residuary bodies are non-departmental public bodies whose main line of accountability is to Parliament through the Secretary of State. My right hon. Friend will, of course, answer questions on all matters relevant to his ministerial responsibilities in relation to them. In accordance with normal practice relating to non-departmental public bodies, questions on their day-to-day affairs should be referred to the residuary bodies themselves.

Asbestos (New St. Andrew's House)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what tests have been carried out to establish the presence of blue asbestos at New St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh; what levels of asbestos were found; when he expects to make known the results of such tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Repeated air samples have been taken from New St. Andrew's house and no blue asbestos has been found. Brown and white asbestos has been found in sprayed ceiling insulation and to a lesser extent in ceiling tiles, but the repeated air tests have shown any asbestos to be below accepted minimum safety standards.

The Scottish Office has been kept aware of the results of tests. A joint inspection by the Health and Safety Executive, the PSA Scotland safety officer and a trade union representative was carried out in August 1988. The conclusion was that the asbestos was in a safe condition and that there was no immediate risk to staff. Inspection of the building will continue and any required air tests will be taken.

Low-cost Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he plans to give to planning authorities in rural areas as to whether they can properly take account of local needs for low-cost housing in drawing up local plans and deciding planning applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: In preparing their local plans authorities must ensure that adequate provision is made, consistent with the structure plan, for housing demand of all kinds. As was made clear in circular 1/85, planning controls are concerned with the use of land rather than with the identity of the user. The question of who is to occupy premises for which permission is to be granted will normally be irrelevant.

I recognise, however, that in some rural areas there are genuine difficulties in securing an adequate supply of low-cost housing for local needs. In such areas, the need for low-cost housing and the existence of arrangements made by the developer, or between the developer and the landowner or the local authority, to ensure that new low-cost housing is made available for local needs could be material considerations which the authority would take into account in deciding whether to grant planning permission. Such considerations might be particularly relevant to the release of small sites within or adjoining existing villages which would not otherwise be allocated for housing.

Since planning conditions cannot normally be used to impose restrictions on tenure or occupancy, the planning authority would need to satisfy itself before granting planning permission that other secure arrangements to the effect would be made. Examples of such arrangements might be the involvement of a village trust or housing association with a suitable lettings policy; or covenants designed to give priority to first-time buyers from the locality; or an agreement between the planning authority and the developer under section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. It would be important for schemes to ensure that the benefits of low-cost provision pass not only to the initial occupants but to subsequent occupants as well.

Local plan policies should make it clear that the release of such sites to secure provision of low-cost housing for local needs will be additional to the provision made in the plan for general housing demand, recognising that particular local needs may justify the release of land that would not normally be allocated to meet general housing demand. It should be made clear that land allocated in the plan to meet general housing demand will not be confined to local needs only, and planning permission for such land should not be refused on the ground that the developers or landowners are not prepared to enter into arrangements to secure provision for local needs.

The case for releasing additional land that would not normally receive planning permission for housing, in order to secure provision of low-cost housing for local needs, will be essentially a matter for local judgment. Where a planning authority refuses permission for such development, and the matter goes to appeal, I and my inspectors will bear in mind the essentially local nature of the decision, though each case will be considered on its merits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Soviet Refuseniks

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise the case of long-term refuseniks, including Boris Chernobilsky of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: We press the Soviet Authorities at every possible opportunity about long-term refusenik cases such as Boris Chernobilsky. The most recent occasion was at the United States-USSR bilateral talks on human rights on 26 January.

Cyprus

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) of 25 January, Official Report, column 575, community grant aid will be monitored within the different geographical areas of Cyprus; and if he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that the area known as the Turkish republic of north Cyprus derives appropriate benefit.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community has made it clear that assistance under the EC-Cyprus financial protocol should benefit the whole population of the island. The commission is responsible for the administration of grants to Cyprus; but all projects are subject to member states' approval by qualified majority.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of those commitments.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following sets out the international organisations to which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office paid subscriptions in the 1987-88 financial year. Total contributions paid by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to these organisations was £578,273,000.

MBFR Talks

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the mutual and balanced force reduction talks.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 2 February 1989 the negotiations on the mutual reduction of forces and armaments and associated measures in central Europe (commonly known as MBFR), which began in Vienna in 1973, formally came to an end by mutual agreement of all participants. A copy of the joint communiqué marking the closure of talks, has been placed in the Library of the House. The negotiations failed to produce any agreement, something which the Government regret. They nonetheless represented a first exploration of the vital area of conventional arms control; and they have increased mutual understanding of the complexity and importance of the issues involved. The experience gained by the participants about the process of negotiating about conventional armaments has been valuable; and some convergence of views was reached on certain principles which should apply to conventional arms reductions. The talks have thus laid a foundation for further consideration of these issues in the forthcoming negotiations on conventional armed forces in Europe: these are scheduled to begin in Vienna in March.

Romania

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Romanian ambassador; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: I summoned the ambassador of Romania on 30 January to protest about the infringement of the rights both of Her Majesty's ambassador in Romania and of the Romanian citizen, Mrs. Doina Cornea. We will continue to protest strongly about Romanian policies, which run counter to their obligations under the Vienna CSCE agreement, at every suitable opportunity.

United States Secretary of State

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he is next going to meet the United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to meet Mr. Baker in the very near future.

Palestine

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the Palestine state declared by the Palestine National Council in November 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not recognise the state of Palestine declared by the PNC in Algiers. Our contacts with Palestinians do not and cannot amount to Government-to-Government dealings. We regard the persons with whom such contacts take place not as governmental representatives but as Palestinian leaders. Accordingly, such contacts do not and cannot affect our position of not having recognised the state of Palestine.

HEALTH

NHS Grading (Barnsley)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursng, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in Barnsley district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is available in the Library.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals by category are awaiting a hearing following the regrading of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff in the Barnsley health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Bioplan Ltd.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers and names of district health authorities that have entered into contracts for the provision of hospital services with Bioplan Ltd., with the dates on which the contracts were signed and the length of the individual contracts in each case.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that Coventry, Crewe and Oxfordshire district health authorities have negotiated contracts with Bioplan Holdings Ltd., but we do not collect information about the details of the individual contracts.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of treating a patient for renal dialysis in the Crewe district health authority; how many such patients are at present registered; and how many he estimates in future will be treated in the private hospital owned by Bioplan Ltd.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Crewe health authority for this information.

Private Hospitals

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an immediate study of the number of National Health Service patients treated in the private sector in 1987-88, who have been readmitted to National Health Service hospitals in the six months following their treatment in the private sector.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an immediate system of medical audit for patients treated in private hospitals monitored by independent medical authorities outside the private sector.

Mr. Mellor: No.

NHS Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the implications for the promotion of good health and for preventive medicine of the proposals in his White Paper "Working for Patients", Cm. 555.

Mr. Mellor: The White Paper concentrates on the organisation and management of services to patients. Health authorities and general practitioners will continue to have a central role in health promotion and the prevention of ill health, in particular encouraging people to help themselves by adopting a healthier lifestyle. The Government's recent circular announcing its acceptance of the chief medical officer's report "Public Health in England" makes clear its policy on public health.

Bradford DHA

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings between representatives of Bradford district health authority and Bradford council have taken place, from September 1988 to date, concerned with the joint funding arrangement; who has attended meetings; on what dates meetings have taken place; what decisions have been reached; and what expenditure has been approved for the year 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: This is a local matter and the hon. Member may wish to contact the district general manager at Bradford health authority for full details. I understand that following a number of meetings between the bodies concerned joint funding expenditure of £1·109 million has now been agreed for the year 1989-90.

TRANSPORT

RULE Ratings

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out a table showing for each month of 1988, what percentage of new car registrations were categorised under the following RULE ratings (a) R—refer to dealer, (b) U—unleaded only, (c) L—leaded only and (c) E—either.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Four in five—80 per cent.—of new cars could be using unleaded petrol. Percentage figures have been estimated for Great Britain for 1988 as follows:

	Per cent.
R— refer to dealer	47
U— unleaded	0
L— leaded	16
E— either	33

Diesel accounted for 4 per cent. of new car registrations.

Figures are not readily available on a monthly basis for new car registrations categorised under the RULE ratings.

Public Utilities Street Works

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the need for new legislation to replace the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the last two months we have received over 50 representations from hon. Friends and hon. Members, local authorities and the utility companies. We have accepted the need for new legislation and will introduce a Bill as soon as a suitable opportunity can be found. There are major potential gains for road users on foot and wheel, to highway authorities and to statutory undertakers.

Yachts (Light Dues)

Mr. Macdonald : To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of the feasibility study into extending light dues to yachts and pleasure craft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This study is being undertaken by the British Ports Federation at my right hon. Friend's request. The federation expects to complete it later this year.

Trading Fleet

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the present numbers and deadweight tonnages of the United Kingdom-owned trading fleet; what were the figures one year ago; and whether he has measures in mind to prevent any further decline.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Trading vessels directly owned in the United Kingdom

	31 December 1987		31 December 1988
	Number	million dwt	Number	million dwt
100 grt and over	857	17·6	857	16·6
of which
500 grt and over	648	17·5	621	16·5

A number of measures were introduced last year, including assistance towards officer training and crew relief costs. The effect of these measures is being closely monitored.

Violence (Stations)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will (a) place in the Library and (b) publish the report of the survey conducted by British transport police on violence at London Underground and British Rail stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail and the BTP consider that further research is needed and that it would be inappropriate to publish the survey conducted at Liverpool Street and Fenchurch Street stations last autumn. These are matters for BR and the BTP.

BT Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on current staffing levels in British transport police and how this differs from what Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary has recommended in its most recent report on this matter.

Mr. Portillo: I understand from the British transport police that the force has 1,500 officers in post in respect of British Rail and 328 officers in its London Underground L division. The complement of L division was recently increased from 350 to 400 following a recommendation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary in a report on L division. Some 80 additional officers from the Metropolitan and the City of London police are now assisting the BTP while L division is brought up to strength. Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary has recently carried out an inspection of the rest of the BTP and a report is being prepared.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the number of vehicle accidents reported within four miles of either side of the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the past five years there have been 34 vehicular accidents involving personal injury on the M4 within four miles of the Severn bridge in England, excluding the bridge itself.

These are:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1984	0	2	2	4
1985	0	2	7	9
1986	0	3	4	7

Information in respect of accidents on the Welsh approach to the crossing may be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the number of vehicle accidents reported on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the past five years there have been 87 vehicular accidents involving personal injury on the Severn crossing between junctions 21 and 22 on the M4.

These are:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	total
1984	0	7	12	19
1985	0	5	10	15
1986	1	4	19	24
1987	0	0	16	16
1988	0	3	10	13

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the criteria he will apply in deciding whether to approve or reject British Rail's application for a fixed high speed rail link between the Kent coast and London termini.

Mr. Portillo: I refer to my answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 30 January at column 53.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of incorrect information supplied to owners of fishing vessels on the application forms for transfer to the new registry of fishing vessels, he plans to adhere to the closing date for the transitional period of 31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Known ownership details have been sent to owners of all United Kingdom registered fishing vessels. They have been asked to verify or correct the information and return the form together with a signed declaration of British character to the registry of shipping and seamen. To date, only some 5,000 out of 13,000 sent out have been returned and it is to be hoped that owners will respond quickly. The transitional period ends on 31 March 1989, the date prescribed in regulations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of families in receipt of family income supplement in each standard region on 31 March 1987 and 31 March 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information for 31 March 1987 is as follows:

	Number of recipients (thousands)
North	14
Yorkshire and Humberside	23
North West	38
East Midlands	16
West Midlands	22

	Number of recipients (thousands)
South West	21
East Anglia	7
South East	37
Wales	14
Scotland	27
TOTAL	218

Information for 31 March 1988 is not available.

Hostel Charges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations for and against the proposals in "Help with Hostel Charges" he has received from voluntary organisations working with the homeless.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The majority of responses from voluntary organisations dealing primarily with homeless people favoured retaining the present arrangements for paying income support to people in hostels. An important factor in their reaction was concern about the financial implications of the proposals for reform. Because of that concern, we have deferred change until after April 1989 while we consider the matter further.

Community Grant

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated outturn for community grant expenditure in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Expenditure on community care grants has risen steadily to 77 per cent. of anticipated monthly expenditure. Expenditure for the period from April to the end of December is provisionally calculated at £22·8 million. Outturn expenditure will depend upon the success of our efforts further to increase take-up, and we are confident that the rising trend will continue.

Unemployment-related Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of claims of unemployment-related benefits disallowed by adjudication officers in each standard region of the United Kingdom for each year since 1980, broken down by each category of disallowance in a manner consistent with the annual report of the chief adjudication officer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested for 1980 and 1981 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information for years 1982 to 1988 is available, but will take a little time to collate in the form requested. I shall place complete tables in the Library as quickly as possible.

Mr. RFD (Eviction)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the steps taken by his Department to ensure that Mr. RFD, about whom the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security wrote to the hon. Member for Stretford on 9 January (reference POS(4)2558/50), was not threatened with eviction whilst payment of his benefit was suspended.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An undertaking was received that while inquiries were being made, tenants, including Mr. RFD, would not be evicted.

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information he has concerning the number and ages of war widows from the second world war who are still alive;

(2) what information he has concerning the number of war widows from the first world war who are still alive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pensions are payable to the widows of service men who served in the armed forces between 1914 and 1921 and since 1939 whose death was due to service during those periods or subsequently; and to the widows of merchant seamen whose death was due to war injury during the first world war and since 1939. At the end of last year 57,550 pensions were in payment, of which 53,100 were to the widows of those who served since 1939. Information about the ages of these widows is not readily available and could be obtained only at a cost considerably in excess of the normal cost of answering a parliamentary question.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown by military campaign of the numbers and average age of war widows from campaigns since the end of the second world war.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information could be obtained only at a cost considerably in excess of the normal cost of answering a parliamentary question.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total average income of (a) a pre-1973 war widow and (b) a post-1973 war widow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available. As war widows' pensions are not income related, no information is held about the recipients' total income. The standard war widow's pension is £53·50. In addition, age allowances of £5·75 at age 65, £11·50 at age 70 and £14·45 at age 80 are paid. About 75 per cent. of war widows over pension age receive a retirement pension, and some will be in receipt of occupational pensions or other income. Post-1973 war widows also receive a pension from the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met representatives of British War Widows and Associates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have not yet met representatives of British War Widows and Associates. My right hon. Friend and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State hope to do so at a reception sponsored by my hon. Friend to be held in the House on 2 March.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what estimate he has of the numbers of first and second world war widows who die each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: About 1,000 widows from the first world war and 2,000 widows whose husbands served in the armed forces from 1939 onwards die each year.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many current war widows were widowed before April 1973; how many of those receive income support; what would be the net cost of giving them similar pension treatment to those widowed after April 1973; and how many current war widows were widowed during the 1939-45 war.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that precise information about the numbers and circumstances of current war widows who were widowed before April 1973 or during the second world war could be obtained only at a cost considerably in excess of the normal cost of answering a parliamentary question. At the end of last year, there were 57,550 war widows, of whom it is estimated between 1 and 2 per cent. were in receipt of income support. It is also estimated that if the 1973 improvements to the armed forces pension scheme were to be extended to pay pensions to pre-1973 war widows on the same basis and rates as for current awards, the gross additional cost would be in the region of £200 million a year.

DEFENCE

Efficiency and Savings

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what success he has had in persuading the services to implement efficency and savings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A specific efficiency programme was introduced on 1 April 1988, to last for three years. The target is to enhance efficiency, either by producing the same output from reduced input or by increasing output from the same input, by 2½ per cent. per annum. This target encompasses the whole of the defence budget except for service pensions and capital equipment procurement, the latter being the subject of separate value for money initiatives. This is an important initiative aimed to ensure that we make the most cost-effective use of the resources available to us. It has the full and enthusiastic support of the top management of the department, including the service chiefs of staff.

NATO (40th Anniversary)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans his Department has for celebrating the 40th anniversary of NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 22 December 1988 at columns 377-78.

Manpower

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to deal with the expected shortfall in manpower in the 1990s.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any proposals to increase the numbers of young people enlisting in the armed forces.

Mr. Neubert: In 1994 the number of young men in the United Kingdom aged between 16 and 19 will have fallen by around 23 per cent. compared with current levels and by 30 per cent. compared with the peak in 1983. The armed forces are tackling this problem in a variety of ways and are carrying out a number of studies. For example, expenditure on recruitment advertising is being increased and measures aimed at improving the retention of trained personnel are being taken. We are also increasing the career opportunities for women and examining how to attract more recruits from the ethnic minorities. We will ensure that pay, allowances and conditions of service are such that a career in the armed services remains attractive to young people.

With regard to civilian staff, we are continuing to identify ways of making the most efficient use of manpower, while at the same time making considerable efforts to attract and retain the staff we need to fill those posts which it is essential should remain within the Civil Service. I am hopeful that new flexible pay agreements, improved recruitment publicity and, for example, the greater scope for encouraging people from older age groups and part-time staff will enable us to achieve this.

Conventional Stability Talks

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the Government's policy for the conventional stability talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom and its NATO allies are currently finalising the proposals for tabling at the negotiation on conventional armed forces in Europe, previously known as the conventional stability talks, which is due to begin in Vienna in March. The objective will be to eliminate capabilities for surprise attack and large-scale offensive action by measures which include the elimination, by reductions, of the current imbalances in key equipments such as tanks and artillery. A total ceiling on tanks of about 40,000, shared equally between the countries of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, is envisaged. Such measures will require heavily asymmetrical reductions by the Warsaw Pact to reflect its higher force levels, which will remain even if the reductions in its forces announced recently are implemented.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Royal Air Force Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No firm decisions have yet been taken on the future use of RAF Molesworth, but it is envisaged that it will continue to be made available to the United States authorities for military use. There is no prospect of converting the base to an operational flying role; although RAF Molesworth was a wartime bomber base, no runways now remain there. The site remains open to Soviet inspection under the terms of the INF treaty until June 2001.

Soviet Union (Visits)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on briefing hon. and right hon. Members undertaking visits to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State would be happy to consider any request for briefing from hon. or right hon. Members undertaking visits to the Soviet Union.

Sir John Cuckney

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met Sir John Cuckney; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Secretary of State's last meeting with Sir John Cuckney at the Ministry of Defence was on 19 May 1988. Their discussions at this meeting are treated as confidential, as are all private discussions between the Secretary of State for Defence and senior representatives of our contractors.

NATO

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the British contribution to NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom contributes to all three legs of NATO's triad of forces (strategic nuclear, theatre nuclear, and conventional) and commits forces to all three major NATO commanders. The nature of this contribution is described in more detail in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Submarines (Radioactivity Discharge)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of radioactivity Royal Navy submarines are allowed to discharge into the sea.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January 1989 at column 555.

MESAR Radar Project

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the ability of the MESAR radar project will be in the detection of stealth aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: Whilst not primarily designed for this purpose, MESAR technology has the potential to counter the threat from stealth aircraft.

Exercise Salty Hammer

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for further exercises in the Salty Hammer series.

Mr. Neubert: Consideration is being given to an exercise in this regular series later this year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were flown during exercise Salty Hammer on 10 May 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Central records of the number of sorties flown during specific exercises are not held. However, according to available records, 89 low-level sorties were flown during Exercise Salty Hammer on 10 May 1988.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft participated in exercise Salty Hammer on 10 May 1988; and how many of these were from United States Air Force units based in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Neubert: A total of some 227 aircraft participated in the exercise, of which some 70 were stationed at United States Air Force bases in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Exercise OSEX 16

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what area will be used for Exercise OSEX 16.

Mr. Neubert: OSEX 16 (Offensive Support Exercise) is to be centred on the Elan valley, Powys, with related low flying in other parts of Wales and Cheshire. As usual for significant exercises, hon. Members in local constituencies, the local media, farmers' unions and landowners' organisations will be given advance notice of exercise activity likely to affect their areas.

Military Airfields (Compensation Arrangements)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the paper entitled "The Review of the Ministry of Defence's Compensation Arrangements near Military Airfields", by A. M. Boardman of the Ministry of Defence, published in the proceedings of the Institute of Acoustics, volume 8, part 4, 1986, pages 121 to 126, represents his Department's policy on this subject; and if the measures outlined in the paper are current policy.

Mr. Neubert: In relation to the Ministry of Defence's compensation arrangements for the effect of noise near military airfields the paper by A. M. Boardman reflected departmental policy. The compensation arrangements described remain current. Additionally, the Ministry of Defence will consider claims for damage or loss where there is evidence that this results from military aircraft activity.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list in the Official Report the number of low-level flights in low flying area 20(T) for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the number of low-level flights in low flying area 16 for each year since 1979;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the number of low-level flights in low flying area 13 for each year since 1979;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report the number of low-level flights in low flying area 12 for each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to publish detailed information relating to specific low-flying training areas.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if low flying at less than 250 ft is permitted during any phase of the Mallet Blow series of exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Apart from flying within the range areas being used for the Mallet Blow exercises when aircraft are permitted to descend below 250 ft during the final approaches to a target, no low flying at less than 250 ft is currently carried out during the Mallet Blow series of exercises.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the aircraft types permitted to fly at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Fixed-wing flying below 250 ft is not formally limited to particular aircraft types, but in practice approval for such flying is normally granted only for aircraft whose operational role requires such low level flights. Helicopters may operate below 250 ft anywhere in the United Kingdom subject to the constraints of the United Kingdom low flying system's regulations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties were flown on Saturdays in each year since 1979; and how many of these were flown by fast jet aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested could not be provided without disproportionate effort and cost.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the relocation of some low-flying exercises.

Mr. Neubert: The most appropriate location for exercises involving low-flying training are kept under continuing review in the light of the desirability of maximising training value and spreading potential disturbance as equitably as possible.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flight over the built-up area of Tranent at 2.51 pm on Tuesday 31 January.

Mr. Neubert: Without additional information concerning the incident, such as type—for example, jet, propeller driven, helicopter—and number of aircraft, I regret I am unable to provide the information requested. If the hon. Member would care to write to me with this information, I would be happy to have the alleged incident investigated.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measurements have been made of noise levels on the ground caused by military jet aircraft overflying at 100 ft and speeds of up to 550 knots.

Mr. Neubert: No recent measurements of these noise levels have been made, but I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 26 January 1989 to the hon. Member for Meirionnyd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) at column 753.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy towards compensation where dwellings are subjected to noise levels from military aircraft of 125 dB (A) or more.

Mr. Neubert: Should any dwelling in the vicinity of a military airfield be found to be subject to maximum noise levels from military aircraft of 125 dB (A) or more, departmental policy would be to seek to purchase the property. No such dwellings have been identified in any of the noise surveys carried out so far and it is considered unlikely that the situation will arise in the future.

Practice Air Attacks

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many practice air attacks were made on the Otterburn range in each year since 1979;

(2) how many practice air attacks were made on the Spadeadam range in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: Records of range activity do not encompass this information.

Submarine Discharges

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines discharge contaminated reactor coolant water in the Clyde estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on matters which would give information on the operation of the nuclear submarine fleet. So far as the release of radioactivity from RN submarines is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January 1989 at column 554.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Royal Navy nuclear submarines discharge contaminated reactor coolant water into the waters of ports visited which are not operational submarine bases.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice of the Royal Navy to discharge reactor coolant water directly to sea in any port.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines are equipped with retention tanks to store excess reactor coolant water derived for operating the submarine inside United Kingdom territorial waters so that it can be subsequently dumped outside United Kingdom territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the normal operation of the nuclear reactors in Royal Navy submarines, coolant water is retained within the system. Royal Navy submarines are equipped with tanks which can be used to store excess coolant water created when a reactor is shut down and then restarted, and are suitable for use when the submarine is on the surface. However, it is rarely necessary to use such tanks. It is likely that future RN nuclear-powered submarines will carry retention tanks which may be used when submerged. So far as the release of radioactivity is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January 1989 at column 554.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether United States nuclear submarines or their tender ships operating in the Holy Loch discharge reactor coolants into United Kingdom territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 24 January 1989 at column 555.

Space Tracking Station (RAF Feltwell)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to in which United States fiscal years funding for the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell was given.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am informed by the United States authorities that funding has been approved for the deep space tracking system on a worldwide basis and it is not possible to isolate specific provision for the project at RAF Feltwell in particular years.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give (a) the date of commencement of works on the deep space tracking station to be built at RAF Feltwell, (b) the expected date of completion of these works and (c) the expected date of start of operations of the deep space tracking station at Feltwell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Construction of the deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell began on 12 September 1988. It is anticipated that the work will be completed late in 1989 with the station becoming operational in 1991.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if information gathered by the United States Air Force or any other United States service or agency at the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell will, as a matter of routine, be shared with the United Kingdom and other NATO allies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) gave the hon. Gentleman on 18 May 1988 at column 512.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the construction of the deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell is being undertaken in pursuit of a NATO force goal, or other NATO decision.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The deep space tracking station is not part of a NATO programme.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what personnel, other than from the United States Air Force, will be employed at the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The construction of the deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell will involve the employment of British contractors. Once complete, the station will be manned by United States Air Force personnel.

Bloodhound

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the first Bloodhound surface-to-air missile entered service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current Bloodhound mark 2 system entered RAF service in March 1964. Since then, there have been a number of modifications to the system to enhance its capability.

Buccaneer

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the first Buccaneer aircraft entered service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Buccaneer mark 1 first entered service with the Royal Navy in 1960; the Buccaneer S2 first entered service with the RAF in 1969.

Helicopters

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the helicopters of 22 Squadron first entered service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The in-service dates of the Wessex aircraft currently assigned to No. 22 Squadron search and rescue are as follows:

	Aircraft
1963	3
1964	3
1965	2
1966	4
1967	1
1968	5

NATO Requirements

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to meet all North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirements for Royal Air Force warstocks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 22 December 1988 at column 371.

Rapier

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the average number of towed Rapier surface-to-air missile systems stationed on the mainland of Europe in 1987;

(2) what was the average number of tracked Rapier surface-to-air missile systems stationed on the mainland of Europe in 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to disclose details of the numbers of such equipment. Both towed and tracked Rapier numbers are included in the total of 350 United Kingdom air defence systems given on page 16 of the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. I refer the hon. Member to annexes B and C of volume one of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I) for more information on the location of our air defence forces.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what items have been included in the current development costs for Rapier field standard C that were not included in the original estimate of the development cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: The items concerned reflect a wide variety of changes made to the Rapier field standard C development programme, in the period prior to incentiveness of the contract. A major change was the incorporation of a project contingency in the cost of estimates, other changes arose from the process of defining the requirement more closely.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the increase in development costs for the Rapier field standard C is due to (a) unforeseen technical problems and (b) the restricted funding of development.

Mr. Sainsbury: As noted in the 47th report from the Public Accounts Committee on major defence projects, unforeseen technical problems and restricted funding of development together accounted for a 10 per cent. increase in development costs of Rapier field standard C between 1982 and 1986. Individually they accounted for 6 and 4 per cent. respectively.

Foxhunter Radar

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the Foxhunter radars currently in service perform to the specification that was agreed with GEC Marconi when they were first ordered.

Mr. Sainsbury: As we have stated on a number of occasions, the Foxhunter radar does not yet meet in full all the requirements of the Royal Air Force. Radars to an agreed interim standard are now in service in the Tornado air defence variant, which is already providing an operational capability superior to that of the aircraft it is replacing. The programme of work placed under firm price contractual arrangements with Marconi Defence Systems last year is expected to bring the Foxhunter radar up to the standard required.

Army Medals

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications for the dispatch of Army medals awarded in connection with the 1939-45 war are waiting to be processed; and what is the average waiting time.

Mr. Neubert: There were 6,839 outstanding claims for medals at 31 December 1988. Of these 2,661 were awaiting more information from the applicants or other governmental Departments, 2,608 were awaiting documents from archives and 1,570 were awaiting assessment at the Army medal office. All applicants are told that they may expect to wait about eight months for their claims to be processed.

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now revise his estimated cost of £200 million per annum for improving the pensions of pre-1973 war widows to take into account the numbers of deaths of such widows since the figure was first calculated.

Mr. Neubert: The figure of £200 million remains a broad estimate of the annual additional cost of paying attributable widows pensions, on the same basis and rates as for current awards, to all those war widows who do not qualify for the revised provisions which were introduced into the armed forces pension scheme in 1973. The net reduction in the number of widows who would be affected, since that estimate was first made, is offset by the increase which would have occurred under index-linking arrangements in the rates of pension which would have been payable.

EMPLOYMENT

Back Pain

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of working days lost due to back pain; what resources Her Majesty's Government provide for training employees to lift heavy weights; what guidelines he gives to employers to ensure that weights to be lifted are not too heavy; what guidelines are given in respect of office workers to ensure that office furniture and equipment do not contribute to back pain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: On 31 October 1988 the Health and Safety Commission published a consultative document "Handling loads at work" containing proposals for regulations and guidance. The regulations would apply to all persons who handle loads at work, including office workers, and repeal existing fragmentary and outdated legislation. The proposals would give employers a clear strategy for reducing injuries. The guidance stresses the importance of establishing a safe system of work, taking into account the nature of the task and the load to be handled. The commission considers that excessive reliance on weight limits is inappropriate and cannot be justified on medical grounds. Training in handling techniques is likely to be effective only as a complement to a safe system of work, not as a substitute for one.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percent age fall in unemployment in the last 12 months in the south-east.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988, the level of unemployment seasonally adjusted in the south-east was 421,700 compared with 582,000 in December 1987—a fall of 160,300 or 27·5 per cent.

Bonnybridge Employment Office

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he will list the percentage rate of unemployed people in the Bonnybridge area for each month since the Bonnybridge part-time employment office was opened;

(2) whether he will list the number of unemployed people in the Bonnybridge area for each month since the Bonnybridge part-time employment office was opened.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the wards which cover the Bonnybridge area for each month from June 1983. Figures for wards are not available prior to June 1983. The figures are affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in benefit regulations affecting under 18-year-olds in September 1988. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Unemployment in the Bonnybridge area[1]

[1] Denny and Dunipace wards.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consult local authorities and local community organisations about his proposal to close the Bonnybridge part-time employment office.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans to consult local authorities and local community organisations about the closure.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has of the success rate of the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge in finding jobs for unemployed people.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available. Bonnybridge is a part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse and is not specifically involved in finding jobs for unemployed people. This function is currently performed by the jobcentre in Denny.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make an official visit to the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge in order to discuss with local people, particularly unemployed people, his proposal to close the office.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans for the Secretary of State to visit Bonnybridge part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the disadvantages and the advantages of the proposed closure of the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge.

Mr. Lee: The employment service is committed to helping the unemployed find pathways back to work and to offering an efficient enquiry and counselling service about both benefits and job-training opportunities. It is impossible to provide all these facilities in a small part-time benefit office such as Bonnybridge which is open for only two hours a week and is housed in inadequate premises. Following the closure of Bonnybridge part-time unemployment benefit office, members of the public will be asked to attend the full-time unemployment benefit office in Denny. New claims are already taken at this office and it is equipped with a computer system to speed up the handling of inquiries. More senior and experienced staff are available to assist and offer advice about both benefits and job-training opportunities and a full-time jobcentre is situated in the same building.

Although members of the public will have to travel a little further to 'sign-on', therefore, they will benefit from the comprehensive range of services available in Denny, and particularly from having regular access to information about job vacancies and training courses.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will arrange for the issue of a questionnaire to all people using the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge to ascertain (a) what use they make of the office and (b) whether they agree with his proposal to close the office.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans to issue a questionnaire to the people who use the part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse at Bonnybridge as there are alternative and more comprehensive facilities available nearby.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated cost of additional travel expenses which will be incurred by clients at present using the Bonnybridge part-time employment office if the office is closed.

Mr. Lee: In most cases, clients who currently attend the part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse at Bonnybridge will be expected to travel to the nearest local office in Denny, which is three miles away. There is half-hourly bus service between Bonnybridge and Denny and the fare is £1 return. Clients who live six miles or more from the nearest local office and people with disabilities or those with significant travel difficulties will no longer be required to attend for their fortnightly claims but will be able to make these by post.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are required to staff the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge; and for how many hours per week.

Mr. Lee: Currently two members of staff are required to attend the part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse at Bonnybridge each Wednesday, when they spend two hours at this office.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated financial saving, to his Department if the proposed closure of the Bonnybridge part-time employment office goes ahead.

Mr. Lee: The estimated financial saving from the closure of Bonnybridge part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse is £950 per annum.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list for each month since its opening, the number of people using the Bonnybridge part-time employment office for use of the freephone employment inquiry service; and what is the cost of this service.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available, as this service is not provided at the part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse in Bonnybridge.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for each month since its opening, the number of people using the Bonnybridge part-time employment office for signing-on purposes.

Mr. Lee: The part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse at Bonnybridge opened in 1973. Information on the number of people using the office is no longer available for the months prior to January 1985. The number of people signing as unemployed in each month since January 1985 is given in the table.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list, for each month since its opening, the number of people using the Bonnybridge part-time employment office for the job vacancy notice-board service; how many job vacancies have been notified on the notice-board; and how many have been filled as a result.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available. Bonnybridge is a part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse. Although it has a general noticeboard, it does not display job vacancies. Local job vacancies are notified to the jobcentre in Denny, which is responsible for advertising jobs and submitting people to vacancies.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost to his Department of leasing part of Bonnybridge community centre for the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge.

Mr. Lee: The annual cost of leasing part of Bonnybridge community centre for the part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse at Bonnybridge is £260 plus £120 for utilities.

Youth Training

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish, for each area of the Manpower Services Commission—Training Commission the accident statistics for the years 1987 and 1988 for YTS in the form given to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), Official Report, 8 April 1987, columns 299-306.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 1 February 1989]: Because of the exceptional length of the reply, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 6 February 1989

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recycled Materials

74. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to promote the use of recycled materials.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is pursuing an awareness campaign to encourage industry to consider the benefits of using recycled materials in its production processes. We are holding a series of sector conferences in this field and technical advice for industry is provided through our Warren Spring laboratory. Where appropriate further initiatives will be introduced.

Telecom Advisory Committees

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the membership of telecom advisory committees is decided.

Mr. Forth: The chairman and members of the four national advisory committees for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, are appointed by the Secretary of State and those of the two specialist committees for the elderly and disabled and for small businesses by the Director General of Telecommunications. In appointing members to the committees the Secretary of State and director general aim to have a balanced membership representing the interests of all telecommunications users and of the special needs of small businesses and the disabled and elderly people.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the role of telecom advisory committees.

Mr. Forth: The common duty of all the advisory committees is to advise the Director General of Telecommunications on telecommunication matters affecting the interests of people which the committee was established to represent. Matters may either be referred to the committee by the director general or the committee may decide to offer advice on its own initiative. The national committees for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, also have a specific role in handling consumer complaints where the consumer has been unable to resolve the matter directly with the industry.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many telecom advisory committees have been established.

Mr. Forth: There are six advisory committees on telecommunications in total. These are made up of four national committees—one for each of England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland—and two specialist committees, one to represent the needs of small businesses and one for the disabled and elderly people.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the chairpersons of telecom advisory committees and provide a contact address for each.

Mr. Forth: The chairmen and contact address of the advisory committees are as follows:

Committee	Address
English Advisory Committee on Telecommunications	Mr. H. R. Hutton, Atlantic House, Holborn Viaduct, London EC1N 2HQ
Welsh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications	Mr. T. D. Lynch, Caradog House, St. Andrews Place, Cardiff CF1 3BE
Scottish Advisory Committee on Telecommunications	Mr. W. K. Begg, Alhambra House, 45 Waterloo Street, Glasgow G2 6AT
Northern Ireland Committee on Telecommunications	Mr. J. J. Eccles, 3rd Floor, Chamber of Commerce House, 22 Great Victoria Street, Belfast BT2 7PU
The Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Disabled and Elderly People (DIEL)	Mr. D. Hobman, Atlantic House Holborn Viaduct London EC1N 2HQ
The Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Small Businesses	Mr. M. Ashton, Atlantic House, Holborn Viaduct, London EC1N 2HQ

GATT Talks

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the result of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade talks in Montreal.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Keighley (Mr. Cryer) on 12 December at column 400.

Privatisation

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list, for each company or part of company in the aerospace, shipbuilding and motor vehicle businesses privatised since 1979 (a) the annual turnover in the year prior to privatisation, (b) the value of assets in the year prior to privatisation, (c) the number of employers in the year prior to privatisation, (d) the approximate total of Government financial assistance in the five years prior to privatisation, and (e) a breakdown of the public expenditure costs in terms of capital reconstruction, elimination of debt or guarantees, redundancy and other restructuring, any other items and total receipts stating the year in which they arose.

Mr. Newton: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy in the Library.

Ford Sierra (Manufacture)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he estimates would be the effect on Britain's balance of trade and hence on the balance of payments, of a transfer of the manufacture of the Ford Sierra car from Britain to another country.

Mr. Alan Clark: Such an estimate would depend on a large number of variables, including projected consumer demand, the incidence of import substitution, dealer incentive programmes and others. I do not think, therefore, that it would be of tangible value.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Arts Education Services

75. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will allocate funds to offset the loss of local education authority funding to theatre-in-education and other arts education services under sections 33 to 36 of the Education Reform Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: Circular 7/88, issued on 6 September, a copy of which is available in the Library, makes clear that local education authorities will be free to except from delegation the school-related costs of services such as arts education under schemes of local management. Where authorities exercise this discretion, they will continue to fund arts education services directly. Where authorities choose to delegate the costs to schools, the schools themselves will decide whether they wish to continue to support the services.

Heriot Watt

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what Government assistance is being given to establish the private medical laboratory on the Heriot Watt campus at Riccarton in Edinburgh; and which companies are being considered to manage it.

Mr. Jackson: I know of no such proposal.

University Staff

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has recieved from the Association of University Teachers regarding pay increases; and what action he intends to take.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend exchanged correspondence with the Association of University Teachers in August last year, and there has been informal contact since. My right hon. Friend is considering a letter from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers about the pay of academic staff and technicians in the universities.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to alter present Treasury practice which prevents selected university staff in part-time employment who have in the course of the last three years taken a privately funded early retirement scheme from qualifying for reimbursement and redundancy costs if the period of part-time employment exceeds three or four years.

Mr. Jackson: Public funds are provided to meet universities' expenditure on premature retirement compensation where staff retire fully, but the Government do not consider this appropriate where the change is simply from full-time to part-time employment. The rules of the scheme operated by the University Grants Committee have now been appropriately clarified. Contrary to some institutions' fears, this clarification does not have retrospective effect.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are the average annual earnings of (a) primary and (b) secondary state school teachers in each of the European Community countries, Canada, Norway, Sweden, the United States of America and the United Kingdom in their (i) first, (ii) fifth, (iii) tenth and (iv) fifteenth working year for 1987 and 1988;

(2) what are the comparable average weekly working hours of (a) primary and (b) secondary state school teachers in the European Community countries, Canada, Norway, Sweden, the United States of America and the United Kingdom in 1987 and 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: Comparable information is not available for 1987 and 1988. Some information on EC teachers' salaries and conditions in 1985 is published in a detailed report, "The Conditions of Service of Teachers in the European Community", published by the European Commission in 1988 (pages 133 to 160 in particular). A copy is available in the Library.

Computers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available copies of the report produced by the National Council for Education Technology on the compatibility of computer hardware and software for local education authorities.

Mr. Butcher: This report was commissioned by the Department to inform the guidance given to local education authorities on microcomputers for educational use in schools. Consideration is being given to how the information contained in the report can be conveyed most effectively to LEAs.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report full details of the educational support grants he made to Lancashire county council in 1987 and 1988 for the purchase of micro computers; and if he will show which of these was capable of running MS-DOS software.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend approved education support grant expenditure by Lancashire LEA on the purchase of microcomputers in 1987-88 and 1988-89 as follows:

Activity	1987-88 £ thousands	1988-89 £ thousands
IT in NAFE	63·5	—
Micro equipment for FE students with special educational needs	14·0	—
IT in schools	—	267·4

It is for authorities to decide, in consultation with Her Majesty's Inspectorate as appropriate, what machines and software are best suited to their needs. DES guidance to LEAs is that new computers purchased under the IT in Schools programme should offer access to MS-DOS, but this is not mandatory.

Halls of Residence

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether rates paid in respect of university halls of residence will be reimbursed by the Universities Funding Council, including business rates for university halls of residence, for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: The Universities Funding Council has yet to decide its approach to this and other funding issues for 1990-91 and subsequently.

AS Courses

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the best information known to him on the availability of AS-level courses in schools and colleges, including the information relating to the variety of courses on offer, and the proportion of A-level students who are also able to follow a course at AS level.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The results of a survey of school pupils and FE college students studying AS-level courses in England from September 1987 and of the courses studied, were published in the Department's statistical bulletin 12/88 last October, a copy of which is available in the Library. This shows that about 4 per cent. of first year A-level students in schools were studying AS levels and that about 15 per cent. of schools were offering these courses. It also provides information on the courses on offer. First indications from a similar survey for September 1988 are that nearly three times as many students and schools are starting and offering AS-level courses. I hope to announce the results of the latest survey shortly.

Community Charge (Scottish Universities)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the University Grants Committee-Universities Funding Council will reimburse Scottish universities in 1989-90 for the standard community charge on vacant flats registered with the accommodation service of universities, as against halls of residence.

Mr. Jackson: The Universities Funding Council will reimburse the standard community charge in 1989-90 in respect of vacant property owned by Scottish universities for the purpose of students.

Media Studies

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many trainee teachers have taken media studies courses in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table gives details, for the past five years, of the number of students recruited to courses of initial teacher training which include media studies.

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
West Glamorgan institute of higher education	—	—	19	36	44
London university institute of education	13	15	13	11	11
Exeter university	12	10	19	20	18

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many (a) pupils in secondary schools, (b) students in colleges of further education, (c) students in polytechnics and (d) students in universities take media studies courses;

(2) how many (a) secondary schools, (b) colleges of further education, (c) polytechnics and (d) universities offer media studies as part of their curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Readily available information is as follows:

	Number of pupils/students	Number[4]
Secondary schools	na	na
Colleges of further education[1]	2,280	53
Polytechnics[1]	279	5
Universities:

na = not available.

[1] England, November 1987. Covers both higher education and further education level courses.

[2] Great Britain, 1987-88. Has wider subject coverage than colleges of further education and polytechnic figures.

[3] United Kingdom institutions offering first degree courses for October 1989 entry.

[4] Institutions with pupils/students on relevant courses.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the teacher training colleges which offer media studies courses.

Mrs. Rumbold: In England and Wales the West Glamorgan institute of higher education and London university institute of higher education offer initial teacher training courses with main subject specialisms entitled, respectively, "literature and media studies", and "English and media studies". Exeter university offers "media studies" as a second subject specialism.

Under-Fives

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the annual expenditure by central and local government on education for the under-fives for each year from 1971 to 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table below shows annual recurrent spending by local authorities on under-fives since 1976-77. These figures include expenditure supported by grants from central Government which cannot be separately identified. Figures on a comparable basis before 1976-77 are not available.

Recurrent local authority spending on under fives

Institute of Terrestial Ecology

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time scientific, administrative and other staff were employed at the Institute of Terrestial Ecology research station at Bangor and at the research vessel support service at Barry in each of the years 1979 to 1988; and what figures are projected for 1989.

Mr. Jackson: The information on staffing is as follows:

ITE Bangor—staff

	Science	Administration	Part-time
1979	32	12	(1)
1980	33	10	(1)
1981	32	11	(2)

[1]1989

[1] No significant change expected.

A breakdown of full- and part-time staff, and separate figures for Barry before 1981, are not available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what budget his Department has allocated (a) in cash terms and (b) adjusted to today's prices to the Institute of Terrestial Ecology research station at Bangor for each of the years 1979 to 1988; and what figure is projected for 1989.

Mr. Jackson: Information in the form requested is not immediately available and I shall write to the hon. Member.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what factors he has taken into account in considering the budget to the Natural Environment Research Council for 1989; and what indications he has given to that council of the purpose of any budget increase.

Mr. Jackson: In considering the level of grant-in-aid to the Natural Environment Research Council in 1989, my right hon. Friend will take account of advice from the council, the Advisory Board for Research Councils, and other representations that he has received. A detailed announcement will be made shortly.

Discovery (Refit)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he estimates to be the cost of a major refit for the Natural Environment Research Council vessel Discovery at today's prices; what allowance he has made for funding such a refit in whole or in part in the coming financial year; and when he anticipates that refit may commence.

Mr. Jackson: The total cost of a major refit for the RRS Discovery was estimated by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils in their advice published in July 1988 as about £10 million at current prices. Details of the grant-in-aid to the Natural Environment Research Council for the period 1989-90 to 1991-92 will be announced shortly. It will be for the NERC to determine its priorities, both in 1989 and later years, in the light of the available resources.

Antarctic

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the stated increase in the Natural Environment Research Council's budget for 1989 has been allocated to the Antarctic survey based in the Falklands.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend announced on 8 November (Official Report, columns 134-5) an additional £10 million allocation to the British Antarctic survey in 1989-90 for a new BAS airstrip and rebuilding the Halley station. Details of the overall grant-in-aid to the Natural Environment Research Council will be announced shortly.

Environmental Research Vessels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what facilities currently exist at Southampton for the support of environmental research vessels; and how many staff are employed there.

Mr. Jackson: Southampton has a deep-water port that is well suited to environment research vessels. I understand that support facilities and staff for their proposed oceanographic centre would be organised by the Natural Environment Research Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Motions

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many days each of the motions tabled by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) entitled (a) Procedure, (b) Sittings of the House and (c) Members' Facilities has appeared in the Remaining Orders of the Day and Notices of Motions during the parliamentary Sessions (i) 1987-88 and (ii) 1988-89.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

Session 1987-88

	Number
(a) Procedure	69
(b) Sittings	69

Session 1988-89

	Number
(a) Procedure	33
(b) Sittings	33
(c) Facilities	25

Up to and including 3 February 1989.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the current daily cost of printing on the Remaining Orders of the Day and Notices of Motions the motions in the name of the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) entitled (a) Procedure, (b) Sittings of the House and (c) Members' Facilities.

Mr. Wakeham: Her Majesty's Stationery Office estimates that the current daily printing cost of the three motions totals £145.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times since 1959 each signatory to the European convention on human rights has been found to be in violation of the convention by (a) the European Court of Human Rights and (b) the Committee of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall be writing to the hon. Member.

Soviet Union (Visits)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on holding briefings for hon. Members planning to visit the Soviet Union.

Mr. Eggar: We actively encourage hon. Members to contact the Foreign and Commonwealth Office before and after their overseas visits. We welcome the opportunity to offer written and oral briefing when hon. Members would find this useful.

Caribbean Territories

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the recent study by Coopers and Lybrand of the development of the offshore financial sectors in the Turks and Caicos Islands, there is any intention to extend this scrutiny to other dependent territories in the Caribbean.

Mr. Eggar: After consultation with the dependent territory Governments concerned, Coopers and Lybrand, acting as financial consultants to Her Majesty's Government, have been appointed to carry out a review covering the regulation of the offshore financial sectors in Anguilla, Montserrat, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands. The terms of reference for this consultancy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of assaults on prison officers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available. The table shows the number of offences of gross personal violence to a prison officer, or of assault on a prison officer, or of attempts to commit such offences, of which inmates were found guilty on adjudication in each of the years 1985-87. Figures for 1988 are not yet available.

	1985	1986	1987
Gross personal violence	17	12	10

Animal Experiments

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals were used in experiments either for medicine or cosmetics in each of the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available information is published in "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain 1987" (Cm. 515). Information for medicine for 1985 to 1987 is given in table 20 and for cosmetics for 1987 in table 3. Information on experiments for cosmetics for earlier years is contained in table 15 of "Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals Great Britain 1986" (Cm. 187). Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Broadcasting (Deaf People)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in finalising his plans for broadcasting in the 1990s, he will make it his policy to take full account of the resolution of the Scottish Association for the Deaf, of which he will have a copy.

Mr. Renton: Careful account will be taken of all the comments we receive on the broadcasting White Paper (Cm. 517) including all representations made on behalf of those with impaired hearing.

Probation Committees

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many area probation committees employ a public relations consultant; and what is the cost of providing this service.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish details of the number of port refusals made at each of the major ports of entry, by week for the months of October, November and December 1988 and the first three weeks of January 1989.

Mr. Renton: The figures for those initially refused entry at the major ports are given in the table:

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish details of (a) the number of deferrals of removal requested by hon. Members of this House and (b) the number granted, by week for the months of October, November and December 1988, and the first three weeks of January 1989.

Mr. Renton: Details of the number of deferrals of removal granted in the months of October, November and December 1988 are as follows:

	Number
October	175
November	153
December	150

Weekly totals for this period are not readily available. There are no central records of the number of deferrals of removal requested by hon. Members during this period.

As to the number of requests for deferral of removal in the first three weeks of January 1989, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 16 January to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) at column 6.

Passports

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of issuing passports in each of the past 10 years; and what was the annual revenue received in each of these years.

Mr. Renton: The table below shows the available information for the financial years 1981-82—1988-89 covering;

(a) the cost of issuing standard United Kingdom passports in the United Kingdom and at United Kingdom consular posts overseas, and;

(b) the cost of issuing British visitor's passports, mainly at Crown post offices in Great Britain, together with the revenue accruing from the issue of such passports.

Information for earlier years is not readily available.

Notes:

1. Figures under (a) for 1981-82 to 1983-84 exclude overseas costs and revenues.

2. Revenues include an element for non fee-bearing Consular services available to United Kingdom passport holders abroad.

Identity Cards

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has as to the cost of establishing and maintaining a national identity card system for every British citizen aged 12 years or over.

Mr. John Patten: The cost would depend on the administrative details of the system and the checks required before an identity card was issued. If a similar system was operated to that used for issuing passports the unit costs could be about £7·50. The costs (excluding initial capital costs) of issuing identity cards to all British citizens aged 12 or over would then be around £350 million. The annual running cost would depend upon the number of new card holders applying each year, the frequency with which cards had to be renewed, and whether card holders had to notify changes of address. It would probably be between £50 million and £100 million.

Voting Rights

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce legislation to extend the period of eligibility for voting rights for United Kingdom citizens living abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 2 February 1989, at column 383.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions searches of premises have been authorised by a superintendent of police under the provisions of paragraph 4(4) of schedule 3 to the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, and the similar provisions in the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1974 and 1976.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Searches have been authorised under these provisions on nine occasions in England and Wales. I understand from my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State that such searches have been authorised on five occasions in Scotland and on no occasion in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a report from the Viscount Colville of Culross QC on the operation in 1988 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions Act) 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received the report from Viscount Colville on the operation in 1988 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 and placed copies in the Library.

Street Offences (London)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences are recorded as having occurred on the streets in each of the Chelsea, Fulham, Tottenham and Wimbledon Metropolitan police districts in each of the weeks since 1 August 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The available information relates to offences of street robbery of personal property and theft from the person (snatches) and is given in the following table.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Crop Substitution

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value of projects aided by his Department to encourage crop substitution in the fight against the illegal trade in drugs.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are currently financing projects to encourage crop substitution to a value of about £7 million. In addition, we provide training and other support for drugs control organisations in developing countries and we contribute to several multilateral aid agencies whose programmes include projects which help diversify income-earning opportunities in drug-producing areas.

Development and Aid Budget

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest figure for the development and aid budget, expressed as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest available figure for United Kingdom net official development assistance expressed as a percentage of gross national product is 0·28 per cent. in 1987.

UNICEF

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase governmental contributions to UNICEF's general resource funding to £12·5 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I propose to increase Her Majesty's Government's contribution to UNICEF's general resources to £8 million in the next financial year.

Developing Countries (Nationalised Industries)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the terms of reference of the exercise undertaken on gathering information in relation to possible assistance with the privatisation of nationalised industries in the developing world.

Mr. Chris Patten: Diplomatic missions were asked to try to identify possible opportunities for assisting developing countries with their promotion of private sector development, including privatisation. They were also asked to look for chances of co-operating on such projects with USAID.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Poultry and Eggs

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many poultry have been killed, and how many eggs have been destroyed, following the recent publicity about salmonella diseases since 1 December 1988; what has been the cost of compensation to producers in Northern Ireland; if the scheme for compensation is being continued; and if he will make a statement about the present state of the poultry and egg industries and their future prospects.

Mr. Viggers: Under the Slaughter of Hens (Northern Ireland) Scheme and the Egg Industry (Northern Ireland) Scheme 50,663 hens have been slaughtered and 10,230,120 eggs had been destroyed in Northern Ireland up to 26 January at a compensation cost of £333,837. Slaughtering of hens has been completed. Eggs for which applications were submitted by 17 January, the closing date, are still being destroyed. The Government have no plans to extend either scheme.

Fish Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what applications have been made for fish farming developments around the Antrim coast; what approvals have been given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: There have been three applications; two have been granted consent to discharge under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 of which one has also been given a fish culture licence under the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966. The most recent application is still under consideration.

Mr Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has had concerning fish farming developments, and their impact on Glenarm and Red bay.

Mr. Viggers: Besides representation by the developers a total of 24 letters and submissions from 13 different groups and individuals have been received. The Northern Ireland Ministers for Agriculture and Environment jointly met a delegation comprising most of the parties who have made representations against these salmon farming developments.

RUC (Deaths)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve were killed as a result of road traffic accidents during 1988; and how many were killed by terrorists in the same period.

Mr. Ian Stewart: During 1988 11 members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its reserve were killed in road traffic accidents and six were killed by terrorists.

Prisons

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently being held in each prison in the province, and in total; and how many prison officers are currently in each prison in the Province, and in total.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As at 1 February 1989, there was a total of 1,780 prisoners in prison establishments in Northern Ireland, including 272 untried prisoners. The following is a breakdown by establishment:

	Number
Her Majesty's Prison, Belfast	[1]521
Her Majesty's Prison, Maghaberry	[2]253
Her Majesty's Prison, Magilligan	285
Her Majesty's Prison, Maze	578
Her Majesty's Young Offender's Centre	143

[1] Includes 264 untried prisoners.
[2] Includes eight untried prisoners.

As at 31 January 1989, there was a total of 3,166 prison staff in prison establishments in Northern Ireland. This figure includes staff serving at the prison service college and headquarters. The following is a breakdown by establishment.

	Number
Her Majesty's Prison, Belfast	662
Her Majesty's Prison, Maghaberry	483
Her Majesty's Prison, Magilligan	468
Her Majesty's Prison, Maze	1,294

Special Branch

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much from the total budget was allocated to special branch for each year from 1979 to the current date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The allocation of expenditure on special branch activities is a matter for the Chief Constable. In the particular operational circumstances of Northern Ireland this information is confidential.

Sinn Fein Councillors (Lisburn)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the approximate sums and the hours of police time it has taken to provide protection for the Sinn Fein councillors at meetings of Lisburn district council in 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1989]: No. During 1988 police were not detailed to protect individual councillors or specific groups within Lisburn district council.

PRIME MINISTER

Rolls-Royce

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what are the implications for the Government's privatisation proposals of the European Commission's decision of 21 December 1988 to initiate proceedings against the Government over the infringement of competition policy in the case of the flotation of Rolls-Royce.

The Prime Minister: None. There is no parallel with the Government's proposals for water and electricity privatisation.

WALES

Schizophrenia

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in Wales suffering from schizophrenia and discharged from hospital in 1986 and 1987 after a second or subsequent admission went (a) to their own homes, (b) to local authority residential accommodation, (c) to live with a relative elsewhere, (d) to private residential accommodation, (e) to residential accommodation provided by voluntary bodies and (f) to other accommodation.

Mr. Grist: Information in the form requested is not available. Details of after-care arrangements for discharged patients with a diagnosis of schizophrenia are as follows:

Discharges, after a second or subsequent admission

	1986	1987
Local authority residential accommodation	18	20
Psychiatric hospitals	87	87
Non-psychiatric hospitals	20	24

[1] Including, for example, that provided by GPs, out-patient departments, and those not requiring further treatment.

Bee Keepers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bee keepers there are in each county in Wales; and what was the number of bee keepers during each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

County	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	[1]1988
Clwyd	365	334	364	343	336	320

Abattoirs

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many abattoirs there are in each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of abattoirs by county is as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	16
Dyfed	12
Gwent	4
Gwynedd	9
Mid Glamorgan	5
Powys	11
South Glamorgan	—
West Glamorgan	6

Group Practices

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many group practices there are in Wales, by region.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

Regional Health Authorities

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the services provided by the Welsh regional health authorities.

Mr. Grist: There are no regional health authorities in Wales. However, certain services which to be clinically effective and economically viable need to be provided to a population which is greater than that of a health district are designated as regional services by the Welsh Office. The responsibility for planning their capacity and location and for the funding of approved developments rests with my right hon. Friend, whilst the district health authorities which host the regional services are responsible for their operational management.

The services presently designated as regional are:

Assay services
Blood transfusion service
Bone marrow transplantation
Burns, plastic and maxillo-facial surgery
Invasive cardiology and cardiac surgery
Medical genetics
Perinatel intensive care
Pharmaceutical quality control services
Poisons information service
Radiotherapy and medical oncology
Forensic psychiatry
Renal dialysis for end-stage renal failure
Renal transplantation
Spinal injury rehabilitation
Thoracic surgery
Welsh Hearing Institute

The catchment areas of these services vary.

Hospitals (Beds)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in each Welsh district health authority with 250 beds or more.

Mr. Ian Grist: The following hospitals had 250 beds or more on 30 September 1988.

Resource Management Initiative

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Welsh hospitals are involved in the resource management initiative and whether any will be joining the initiative in the next year.

Mr. Grist: Acute hospitals in the Clwyd North unit will be piloting a resource management system based on an order communications network, following initial work in West Glamorgan health authority. Acute hospitals in West Glamorgan are also still involved in the medical records, diagnosis related group (DRG) coding, and organisational development aspects of the initiative; and the authority is currently considering the possibility of testing a "bolt-together" resource management system along the lines of those currently being piloted at various sites in England. Other Welsh authorities have expressed interest in acquiring a resource management capability at the earliest opportunity; and the Government's intention, as noted in the White Paper "Working for Patients", is to ensure that the requisite information systems are in place throughout Wales by 1992.

NHS Land

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much undeveloped land is owned by the National Health Service in Wales; and if he will list those sites of 10 acres or more.

Mr. Grist: The information is not recorded in the form requested. Currently the NHS in Wales owns some 358·5 acres of land which it no longer needs. This land, which will be sold at the best possible price for the benefit of health care in Wales, includes plots of 10 acres or more at the following sites:—

Aberdare general hospital, Aberdare
Bronllys hospital, Brecon
Bryn-y-Neuadd hospital, Llanfairfechan
Mid Wales hospital, Talgarth
Parc Beck nurses home, Swansea
St. Cadoc's hospital, Caerleon
Whitchurch hospital, Cardiff
William Nicholl home, Cardiff

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much land has been sold, and for how much in 1987-88 prices, by the National Health Service in Wales, in each year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

Financial year	Acreage sold	Proceeds of sale (1987-88 prices) £000
1979-80	10·1	0·33
1980-81	148·5	1·02

M4 (Storm Damage)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Gwent county council concerning damage caused to the M4 following storm damage to manhole covers; and when he proposes to carry out the remedial work necessary to repair the damage.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No damage has been caused to the M4 motorway by the existing drainage system although there have been isolated instances of manhole covers becoming dislodged in exceptionally heavy rainfall conditions.

A scheme to remove the manholes from the M4 carriageway to prevent further incidents has been designed in conjunction with Gwent county council and, subject to the availability of finance, work is planned to start in 1989-90.

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) farmers and (b) farmworkers were employed in each county in Wales in June 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information for June 1988 is not yet available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when the county figures are available.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what exploration activity for oil and gas has taken place in the firth of Clyde in each of the past 10 years; if he is able to state the conclusions reached on the commercial potential of any finds; and if he will make a statement on the latest position.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Exploration for oil and gas in the firth of Clyde had been limited to the acquisition of seismic data in 1981, 1982, 1984 and 1985, but no wells have been drilled to date in the firth of Clyde.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total value of North sea oil revenues to the United Kingdom Treasury in the period 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 24 January to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) at column 488.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Parkinson: In the 1987-88 financial year, the most recent for which full figures are available, the Department of Energy represented Her Majesty's Government on the following international organisations:

	Contribution £
International Energy Agency	524,000
International Atomic Energy Agency	4,527,000
Nuclear Energy Agency	270,000

Nuclear Power (Publicity)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total funding of the current publicity campaign by the nuclear electricity information group; and what contribution is being made to that campaign from his Department's budget.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority contributes to the nuclear electricity information group's costs using funds provided by my Department through the public information programme letter. I understand that the authority's contribution to the current nuclear electricity information group advertising campaign is £42,500. The total level of funding of this campaign is a matter for the nuclear electricity information group.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made any representations to British Nuclear Fuels concerning inaccuracies in its recent publicity material.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have made no such representations.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give (a) the original design rating, (b) the cumulative average load factor and (c) the present actual annual load factor of each nuclear power station operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will project the efficiency of Sizewell B in the same terms on the basis of the actual performance of the board's existing nuclear plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman of the board to write to the hon. Member.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Parkinson: The Department of Energy has made one donation in response to public appeals for financial aid since financial year 1979-80. This was a donation of £1 million to the Piper Alpha disaster fund in 1988-89.

Gas Reserves

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest estimates for natural gas reserves in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest estimates for remaining recoverable natural gas reserves within the United Kingdom and its continental shelf were published in the 1988 Brown Book (my Department's report to Parliament on the development of United Kingdom oil and gas resources) and lay in the range 644 to 1,950 billion cubic metres.

The figures for remaining recoverable gas reserves for end 1988 will be published in the 1989 Brown Book in April; they are not yet available.

Fiddlers Ferry

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects flue gas desulphurisation equipment to be fitted at Fiddlers Ferry power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board and its successors will decide the order in which large coal-fired power stations should be retrofitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment in order to meet their share of the United Kingdom's commitment to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions. I expect to receive a planning application for the next plant shortly.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the most up-to-date cost in the present and next financial year of the cost of privatisation of the electricity supply industry to each of the 12 area boards and the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure incurred in preparing for privatisation is a matter for the individual boards concerned.

British Coal (Trading Margins)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has yet fully assessed the financial implications of the squeeze on British Coal's trading margins discussed in the recent Public Expenditure White Paper, Cm. 606.

Mr. Parkinson: The projections set out in Cm. 606 assumed breakeven in 1988-89 and steadily growing profitability thereafter. External finance requirements were set as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	750
1989-90	560
1990-91	385
1991-92	273

However, subsequent negotiations with the CEGB and other major customers have resulted in a price freeze. This, together with the effect of higher cost inflation than expected, loss of output due both to geological difficulties and to industrial relations problems, mainly in Yorkshire, and the reduction in sales caused by the recent mild weather have caused the industry's trading position to deteriorate. As a consequence the corporation's operating profit in 1988-89 is likely to be reduced by some £50 million to about £450 million.

The corporation is responding firmly to these pressures by accelerating the restructuring of its operations into 1988-89 and the first half of 1989-90, by shedding unprofitable business in non-core markets, and by further reduction of its capital requirements over the period to 1991-92. While these actions should lead to a more profitable industry in the future, there is nevertheless an adverse short-term effect on the corporation's bottom line result because of additional restructuring costs and terminal depreciation. This together with the lower operating profits and a higher interest charge will lead to an overall loss for 1988-89 of around £100 million. The adverse market factors which have affected operating profit and the bottom line in the current year will have an even greater effect on British Coal's outlook for 1989-90. The industry is planning at least to sustain the level of operating profit in 1989-90; however, after taking account of significantly higher restructuring and terminal depreciation costs, and interest charges, a further overall loss is expected.

The corporation's external finance requirements are now projected as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	850
1989-90	720
1990-91	335
1991-92	223

I am accordingly raising the corporation's external financing limits for 1988-89 and 1989-90 to £850 million and £720 million respectively. These increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The capital allocations for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are being reduced from £650 million and £575 million to £600 million and £550 million respectively. British Coal's temporary borrowing limit is being increased from £1,800 million to £2,050 million immediately and further increased to £2,500 million from the beginning of 1989-90. A Supplementary Estimate for additional voted loans to meet the extra financing requirements in 1988-89 will shortly be laid before the House.

Coal Mining

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what percentage of coal mining face-workers are mechanically transported underground from the shaft to the coal face;

(2) what percentage of British coal is (a) cut, (b) conveyed and (c) cleaned by mechanical means.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for British Coal and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

11. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to assist with child care costs recipients of income support who wish to take employment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. Such costs are not disregarded in housing benefit and family credit. It would be inequitable to allow a concession for those in part-time work when none is available to those in full-time work. We have said that we will monitor the new earnings rule in income support and consider what changes, if any, are necessary in the light of its operation.

Pensions and Earnings

13. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is considering restoring the index link between pensions and earnings.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to restore the link between pensions and earnings. The key factor in considering pensioners' incomes is the total net income available. Our policies of protecting basic pension against price increases, ensuring that income from savings keeps its value, and encouraging the growth of occupational pensions have resulted in a 23 per cent. real terms increase in pensioners average total net incomes between 1979 and 1986.

18. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how much has been saved by abolishing the earnings link in pensions and linking it to the cost of living.

Mr. Scott: The additional public expenditure that would be needed in 1988-89 to uprate retirement pensions in line with earnings would be £3·7 billion.

Child Benefit

14. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish details of child benefit payments paid by the United Kingdom and other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: We have every reason to be proud of our record of recognising the extra costs of providing for children. Our provision for and recognition of these costs compares very favourably with that of other EC countries.

For a two-parent family with one child under two the United Kingdom stands ahead of every other member state in its child benefit payments. In addition, for a two-parent family with two children under six the United Kingdom ranks third. The details that my hon. Friend is seeking are given in my Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1988)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Care of the Elderly

15. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost to his Department of care in the community for the elderly living in their own homes as an alternative to residential care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Within Government the lead responsibility for community care rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Of course, many elderly people are helped to live in their own homes by a range of social security benefits such as attendance allowance, invalid care allowance and income support, as well as by payments from the independent living fund and the social fund.

Family Credit

16. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest average length of time taken to process applications for family credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have reduced the average length of time from 22·9 working days in November to 21·7 days in January. Of that only 5·5 days was for work within family credit branch. The remaining 16·2 days were taken up by waiting for responses to enquiries, mainly from employers.

29. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the take-up of family credit.

38. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further measures he is considering to increase the take-up of family credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received very few representations about family credit take-up from outside this House, where there has been a concentration on the number of people receiving the benefit. There has been less recognition of the fact that expenditure is running above the levels we originally estimated, which indicates that families who most need the benefit are getting it. The average award is over £25 a week, and I am sure that family credit is welcomed by the quarter of a million families currently receiving it.

We are planning a major campaign, to include television, to coincide with the uprating of family credit in April. The claim form is being revised and a new range of publicity material is being prepared. Our regional information teams will continue to raise awareness of family credit through the local media and by talking to employers, trade unions and others, especially to make clear the levels of income at which it can be paid.

Departmental Spending

17. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what amount spending by his Department on pensions and related benefits is forecast to increase in real terms in 1989 over 1988.

Mr. Scott: The details of expenditure published in the Department's chapter of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 615) show that real terms spending on pensions and other benefits for the elderly is planned to be over £500 million higher in 1989-90 than in the current year. In addition, we announced last November a package of help to poorer, older pensioners from October 1989 worth nearly £100 million in 1989-90 and almost £200 million in a full year.

These increases mean that social security expenditure on the elderly is forecast to rise by 2·7 per cent. in real terms between 1988-89 and 1989-90, at a time when the number of pensioners will rise by less than one half of one per cent.

16 and 17-Year-Olds (Financial Support)

19. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on financial support available to 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are monitoring the effects of the reformed social security structure on all groups, including 16 to 17-year-olds. This monitoring is now in progress.

Disability Benefit

20. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the number of people receiving disability benefits has changed since 1978-79.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) earlier today.

Family Credit

21. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in receipt of family credit reside in London; and what is the estimated number of families in that area who would be entitled to family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We plan to make information about numbers of family credit claimants in particular areas available shortly. It is not possible to estimate the eligible population in these particular areas.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the family credit ceilings in respect of 1989-90, for each of the following (a) a married couple with one child under five years, (b) a married couple with two children under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children 11 to 15 years, (d) a married couple with three children under 11 years, (e) a married couple with three children aged 11, 13 and 15 years, (f) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two children between 11 and 15 years and (g) a married couple with one child under 11 years and one child aged 11 to 15 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provided that the family has no more than £3,000 capital, family credit of 50p a week or more will be payable on net income up to the levels shown in the following table, whether the family has one parent or two. In assessing net income, child benefit and one parent benefit are disregarded.

Family	Net income £
(a) One child under 5 (or under 11)	112·51
(b) Two children under 11	122·94
(c) Two children over 11 but under 16	138·94
(d) Three children under 11	133·37
(e) Three children aged 11, 13 and 15 (ie over 11 but under 16)	157·37
(f) Two children under 11 and two children over 11 but under 16	159·80
(g) One child under 11 and one child over 11 but under 16	130·94

Fraud

22. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to reduce social security fraud.

Mr. Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) earlier today.

Unemployment Benefit, Coventry

23. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average period for which people claiming unemployment benefit in Coventry have received reduced benefits because their unemployment has been termed voluntary.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Mobility Allowance

24. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he proposes to increase the age of eligibility for application for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: This is one of the questions that we shall be considering in the light of the full results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability surveys.

Social Fund

25. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Halifax have claimed, and how many have received, a crisis loan from the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers by month of applications processed for social fund crisis loans together with the number and value of awards made is available in the Library.

26. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local offices are currently running ahead of their social fund limits for the current financial year; and how many have exceeded those limits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Individual offices may from time to time exceed their anticipated expenditure for the year to date, but there are no indications that any office will be unable to manage its yearly budget allocation. No local office has exceeded its social fund allocation for 1988-89.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure to date in respect of social fund community care grants, itemised by the amount awarded under Secretary of State direction (i) 4(a)(i), (ii) 4(a)(ii), (iii) 4(a)(iii) and (iv) 4(b).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Information is collected by application purpose and client group. Expenditure on community care grants at the end of December is provisionally calculated at £22·8 million of which £1·15 million was paid for travelling expenses under direction 4(b).

Relocation

27. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his reasons for relocating social security office work out of London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) and for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) earlier today.

31. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money will be saved by his Department due to relocation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are making a significant initial investment in our project to relocate some of the work from some London social security offices, but from 1992-93 we expect to save £4 million per year. The net present value of the project over 20 years is £16 million.

33. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the future of his Department's offices in inner-city areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since we published "The Business of Service" report in June 1988, we have received about 50 representations concerning our proposals to move some work out of some London offices. Most of these, however, were based on the mistaken belief that we were planning to close offices in London. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are planning to improve our network of offices in London.

36. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for the reorganisation of the offices of his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For our plans for relocating some work from some London local social security offices, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 16 January, at columns 44-45.

A team of officials is considering options for moving some headquarters work out of London, and we shall make a full announcement of our conclusions in due course.

43. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many jobs will be involved in the relocation of work from social security offices in London to other parts of the United Kingdom; and when he expects the relocation to be complete.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As a direct result of the project to move some work from some London social security offices, we shall be creating 430 jobs in Glasgow, 350 in Belfast and 260 in Ashton-in-Makerfield, near Wigan. Staff savings in London will be approximately 1,200. We expect that the transfer of work involved in this project will be complete by October 1991.

44. Mr. Robert B. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how relocation of social security office work out of London will affect his social security staff.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Relocating some work out of 21 London social security local offices is good news for staff. We are creating more than 1,000 high-quality permanent jobs in the regions; we are taking pressure off our London staff so that they will be able to offer a better face-to-face service and so get more satisfaction from their jobs; staff in London and in the new social security centres will have a better working environment; and, since the project is being phased over more than two years, we see no need whatever for staff redundancies in London.

Service to the Public

28. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to improve the service to social security claimants.

39. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has that his Department's local benefit payment offices are giving a better service to the public as a result of recent publicity.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The social security reforms which were introduced last April to make the benefit system easier to understand and to operate have led to real improvements in local office service standards. For example, the average time taken to clear income support claims in 1988-89 has been five days compared with six days the previous year, and there has been a substantial fall in average error rates from 11·6 per cent. in 1987-88 to 9·6 per cent. in the year to date. In addition, plans are in hand to tackle individual problem areas, such as some inner London offices, by relocating some of the work to parts of the country where it is easier to recruit and retain staff. In the longer term, the computerisation of social security operations will make an increasing impact in improving service delivery standards from mid-1989 onwards.

32. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to improve the efficiency of the social security system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are making very good progress in improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the social security system. The new benefits introduced in April last year have simplified the system and made it easier to understand, both for claimants and for staff. As a result fewer people are finding it necessary to visit their local social security offices and the time taken to clear benefit claims has been reduced from a national average of six days for the last year of supplementary benefit to five days for the first six months of income support. National error rates have also improved, from 11·6 per cent. to 9·7 per cent. We recognise that further progress still needs to be made and to help with this we are setting improved targets and standards of service. For example, a comprehensive system of quality assessment of local office contacts with the public has been developed.

These changes are complemented by our huge computerisation programme which is transforming the administration of social security, bringing major benefits for the taxpayer and all who use the social security system. Following the successful computerisation of the family credit system in April, trials of the initial version of the new pensions system and the central index system are now under way in the first local offices. A new micro-computer based system has recently been brought into operation for the retirement pension forecast service, providing a quick, personalised reply to most inquiries. The public reaction to this has been overwhelmingly favourable. More and more people are taking advantage of the facility which we are providing to have their benefits paid direct into a bank or building society account, and over 1·5 million pensioners are now paid in this way.

We are taking further steps to provide a better and more efficient service to the public by relocating some work away from some of our most hard-pressed local offices. We are considering the manner in which we organise and run our operational systems and, in particular, whether they could with advantage be run as a "Next Steps" agency or agencies. We have an active and ongoing programme of efficiency scrutinies which has yielded savings of more than £80 million and more than 4,000 posts, and we are encouraging our staff to take an active part in helping to improve efficiency through increasing use of the Department's suggestions scheme. This has saved at least £5 million this year alone.

EC (Ministerial Meeting)

30. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the European Community; and whether an agenda has been set.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans at present to meet our European counterparts in a European Community context. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will be attending a Council of Europe meeting on 13-14 April.

Community Care Grants, Manchester

34. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the payment of community care grants in Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Take-up of community care grants in Manchester has increased significantly in recent months. The combined expenditure of the Manchester offices at the end of October was 27·5 per cent. of their total annual budget allocation and by the end of December this had increased to 45 per cent.

The equivalent national figures were 24 per cent. and 38 per cent. respectively. Nationally, take-up of community care grants reached 77 per cent. of anticipated monthly expenditure in December.

Income Support

35. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has that the new income support scheme is simpler to understand than supplementary benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The early indications are encouraging. Claims for income support are being processed more quickly and accurately and a higher percentage are successful than claims for supplementary benefit. They are also generating significantly less appeals—some 34,000 between 11 April and 31 December 1988 as against 95,000 supplementary benefit appeals over a similar period. This represents a welcome improvement for claimants and staff alike and provides some indications that the new income support scheme is simpler to understand than supplementary benefit.

A lot of effort has gone into improving the design of the Department's claim forms and leaflets using specialist design consultants as well as the Department's own professional writers and designers. The integrated claim form, combining a claim form and all the information needed by a claimant to establish if he may be entitled, is one of the results. This is proving popular with the public.

All this represents a real step forward from the old supplementary benefit scheme. We will continue to press for further improvements in the service provided as staff and claimants alike become more familiar with the new scheme.

Special Needs Hostels

37. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what responses he has received to the consultation document on the funding of special needs hostels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 23 January at columns 417-18.

Pensioners (Benefits)

40. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he proposes to increase the take-up of housing benefit and income support by pensioner households.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In addition to our normal publicity arrangements, we shall be mounting a special campaign later this year to publicise the extra help which is being made available to pensioners through the income support and housing benefit schemes from October. As part of that campaign we shall be writing to all pensioners aged 75 and over, whose addresses we hold, to explain the changes.

Missing Persons

41. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make a statement of his Department's co-operation with the police on missing persons investigations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is the long-standing policy of successive Governments that information held for social security purposes may be disclosed on request to the police in a case which involves a missing person under the age of 18. The information is given orally and in confidence and in respect of specific named individuals only.

Widows

42. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the number of widows who have had a reduction in benefits specific to themselves due to changes in circumstances, other than re-marriage, since the changes in regulations in April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy on widows' pensions of the decision of the social security appeal tribunal at Walthamstow that a widow aged under 45 years is entitled to a widow's pension because changes made to the law in April 1988, which would otherwise disqualify her, are invalid; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in the light of the ruling of the independent social security appeal tribunal at Walthamstow on the change in the age limit for widows' pensions, he has any plans to restore the age limit to 40 instead of 45 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for the office of the chief adjudication officer to decide whether or not to seek leave to appeal to the social security commissioner. If the adjudication officer decides not to seek leave to appeal, the tribunal's decision will be implemented in the normal way.

Housing Benefit

45. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his plans for housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Housing benefit will continue to be available to help those on low incomes meet their liability for rent and rates. Future expenditure plans for housing benefit are contained in the public expenditure White Paper, (Cm. 615).

School Meals

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next proposes to review the provision of free school meals to the children of people receiving benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Free school meals are available to children in families receiving income support. The Government have no plans to change these arrangements.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many benefit claimants in receipt of invalid care allowance, in each of the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, had that benefit disallowed following the death of a husband, the award of widow's benefit and the application of the overlapping benefit regulations;

(2) how many applications for invalid care allowance were received in each of the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 and refused on the grounds that this allowance overlapped with widow's benefit.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available. The information which is available does not distinguish between women according to their marital status. Since June 1986 (when the allowance was extended to married and cohabiting women) 3,571 claims from women have been disallowed because they were receiving another social security benefit, equal to or higher than the weekly rate of invalid care allowance (ICA). Payments of ICA to a further group of 4,715 women have been stopped because they have become entitled to another social security benefit equal to or higher than the weekly rate of ICA.

Retirement Age

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce the conclusions on the reappraisal of the various options for the equality of treatment of men and women in respect of age eligibility for the state retirement pension, to which he referred on 27 November 1987, Official Report, column 181.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 18 January at column 246.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will now consult his advisory committee as to whether a successful claim for an attendance allowance should be backdated to the date of the claim, as opposed to the present requirement for at least six months have passed before the allowance is paid.

Mr. Scott: Attendance allowance may be paid from the date of the claim if at that date the statutory medical conditions have been satisfied throughout the previous six months. The social security advisory committee considered the qualifying period, but did not recommend its general waiver, in its report "Benefits for Disabled People: a strategy for change" published on 29 November. The qualifying period is an aspect of the attendance allowance scheme which we shall look at when we consider the future of disability benefits in the light of the OPCS disability surveys.

Isle of Wight Benefit Office

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Isle of Wight office to be linked to the national computer; and what steps he is taking to speed up computerisation of all benefit offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I recently announced that we are accelerating the implementation of our computerisation programme so that all offices will be linked to the mainframe computer systems by mid-1991. Implementation of the systems in the Isle of Wight office is scheduled for the first half of 1991.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much money was allocated by the Government to the independent living fund in each of the years 1987-88 and 1988-89; and from the vote of which Government Department such allocations were made;

(2) what information he has as to what sources of income the independent living fund has secured, other than Government funding, and as to how much such alternative source amounts to;

(3) how much money will be allocated by the Government to the independent living fund in 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The independent living fund was formally constitued on 8 June 1988. No funds were therefore made available for the year 1987-88. For 1988-89 £5 million was allocated from the miscellaneous health services and personal social services vote of the then Department of Health and Social Security. £5 million has been allocated for 1989-90. This sum will be reviewed as management information becomes available from the first year of operation.

The independent living fund is financed entirely from Government sources.

West Derby Office (Industrial Action)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the strike of officials at the West Derby Office of his Department in Princess drive, Liverpool; and what steps he is taking to bring the dispute to a satisfactory and equitable conclusion.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 44 members of staff at the Department's West Derby local office are currently taking strike action over management's proposals to transfer a small number of excess staff to neighbouring offices for temporary periods.

Discussions have taken place between regional management and the trade unions. The unions are recommending to their members that they return to work early this week.

A full public service will be restored at the office as soon as possible thereafter.

HEALTH

Health Service (Charges)

72. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will put in the Library a copy of Sir Donald Acheson's recent formal report on the implications and monitoring of charges for teeth and spectacles.

Mr. Mellor: I have received no such report.

Aluminium

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received regarding the safe level of aluminium in baby foods; and from whom.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's independent expert medical and scientific advisory committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment recently considered the results of analyses by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on the aluminium content of infant formulae. The committee saw no need for action to reduce the aluminium intakes from infant formulae. However, the Department's expert advisory committees will continue to keep under regular review the results of research into the effects of aluminium intakes.

Listeria

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths there were in 1988 associated with the bacteria listeria; and in how many cases there was a food poisoning report associated with the death.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The provisional number of deaths registered in England and Wales in the first three quarters of 1988 at ages 28 days and over with underlying cause of death assigned as listeriosis (international classification of diseases 9th revision 027.0) is seven. In addition, the provisional number of neonatal deaths (at ages under 28 days, where no underlying cause of death is assigned) where listeriosis was mentioned as a condition on the death certificate is five for the same period and area. In none of these 12 deaths was there any mention of food poisoning on the death certificate.

From the reported cases of listeria known to the communicable disease surveillance centre of the Public Health Laboratory service who are also known by them to have died, none has been reported, formally or informally, as being confirmed microbiologically to have been associated with food.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of those National Health Service hospitals which have engaged in contractual arrangements with private hospitals and clinics during 1987 and, so far as possible, 1988.

Mr. Mellor: Contractual arrangements with private hospitals and clinics are not made by individual NHS hospitals. Contracts are usually arranged by district health authorities and occasionally by regional health authorities.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients received radiotherapy within the National Health Service in (a) 1983 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table. The latest year for which information is currently available is 1986.

New patients attending radiotherapy departments, NHS hospitals, England, 1983 and 1986

Ambulances

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each ambulance service covering the Yorkshire and northern regions, and for each year since 1979, the number of miles covered by (a) emergency services, (b) non-emergency services, (c) minicabs and (d) volunteer drivers.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many emergency-equipped ambulances were available on 30 September 1988 at 6 pm; and what was the equivalent for each year since 1983.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not centrally available.

Listerial Meningitis

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of listerial meningitis have been recorded since 1979; and if he will give a regional breakdown of such incidence;

(2) how many fatalities have been recorded as a result of listerial meningitis since 1979; and if he will give a regional breakdown of such incidence.

Mr. Freeman: From the statistics of notifications of infectious diseases, it is not possible to identify separately the number of cases of listerial meningitis. However, the table shows, in addition to the number of deaths registered with underlying cause of death assigned as listerial meningitis, the number of notifications of other specified forms of acute meningitis, including listerial meningitis.

(R) = Number of notifications of acute meningitis, other specified organism[3] by standard region, and
(B) = Number of deaths to usual residents of standard regions with listeria meningitis[2] assigned as underlying cause

[1] Provisional; mortality data are for January to September registrations only.
[2] International Classification of Diseases ninth revision code 027.0 (part).
[3] Acute meningitis, other specified organism includes all specified meningitis organisms other than those in the meningococcal, pneumococcal, influenzal (haemophilus influenzae), and viral categories.
[4] Deaths to those usually resident outside England and Wales are included in the overall totals.

Note:

In 1986, neonatal deaths were no longer assigned with an underlying cause of death but mention of condition(s) present at death were given. Therefore in addition to the number of deaths shown in the table there was one neonatal death in 1986 in the South East region, and two neonatal deaths in 1987 (one in the South East region and one in the North West region) with mention of listeria meningitis on the death certificate.

Health Authority Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will estimate (a) what the allocations would have been to each English regional health authority for 1989-90 if the same national total had been distributed on the basis of the 1988-89 allocations, (b) if he will estimate the difference between the figure and the actual allocation given to each region for 1989-90 and (c) if he will express (c) as a percentage of (b).

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table:

Sexually-related Diseases (Children)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by sex and by age the number of children aged 16 years and under who have been examined and diagnosed for a sexually related disease during the last year (a) in the Trent regional health authority and (b) by district health authority, showing the type of disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The latest available data are for Trent regional health authority in 1986 for syphilis and gonorrhoea only. These are shown in the table.

Trent Regional Health Authority

	Male	Female	Total
Primary and secondary syphilis	0	0	0
Post-pubertal gonorrhoea	8	27	35

Trent RHA

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants are currently employed by the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September 1987, there were 1,322 consultants in post in the Trent region, of these 657 were employed by the regional health authority. This figure includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many: (a) speech therapists and (b) physiotherapists are currently employed by the Trent regional health authority;

(2) how many nurses are currently employed by the Trent regional health authority;

(3) how many midwives are currently employed by the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives the number of staff in post in the Trent region for the groups mentioned:

	No. in post WTE
Speech Therapists	260
Physiotherapists	890
Nurses	35,800
Midwives	2,170

Of these only 100 (WTE) nurses are employed by Trent regional health authority itself.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hours are worked by junior doctors employed by the Trent regional health authority in an average (a) week and (b) month.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information centrally. The hon. Member should contact the chairman of Trent regional health authority for an answer to his question.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for treatment in the following specialties in the Trent health region at the latest available date (a) orthopaedics, (b) gynaecology, (c) ear, nose and throat, (d) plastic surgery and (e) cardiothoracic surgery.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table.

In-patient waiting list for selected specialties, Trent Regional Health Authority, 31 March 1988

Specialty	Number waiting
Traumatic and Orthopaedics	13,097
Gynaecology	8,324
Ear, Nose and Throat	8,295
Plastic Surgery	3,706
Cardiothoracic Surgery	773

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in the Trent regional health authority have 250 beds or more.

Mr. Freeman: In 1986, the latest year for which we have available information, there were 37 hospitals with 250 or more average daily available beds in Trent region.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for day treatment at hospitals in the Trent health region at the latest available date; and what has been the percentage change in the last 12 months.

Mr. Mellor: There were 9,870 patients on the day case waiting list in Trent at March 1988. There is no comparable figure for March 1987 as day case waiting list statistics were not collected at that time.

Acute Beds (North Derbyshire)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute beds are currently available to patients in north Derbyshire.

Mr. Freeman: In the financial year 1987-88, there were an average of 579 acute beds available daily in North Derbyshire health authority.

Health Centres (North Derbyshire)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of health centres in north Derbyshire.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not collected centrally. I would therefore suggest that the hon. Member contact the chairman of North Derbyshire health authority for an answer to his question.

Waiting List (North Derbyshire)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been on the waiting list in north Derbyshire for over one year.

Mr. Mellor: At March 1988, 720 patients on the in-patient waiting list in north Derbyshire had been waiting over one year. This compares with 1,280 at March 1979. Provisional figures, currently being validated, indicate that the number reduced still further in the six months to September 1988.

Cancer

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the incidence of breast cancer in women aged (a) 50 to 64 years and (b) 65 years and over in each of the last 10 years;

(2) what was the incidence of cervical cancer in women aged (a) 50 to 64 years and (b) 65 years and over in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table; 1984 is the latest available data year.

Crewe DHA (Contracts)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of every private company that has entered into any contract with Crewe district health authority in the past five years, with the addresses of their registered offices and the names of their directors.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of each private company that has entered into any contract with Halton district health authority in the past five years, together with the addresses of their registered offices and the names of their directors.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold details of such arrangements centrally. The hon. Member and my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the appropriate district health authority for the information.

Haemoglobinopathy

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to secure the delivery of specialist haemoglobinopathy services in districts where they are currently not on offer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department recently issued a questionnaire to all district health authorities on haemoglobinopathy services and is currently analysing the responses. The analysis will form the basis for decisions about action that might be needed centrally on these services.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Mellor: Department of Health Ministers and/or officials represent the United Kingdom at the world health assembly, at meetings of the World Health Organisation's regional committee for Europe and at other meetings arranged by the WHO; the United Kingdom's assessed contribution to the organisation's regular budget—amounting in the current financial year to £7·559 million—is paid by the Department of Health. Departmental officials also represent the United Kingdom at meetings of the European Pharmacopoeia Commission and of other committees concerned with public health and with rehabilitation organised by the Council of Europe, but whose membership comprises only some members of the Council of Europe; the United Kingdom's contribution to the work of these committees—amounting to £287,000 in the current financial year—is made by the Department.

Departmental Ministers and/or officials also represent the United Kingdom at meetings of a number of international organisations dealing with health and personal social service issues, to which the United Kingdom's contribution is not primarily a charge on Department of Health votes—for example, councils and working groups of the European Community, and ministerial meetings and steering groups of the Council of Europe and of the OECD.

The cost of attendance at meetings of these bodies are not separately identified.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has published guidelines or instructions regarding the costing of redundancy expenditure arising from competitive tendering.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. Most recently in executive letter EL(87)MB/1 issued in November 1987. A copy has been placed in the Library. The guidance is kept under review.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has yet received the final copy of the report of the study conducted by the Royal College of General Practitioners into the psychological sequelae of abortion.

Mr. Freeman: No. A large body of data is currently undergoing careful analysis. I understand the report should be available later this year.

Infant Health

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases there have been of babies who have become victims of Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally about Alzheimer's disease relates to those cases which received treatment in an NHS hospital. The data which are based on a 10 per cent. sample of patient discharge records, revealed no such cases in the under 15 age group. We are not aware of any cases of babies or children with Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the effect on babies of consuming food with high levels of aluminium.

Mr. Freeman: Aluminium in the diet is not known to cause any disease in babies. In 1988 the Food and Agriculture Organisation/World Health Organisation joint expert committee on food additives set a provisional tolerable weekly intake—PTWI—for aluminium of 7 mg per kilogram bodyweight. This figure was based on the effects on laboratory animals of very much greater intakes of aluminium compounds. The aluminium intakes of babies in the United Kingdom are well below this PTWI.

Anaemia

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities employ full-time specialist sickel cell anaemia and thalassaemia counsellors.

Mr. Freeman: The Department recently issued a questionnaire to all district health authorities on screening and counselling services for sickle cell and thalassaemic diseases. Although this did not ask about the employment of full-time specialist counsellors it did ask who was responsible for counselling. The replies to the questionnaire are currently being analysed.

Hospitals (Opting Out)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, under his proposals for the National Health Service announced on 31 January, he will make it his policy to allow the local community to have a vote prior to a hospital with more than 250 beds deciding to operate on an independent basis.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper published on 31 January outlines plans for self-governing hospitals within the NHS. Proposals will be given local publicity but I see no merit in making management changes within the NHS subject to a vote by the residents of a particular locality.

Population Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has as to the number of persons ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom who have attained the age of 12 years.

Mr. Freeman: It is estimated that at 30 June 1987 there were 48,380,000 persons aged 12 and over with usual residence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the average frequency of household removal.

Mr. Freeman: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. However my hon. Friend may find the following information relating to 1986 useful.

Percentage of Heads of Households according to length of residence at current address: Great Britain

Length of residence Years	Percentage

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of AIDS patients receiving treatment in London; and which eight hospitals have the most such patients.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have information in the form requested.

The total number of AIDS cases reported from district health authorities in Greater London at the end of 1988 was 1,318, of whom 671 have died. The eight health authorities which had the greatest numbers of reports were:

Riverside
Parkside
Bloomsbury
West Lambeth
Hampstead
Tower Hamlets
Wandsworth
Camberwell

NHS (Funding)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Sonia Cabey, aged 18 years, from the dependency of Montserrat now in the Brompton hospital, London, awaiting heart surgery not available in the dependency, will be treated under the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement about the funding of this case.

Mr. Mellor: Miss Cabey is being treated privately in an NHS hospital. The Monserrat Government have undertaken that the costs will be met.

Artificial Kidney Assistants

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to his Department about vacancies for artificial kidney assistants in the National Health Service,

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Out-patients (Transport)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals charge transport costs to patients of out-patient clinics and those patients admitted after referral by their general practitioner; what is the average charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Ambulance service transport is provided free of charge for those patients considered by a clinician to be medically unfit to travel by any other means. Patients who do not have a medical need but who have difficulty in finding other means of attending hospital may also be carried by the ambulance service but a charge may be made.

Information on the level and extent of such charges is not centrally available.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of new patients prescribed benzodiazepines by doctors since January 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence he has on the number of road accidents caused by impaired concentration of motorists taking benzodiazepines;

(2) what evidence he has on the number of accidents (a) in the home and (b) elsewhere caused to elderly people by taking benzodiazepines;

(3) what evidence he has on the incidence of structural brain damage causesd by long-term use of benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to undertake a national education campaign to warn young people about the dangers of benzodiazepine addiction.

Mr. Mellor: We have no such plans. Health, personal and social education in schools, backed by the work of drug education co-ordinators in every local education authority, covers the use and misuse of a wide range of substances, including prescribed drugs.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people prescribed benzodiazepines since January 1988 who have taken them for longer than the period laid down by the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of chronic users of benzodiazepines in the United Kingdom; and what percentage of these are addicted to the drug.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Cook-Chill Food

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce regulatory provisions governing the temperature at which cook-chill foods are stored and displayed by retailers and the length of time during which such products are on sale from the time that they leave the manufacturer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Proposed changes to the Food Hygiene Regulations 1970, including requirements for the temperature of retailed chilled food, have been the subject of consultations by my Department and discussions continue. The Food Labelling Regulations 1984 already require pre-packed perishable foods to carry a date of minimum durability.

Neomycin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are estimated to suffer burns or scalding accidents annually; what is the best estimate of those seriously burned or scalded and likely to have been thickly sprayed with neomycin;

(2) how many people are known to have been deafened by the use of neomycin sprays after being treated for burns or scalds; and what is the best estimate of the number at risk of being deafened in this way;

(3) when neomycin was first used in National Health Service hospitals in spray form; what Government safety health checks it had received prior to that date; for what purposes it was recommended; and what warnings of side effects were given;

(4) at what date neomycin was available to National Health Service hospitals; what Government safety health checks it had received before use within the National Health Service; for what purposes it was recommended; and what warnings of side effects were given;

(5) what is his best estimate of the number of people known to have been deafened by neomycin used in conventional form;

(6) when were the first research reports that neomycin could cause deafness; who they were by; and what action was taken by his Department to warn those using the drug;

(7) if he will set up an inquiry to investigate (a) the number of adults and children deafened by the use of neomycin sprays to treat burns and scalds, (b) the possibility of identifying them, (c) the possibility of giving publicity to the fact that, in some circumstances compensation may be possible, (d) the difficulties that people deafened in this way have in getting access to medical records and (e) the effectiveness of procedures which transmit information about the side effects of drugs;

(8) what information he has as to when research first established that compounds applied to the skin could be absorbed into the bloodstream and as to what action was taken to link this information to known hazards of drugs taken intravenously; and what action was taken by his Department to ensure that this information was known by those likely to treat burns.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Medicines containing the antibiotic substance neomycin were introduced in the early 1950s. There was then no general statutory requirement for pre-marketing approval of the type introduced by the Medicines Act 1968. It is not now possible to be precise about the date of introduction or the conditions of marketing. Reports of ototoxicity (damage to the ear, including deafness) associated with injections of neomycin led to discussion in the medical literature in the early 1960s of the risks of deafness. The injectable forms were subjected in 1966 to the Therapeutic Substances Act (TSA) 1956. TSA control was more limited than the comprehensive system under the Medicines Act 1986. Its chief objects were to ensure purity and potency. The risk of ototoxicity associated with all forms of neomycin was reported by the later 1960s.

Over the period 1963 to 1988, 14 suspected cases of neomycin-associated deafness were reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicine (CSM) and its predecessor the Committee on Safety of Drugs (CSD). These reports derive from all formulations of neomycin. It is not meaningful to extrapolate from these reports. As with all prescription-only medicines, the decision in balancing the benefit of treatment of individuals against the risk of unwanted effects is a matter for clinical judgment. I am advised that clinical use of neomycin has become progressively selective with appreciation of the risks of ototoxicity, which the licensing authority (LA) and advisory bodies have played their part in fostering. Centrally available information is held on the number of hospital in-patient cases treated for burns and scalds. The latest available figure is an estimate of 11,190 for 1985, but there is no central information as to whether they were treated with neomycin.

Medicines containing neomycin are subject to all the normal prescription-only controls. Data sheets inform doctors of the risks of ototoxicity. Moreover, in addition to the control of the products, the substance neomycin itself is controlled under the Medicines (Control of Substances for Manufacture) Orders 1971 and 1985 (SI 1971/1200 and SI 1985/1403): Individual batches are tested by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control.

The CSM issued a warning to all doctors in 1977:

"The association of deafness with the parenteral use of neomycin is well established. The Committee on Safety of Medicines have recently received reports of deafness following topical administration of aerosol preparations containing neomycin used in the treatment of extensive skin damage resulting from burns or other causes.

The Committee urge the profession to report any case of ototoxicity which they suspect may have resulted from topical administration of aerosol or any other preparations containing neomycin or other antibiotics."

The CSM issued a reminder in 1981 in the Current Problems publication to all doctors:

"The Committee on Safety of Medicines wishes to remind doctors that when otitis externa is treated topically with preparations containing chlorhexidine aminoglycoside antibiotics (eg neomycin, framycetin) or polymxins in patients who have a perforation of the tympanic membrane, there is an increased risk of drug-induced deafness. It is therefore important to ensure that there is no perforation in such patients before prescription of these preparations."

The LA reviewed in 1979-80 with advice from the Committee on Review of Medicines (CRM), some medicines with neomycin which had been on the market before the Medicines Act was brought into effect; were mainly anti-diarrhoea products; generally, the result was to limit permitted indications for use and require additional warnings in product literature of the products which remained licensed.

Other neomycin products are brought under scrutiny as part of the review of all pre-Act medicines.

The independent "British National Formulary" distributed by the Department to all NHS doctors and pharmacists contains explicit warnings.

Discussions have begun with the medical profession with a view to developing voluntary means of access to medical records. It could be counterproductive to anticipate the outcome.

It is for individuals who consider that they may have been made deaf by the use of neomycin to take advice. It would be inappropriate to prejudice such advice or any proceedings which might arise by a general statement or by inquiry into numbers affected or by attempting to identify individuals, for which there is no feasible central mechanism.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is being done to meet the needs of those people unable to go into private sector nursing homes

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Health and local authorities provide a wide range of services to meet the needs of individuals. Health authorities provide hospital in-patient care where this is appropriate, NHS nursing home provision and community nursing support for those able to live in the community, whilst local authorities provide residential domiciliary and day-care services. We encourage health and local authorities to plan and work jointly with the voluntary and private sectors, to ensure that a comprehensive range of provision is available.

A range of social security benefits is also available to help people who live in their own homes.

Continuing Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advise his Department has given to health districts for their strategic planning in relation to continuing care provision.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]: The most recent advice was set out in Circular HC(88)43, which gave guidance to health authorities on preparing short-term plans for 1989-90 and making any necessary revisions to existing strategic plans.

A copy of this circular has been placed in the Library. The relevant references are in appendix 4.

Pensioners (East Cleveland)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place with employment training agencies on the loss of hot meal services to retirement pensioners in the East Cleveland area.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 2 February 1989]: I understand that the East Cleveland employment training group luncheon clubs project has been carried forward into employment training. Loftus Employment Training has been appointed as the training manager and is actively considering ways of ensuring the project's continued future within employment training. I also understand that Training Agency officials are available to help in this process as necessary.

Pay and Price Deflator

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the relevant figures in table 14.1 of Cm. 614 adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and price deflator.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]:

Hospital and Community Health Services—Current Expenditure

£ millions

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Cash figures table 14.1 Cm. 614
Gross	8,882	9,386	9,886	10,623	11,730
Net	8,628	9,120	9,607	10,320	11,402
Figures adjusted by HCHS Pay and Price deflator

Net	11,133	11,122	11,145	11,193	11,402

The table sets out HCHS current expenditure figures from 1983-84, adjusted by the HCHS pay and price deflator for the years in which it is available. These figures do not take account of income from cash releasing cost improvements which, in the years shown, provided a significant contribution to the total resources available for service development.

Hospitals (Resource Management Initiative)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals participating in the resource management initiative and those hospitals that will join the initiative in the next two years.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]: The following are the acute hospital sites that are participating in the resource management initiative:

Freeman Hospital
Royal Huddersfield Infirmary
Royal Hampshire County
Pilgrim Hospital
Guy's Hospital
Arrowe Park

The acute resource management initiative will be extended over a phased period to the main acute hospitals in England. No decision has yet been taken on which particular hospitals will join the initiative in the next two years.

CIVIL SERVICE

European Community (Reform)

71. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what changes he expects to take place in (a) the training of the Civil Service and (b) related matters as a consequence of dismantling of internal frontiers in Europe in the run up to 1992.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service has for some time been preparing for the single European market. Departments are developing their training to respond to this opportunity, including the use they make of the courses in European affairs run by the Civil Service college. Details of these courses are contained in the college brochure "European and International Affairs", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Clubs

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of job clubs in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: At 31 December 1988 there were 1,214 job clubs open for business. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 January at column 810.

Unemployed Persons (London)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received following the publication of his Department's survey on the long-term unemployed in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations following the publication of the results of the two London surveys covering employers and the longer-term unemployed, in London, respectively.

There has of course been widespread interest in the research findings, which reveal that there are 150,000 job vacancies in London, at a time when almost 300,000 people are claiming benefit as unemployed.

At least one third of the vacancies require no special qualifications or experience, although many of London's longer-term unemployed do have academic or vocational qualifications, with nearly one in 10 possessing degrees. Many also have experience in management and other skilled occupations.

A quarter of the longer-term unemployed interviewed had not looked for work in the previous week. Many of those who said that they were actively looking for work used methods different from those favoured by employers in filling vacancies. Some of the London unemployed need the opportunity to retrain in up-to-date skills, and we now have employment training for them. Others need to look more intensively for the jobs to which they are already well-suited. The surveys underline the importance of the measures which the Government are taking to ensure that benefit is drawn only by those who are genuinely unemployed.

Japanese Tourists

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to stimulate Japanese tourism to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is very aware of the tourism potential of the Japanese market.

BTA is already involved in a range of promotional activities to stimulate Japanese travel to Great Britain. BTA has also commissioned a study of the Japanese tourism market in conjunction with DTI.

YTS

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures for the number of filled YTS places for each year from 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Cope: The average numbers of young people in training on YTS for each year from 1984 to 1988 are as follows:

	Number
1984	263,000
1985	265,000
1986	283,000
1987	358,000
1988	396,000

YTS (Accidents)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures on the number of (a) fatal, (b) major and (c) minor accidents to YTS trainees reported to the Manpower Services Commission/Department of Employment Training Agency for each year from 1984 to 1988, giving the average age of trainees involved.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the number of (a) fatal (b) major and (c) minor accidents to YTS trainees for each year from 1984 to 1987. Figures for the full years of 1988 are not yet available. From the 1 April 1986 changes in legislation on the reporting of accidents were introduced which had the effect of reclassifying some accidents from minor category to the major category—for example, broken wrists and ankles.

The figures in brackets show the number of major and minor accidents under the previous reporting system. The average age of trainees involved could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

		Accidents[1]
		Major injuries[2]		Minor injuries
Year	Fatalities	Riddor	Nador	Riddor	Nador
1984	4[3]	—	190	—	1,725
1985	4[4]	—	201	—	1,885
1986	7[5]	305	(221)	1,624	(1,708)
1987	7[6]	427	(262)	2,466	(2,631)

[1] Training Agency accident figures for YTS are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, agency figures will include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments which may not have been reportable to the Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] Up to 31 March 1986 major injuries were classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980. From 1 April 1986 major injuries have been classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Disease and Dangerous Occurences Regulations 1985.

[3] This figure includes 2 road traffic accidents.

[4] This figure includes 1 road traffic accident.

[6] This figure includes 2 road traffic accidents.

Civil Service Appeal Board

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years his Department has (a) accepted and acted upon or (b) not accepted or acted upon, Civil Service appeal board recommendations concerning his Department's unfair conduct in disciplinary matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Generally speaking rejection of Civil Service appeal board recommendations is not common in my Department.

Holidays (UK)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the most recent figure for the percentage of the population that take holidays in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The latest estimates show that 36 per cent. of the population of Great Britain aged 16 and over took one or more holidays of four or more nights in Great Britain in 1987.

Tourists (East Midlands)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accommodation establishments are available to tourists in the east midlands region at the latest date.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988, there were 3,016 tourist accommodation establishments in the east midlands region known to the English Tourist Board's registration unit.

Vocational Courses

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to reduce duplication between YTS, the technical and vocational education initiative, CPVE and other vocational courses.

Mr. Cope: This area is being carefully looked at and a number of lessons are emerging, including developments in records of achievement and vocational qualifications. We will continue to work towards reducing duplication to ensure progression for young people to obtain higher levels of attainment while maximising the increased choices available to young people as they move from school to work.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the Training Agency's support for equal opportunities in training and employment for members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Cope: From 1 April 1989 the Government are to enlarge and redirect their practical help to increase equal opportunities for members of ethnic minority groups through training.

First, the Government will increase the provision within employment training for unemployed people who need training in English as a second language. There will be extra finance for supplementary grants for this kind of training; extra money for the assessment of people who need such training; and staff involved in the programme will receive training in the relevant expertise and, for the year beginning 1 April 1989, consultancy advice. These improvements to employment training will cost £1·3 million per year.

Secondly, there will be a major initiative to increase the use of open and flexible learning in English as a second language. A total of £200,000 per year will be available to identify good open learning materials, to commission new material if necessary, and to promote its use.

Thirdly, the Government are to extend the new programme "Business Growth Training" which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 24 January (Official Report, 25 January, column 550). In inner city target areas, firms receiving help under the programme for outside advice on training will be eligible for up to two-thirds of the total cost of their project, rather than the normal one-half maximum. A further £5,000—on top of the £15,000 maximum—would be available for such projects, whether or not in inner cities, to fund training which helped to increase equal opportunities for ethnic minority employees of the firm concerned. I am asking the Training Agency to ensure that each of its area offices with a concentration of ethnic minority employees in its area sets up appropriate projects of this kind. The annual cost of this extension of "Business Growth Training" would be £1 million in a full year.

These new measures will supersede the present funding of the net running costs of industrial language training units totalling £2·2 million in 1988-89. Their original purpose was to provide training in basic English for first generation immigrants in employment. But while members of ethnic minorities in the work force are employed largely by private sector firms, the proportion of private sector employers helped by the units is small. The location of units does not fully reflect the distribution of ethnic minorities in the work force. And, the units focus on people in employment, whereas those in the greatest need are unemployed.

The new arrangements announced today will create new business opportunities for the units. In order to give them time to adjust, their direct funding will therefore be extended from 31 March to 11 August 1989.

I am confident that the new arrangements will help members of the ethnic minorities more and more effectively.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 13 July 1988, Official Report, columns 238-39, what is the reason for the decline in the amount of low flying taking place over southern Scotland in the first three months of 1988; and if he will provide an updated table showing the latest available figures for the numbers of movements and complaints in 1988;

(2) if the figures for low flying aircraft movements over southern Scotland in his written answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, 1 May 1987, Official Report, column 298, and 13 July 1988, columns 238-39, include movements in low flying area 13; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Pursuant to the reply provided by my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 13 July 1988, columns 238-39, I regret that an error was made in the calculation of the proportion of United Kingdom low flying movements over southern Scotland in the first three months of 1988. The correct figure is 7·1 per cent. The latest available figures for the numbers of movements in and complaints from southern Scotland are as follows:

	1 January to 31 October 1988
Movements in southern Scotland	17,049
Complaints from southern Scotland	285

The figures for movements in southern Scotland do not include movements in low flying area 13.

SDI (Contracts)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence how many contracts for research or development have been awarded to United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education under the strategic defence initiative programme; and what is their total worth.

Mr. Sainsbury: Thirty-three contracts with a total value of United States $8 million.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence how many United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education have so far received contracts for research or development under the United States of America strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Twenty-one.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the matters under consideration in the course of his current review of military low flying, the time-scale involved and the consideration given to possible public consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: There is no review of military low flying taking place. However, as part of a continuous monitoring of the United Kingdom low flying system, a programme of reviews of avoidance areas is carried out and changes made when necessary, reflecting changes on the ground, and aimed at spreading low flying more evenly and enchancing flight safety, while at the same time reducing, where possible, the disturbance to those on the ground.

Complaints

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 13 January, column 782 (1) at what level records are kept of the submissions for redress of complaint by service men; what categorisation of complaints is made; whether a report is prepared of the number of complaints made in each category; and what information is required centrally;

(2) what effort would be required to obtain from existing records the number of submissions for redress of complaint relating to racial discriminniation or abuse; what would be the cost; if he will provide as much information as is accessible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Submissions for redress of grievance are retained as permanent records on the individual's service documents. Complaints may be made orally or in writing and are normally resolved at unit level. Commanding officers have a duty to investigate all complaints seeking redress and if the complainant is dissatisfied with the decision the rules provide for the complaint to be submitted to each subsequent level in the chain of command and ultimately to the service boards. Complaints investigated by the special investigations branch are categorised according to the nature of the offence (assault, theft, etc).

Central records are kept only of cases submitted to the service boards. To obtain the information requested by the right hon. Gentleman would involve disproportionate cost, requiring individual returns from many thousands of service establishments world wide of cases settled at unit level.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table listing for (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) England, (d) The Federal Republic of Germany, (e) Cyprus and (f) the Falkland Islands the number of complaints received in 1988 by his Department concerning the low flying of Royal Air Force or Royal Navy planes and seeking a reduction in this activity.

Mr. Neubert: My Department does not keep central records of complaints made about low-flying aircraft other than those involving activity in the United Kingdom low flying system. The total number of complaints received in 1988 is not yet available.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the annual defence budget has been allocated to nuclear weapons design, production, maintenance and deployment in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimated spending on strategic nuclear forces is shown in table 2·3 of volume 2 of the 1988 statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm 344-II). Since 1979, this spending has represented the following proportions of the defence budget:

	Per cent.
1979-80	1·5
1980-81	1·5
1981-82	2·2
1982-83	2·3
1983-84	2·4
1984-85	2·3
1985-86	2·8
1986-87	3·6
1987-88	4·7
1988-89	[1]5·6

[1]Provisional estimate.

Military Construction Projects

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United States military construction projects in the United Kingdom for which funding approval was given in fiscal year 1989, giving for each project its location, the nature of facilities to be constructed and an estimate of when the project will achieve operational status.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I understand from information provided by the United States authorities that the following United States military construction projects have been funded for fiscal year 1989. Information regarding the operational status of these projects is unavailable. The dates given reflect when the facilities will be ready for occupation.

Base and facility	Ready for occupation
RAF Bentwaters

RAF Welford
Fire station	September 1990
Munitions igloos	May 1990

[1] Although funding has been approved for this project, it is currently under United States Air Force review.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest information he has about United States military construction projects in the United Kingdom and its dependent territories for which funding approval is being sought for the United States fiscal years 1990 and 1991, giving for each project its location, the nature of the facilities to be constructed and an estimate of when each project will achieve operational status.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Information on the dates these projects will achieve operational status is not available. I understand from information provided by the United States authorities that funding approval for the following United States military construction projects is currently being sought.

ENVIRONMENT

Government Offices

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total square footage of the office estate of central Government within the boundaries of the old Inner London education authority area; and what is his estimate of the average rental which could be charged on those offices if they were available for arms length letting to the private sector.

Mr. Chope: The best information available is that for the Greater London area as a whole, approximately 2·1 million sq m of office space is held for Government use.

Water Companies

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list (a) the bids for control of statutory water companies which will not be affected by his proposals for automatic referral of such bids to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, and (b) the announced bids which are likely to be covered by the proposals, indicating in each case the shareholding known to have been acquired by the bidder, and the identity of the bidder.

Mr. Moynihan: The proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 January will not affect a bid for control of a statutory water company which does not satisfy the £30 million size of assets test in current merger legislation. A bid for a company with assets exceeding £30 million will be subject to automatic referral if the bidder is another statutory water company with assets exceeding £30 million or a person who already controls another statutory water company with assets exceeding £30 million or a water authority.

The proposals will apply only to mergers initiated after 9 am on 11 January 1989. I am not at present aware of any bids announced since that time which fall within the scope of my right hon. Friend's proposals.

Cars (Recycling)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many tonnes of cars were recycled in each of the last five years and as to the number of sites for recycling cars; what measures he is taking to encourage car recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. I understand from the British Scrap Federation that its best estimate of the weight of scrap metal derived from all types of motor vehicle is:

	Million tonnes
1984	1·73
1985	1·85
1986	2·08
1987	1·79
1988	2·20

Waste Oil

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authorities have facilities for the collection of waste oil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the amount of waste oil that is unaccounted for each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no annually compiled figures. In evidence to the 1985 House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities inquiry into disposal of waste oils (HL44, 1985-86) it was estimated that 100,000 tonnes were disposed of without re-use, from a total annual generation of 430,000 tonnes of waste oil.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to publicise (a) the dangers to the environment of the disposal of waste oil and (b) the availability of safe disposal and recycling sites; and what measures he is taking to ensure that waste oil is not used in heaters without proper pollution control equipment and to ensure sufficient safe disposal and recycling sites exist.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A workshop, under the auspices of the Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, was held last October to promote awareness of the dangers of illegal disposal of waste oils and to encourage the use of suitable disposal facilities. Most local authorities provide such facilities at civic amenity sites.

Plants which burn waste oil will be among the processes for which controls would be strengthened under the proposed revisions to air pollution legislation.

Bottle Banks

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of people per bottle bank in the United Kingdom and for other European Community countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand from the British Glass Manufacturers Confederation that the average density of bottle banks in the United Kingdom is one bottle bank for approximately every 14,000 people.

In 1978 there were just 17 bottle bank sites in the whole country. By 1982 there were 1,230 or one for 45,000 people. Our target is to reach one for 10,000 people in 1991.

In Europe, the average latest available (1985) figures for the provision of bottle banks are:

Austria	1 bottle bank per 1,200 people
Switzerland	1 bottle bank per 1,300 people
Netherlands	1 bottle bank per 1,400 people
France	1 bottle bank per 2,000 people
Germany	1 bottle bank per 2,000 people

Textiles (Recycling)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authorities have sites where textiles can be taken to be recycled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Plastics (Recycling)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the number of facilities available for the recycling of plastics; and what steps he is taking to ensure their wider existence;

(2) what action his Department is taking to encourage the use of environmentally benign plastics;

(3) what information he has on the long-term viability of biodegradable plastics; and what measures he is taking to encourage their development;

(4) what measures he is taking to ensure that plastics are either recycled or disposed of in a manner that enhances the environment and does not involve their dumping in land fill sites.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Recycling of plastics is carried out within the plastics industry with about 50 firms engaged in this work.

Recycling of plastics used by consumers is more difficult because of the variety of polymers used and the difficulty of separating mixed plastics accordingly.

The Government encourage recycling as an environmentally sound disposal option where it is economic to do so and held a workshop in October 1986 with industry to promote this. The Government are supporting the proposal by UK 2000 for a "Recycling City" demonstration in Sheffield later this year and are pressing the plastics and soft drinks industries to include one or more post-consumer recycling projects in the plans. The demonstration will be monitored and the results publicised to encourage other towns and cities to follow suit.

The use and development of biodegradable plastics has been the subject of research within industry and progress has been made in a number of areas. In the long term, however, market forces will determine the extent to which such materials become widely used. The Government are satisfied that controlled landfill is a safe and practicable disposal method for plastic waste that cannot be recycled.

Archaeology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of archaeology surveys and researches that his Department is funding in the three counties of Yorkshire together with the cost to date; and if this is separate from English Heritage's input.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for English Heritage.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect his Department's emphasis on funding in conjunction with English Heritage and on sponsorship of archaeological sites with tourist potential has had on sites of lesser potential in the three counties of Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage has the responsibility for deciding priorities for funding, within its overall resources.

Water Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new controls over intensive farming and sewage works his Department expects to bring into force in the light of the two new draft European Community directives putting controls on fertilisers with the aim of preventing the pollution of drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be in a position to designate vulnerable areas under the European Community directive on nitrate levels in drinking, ground and sea water.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 2 February 1989]: The European Commission has just published its draft proposal for a directive on the protection of fresh, coastal and marine waters against the pollution caused by nitrates.

It is too early to predict the form or timing of the measures needed to implement the draft directive, were the proposals to be agreed by the member states.

Acid Rain

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the contribution made to acid rain in and around the United Kingdom by car exhaust fumes; what progress is being made to reduce this proportion by the fitting of catalytic converters and other means; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of Transport is preparing regulations to apply the limits for car exhaust emissions agreed within the European Community. The means by which these limits can be reached are a matter for the motor industry. It is expected that most cars over 1400 cc sold in the United Kingdom will require catalysts to meet them. A further measure for cars below 1400 cc has recently been agreed by the European Community and it is the Government's intention to implement it. The limits are such that most cars below 1400 cc will also then require at least an oxidation catalyst to meet them. Estimates of road transport emissions of nitrogen oxides, the main acidic pollutant from vehicles, are given in the annual digest of environmental protection and water statistics. The 11th edition will be published shortly and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Radon

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and location of the public sector buildings in England and Wales that receive a level of radon in excess of that which they were designed to withstand, and the number of milliSieverts by which that design standard is exceeded.

Mr. Chope: I can add nothing to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 23 January (Official Report column 455).

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities where the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90 shows an increase of less than 3 per cent.; and what is the average percentage increase for all local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The list below shows those authorities with increases in block grant of less than 3 per cent. between 1988-89 and 1989-90. The average increase for England is 8·8 per cent. The grant figures for 1988-89 have been adjusted for the transfer of higher education establishments to the polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on what new plans he has to deal with the future disposal of chemical hazardous waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 14 December to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd), Official Report, column 612. Since then, we have issued a further consultation paper, on 24 January, proposing additional measures affecting the future of waste disposal control. A copy of this paper has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report initiatives taken since 1979 to deal with the problems associated with the storage of hazardous chemical waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Control of Pollution Act 1974 requires, under section 3, that any land being used for the purposes of waste disposal must be licenced by the local waste disposal authority. These licences were originally issued under the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) Regulations 1976 (as amended) and subsequently by the Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988.

The 1988 regulations require the licensing of premises used to store wastes (including hazardous wastes) under certain circumstances. The regulations require a licence to be issued where special wastes—as defined by the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980—are stored above certain quantities. These limits are as follows:

(a) liquid wastes in excess of 23,000 litres stored in secure containers;

(b) non-liquid wastes of a total volume greater than 80 cubic metres stored in secure containers; and

(c) non-liquid wastes of a total volume greater than 50 cubic metres stored in a secure place or places.

The licence issued by the waste disposal authority should contain all necessary conditions to ensure that the operation of the licensed facility does not give rise to a danger to public health or cause pollution to water. It is the duty of the waste disposal authority to enforce the conditions of the licence and ensure compliance.

The operators of such facilities also have responsibilities towards their workers which are covered by health and safety legislation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those sites now designated as official storage sites for hazardous chemical waste; and when each site was last inspected by his inspectors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Control of Pollution Act 1974 requires, under section 3, that any land being used for the purposes of waste disposal must be licensed by the local waste disposal authority. Sites which store hazardous waste (specifically) special waste as defined in the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations above certain quantities have required such licences since 1976.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has records of some 126 such licensed facilities in England and Wales. As Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution does not hold copies of all waste disposal licences it would be necessary to obtain copies from the respective waste disposal authorities in order to provide full details. This would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the additional requirements that a site designated as suitable for storage of hazardous chemical waste has to have before it is so designated.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Control of Pollution Act 1974 requires, under section 3, that any land being used for the purposes of waste disposal must be licenced by the local waste disposal authority. Sites which store hazardous waste—specifically special waste as defined in the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations—above certain quantities have required such licences since 1976.

Waste disposal authorities are required to licence each waste disposal site individually taking into account all necessary measures to ensure that the facility operates in such a way as to prevent danger to public health and to avoid the pollution of water. Premises licenced to store hazardous waste are treated in exactly the same manner as any other waste disposal facility and, as such, there are no specific statutory requirements that apply solely to such facilities. Guidance on the issues that might be addressed in a licence for the storage of hazardous waste has been given by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in waste management paper No. 4.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests have been made to him by the Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding action over the disposal of hazardous and toxic waste; and what has been his response.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 February 1989]: In the past year, the Department has responded in detailed correspondence and discussion about the council's views on the need for more controls over disposal operations and imports and about their wish to eliminate hazardous waste disposal operations from their area. Those responses have included emphasis on the need for waste disposal authorities to meet the requirements of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in planning and controlling waste disposal and explanations of the Government proposals for legislative improvements and the mechanism of the recently introduced Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report initiatives taken since 1979 to deal with the problems associated with the storage of hazardous chemical waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

My officials have taken part with the Department of the Environment in the preparation of United Kingdom waste management papers on a number of topics relevant to special wastes, including:

	Year
Wood preserving wastes	1980
Arsenic bearing wastes	1980
Pesticide wastes	1980
Special wastes	1981
Clinical wastes	1983
Cadmium bearing wastes	1984
Heat treatment cyanide wastes	1985

The Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Regulations 1977 and the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations, made in 1980, are being reviewed.

The need for a licence covering storage of special waste is drawn to the attention of waste disposal authorities during formal visits by the hazardous waste inspectorate.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those sites now designated as official storage sites for hazardous chemical waste; and when each site was last inspected by his inspectors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

Waste disposal authorities are not obliged to make returns giving details of their licences. From information held centrally we have identified four facilities in Scotland which are licensed solely for the storage of certain hazardous waste. These are:—

Address of storage facility	Waste disposal authority
Eni-Chem Elastomers Bo'ness Road Grangemouth	Falkirk District Council
Non-Tox Limited Dalcross Industrial Estate Ardesier	Inverness District Council
Strathclyde Department of Education Auchingramont Road Hamilton	Hamilton District Council
BP Petroleum Development Limited The Vadill Sullom Voe Terminal	Shetland Islands Council

It is the duty of waste disposal authorities to supervise the operation of all licensed facilities in their area. An inspector from the hazardous waste inspectorate did however visit the Sullom Voe site in 1984.

Storage facilities exist at other sites licensed for the disposal of waste, but are not identified separately.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the additional requirements that a site designated as suitable for storage of hazardous chemical waste has to have before it is so designated.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

Waste disposal authorities are required to license each waste disposal site individually and such licences may incorporate conditions relating to storage. There are no specific statutory requirements that apply solely to storage facilities.

In setting licence conditions applicable to any site, a waste disposal authority will take account of the materials to be stored, the nature of the operation and its location. Licence conditions for each site seek to ensure that each waste facility does not present a danger to public health, cause water pollution or become seriously detrimental to the amenity of the locality.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference given by the London Docklands Development Corporation to Research Bureau Ltd. on employment in the London Docklands; on what date it was commissioned; what was the fee paid; on what date he received a copy; and what is the likely date of publication.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC commissioned Research Bureau Ltd. to report on the changes in employment in Docklands since the previous survey in 1985, by letters dated 1 May and 21 July 1987. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, fees for individual consultancies are not normally disclosed. The corporation plans to release the survey results this month, and a copy will be placed in the Library. My Department will also receive a copy.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies Her Majesty's Government have commissioned on the sub-sea disposal of nuclear waste; which private companies are involved; and if he will summarise what role each has.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment commissioned research on the feasibility and safety of subseabed disposal of radio-active waste as part of an international programme co-ordinated by the nuclear energy agency of OECD. The research was completed in 1987. No private companies are now involved.

Wild Birds

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the United Kingdom has complied with the European Economic Community directive on the conservation of wild birds; which other members of the Community comply with the directive; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that its terms are complied with throughout the Community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The directive's requirements are implemented by means of part I of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England, Scotland and Wales and by the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Orders 1985 and Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 in Northern Ireland.

The directive is binding on all member states of the Community and requires them to introduce their own legislation to implement the directive, and to ensure that it is applied effectively. It is the responsibility of the EC Commission to check that adequate measures have been taken, and they have shown themselves willing to use their powers to refer to European courts of justice cases where, in the Commission's view, member states have failed fully to comply with the directive.

Methane Gas Escape (Denton)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions officials of his Department have had with Tameside metropolitan borough council about the escape of methane gas at the old tip in Ruby street, Denton.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: HM inspectorate of pollution has held discussions with Tameside MBC regarding the migration of landfill gas from the closed landfill at Ruby street, Denton. Inspectors have visited the site and are keeping closely in touch with progress on remedial action.

Water Authority Land

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many sites of special scientific interest lie wholly or partly on water authority land; and if he will list the sites of special scientific interest and the water authorities concerned;

(2) how many sites of scientific interest lie wholly or partly on water authority land;

(3) if he will list the sites of scientific interest which are wholly or partly owned by the Yorkshire water authority;

(4) how many sites of special scientific interest are wholly or partly owned or administered by British statutory water companies; and if he will list these sites of special scientific interest and the water companies concerned;

(5) how many sites of scientific interest are wholly or partly owned or administered by British statutory water companies; and if he will list those sites of scientific interest and the water companies concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information about sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) is currently being assembled by the Nature Conservancy Council. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

I understand that the term "sites of scientific interest" refers to non-statutory designated sites and was used mainly by the former county councils of West and South Yorkshire in the context of development plans. The information about such sites may be available from the appropriate successor local authority. It can not be provided by the Department except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of (a) statutory public footpaths, (b) statutory public bridleways and (c) permissive footpaths lie within British statutory water companies' land holdings; and if he will list the mileage for each company in each category.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This detailed information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Warrington and Runcorn new town development corporation; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Trippier: I had a useful meeting with Professor Mercer on Monday 30 January. We discussed a wide range of matters, including progress towards the wind-up of the development corporation in September, housing, and progress with asset disposals in Warrington and Runcorn.

Environmental Awareness

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a consultancy research contract with the countryside interpretation unit, presently based at the Open university, Milton Keynes, as part of his Department's promotion of countryside environmental awareness.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment has no immediate intentions of placing a consultancy research contract with the countryside interpretation unit. Research contracts are commissioned in keeping with the Department's research priorities and on the basis of competitive tenders, unless there are special reasons for inviting a single contractor. The Department will consider proposals for research relevant to its responsibilities in line with its established contractual procedures.

Under-used Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost to central and local government of preparing, publishing and updating the public registers of under-used land; how many staff have been employed on this work; and what is the additional number of acres which have been added to the registers, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The average annual cost to my Department in recent years is calculated to have been £383,000. Details of the annual cost to local government are not held centrally. Within my Department 19 full-time equivalent staff have been employed on this work.

The table shows the gross and the net area added to the registers, in acres, in each of the last five calendar years:

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Area added (gross)	7,700	10,800	6,300	7,700	4,800
Area removed	6,800	12,300	12,200	15,500	10,900
Area added (net)	+900	−1,500	−5,900	−7,800	−6,100

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of under-used land currently on the public registers are in the ownership of (a) the water authorities and (b) the electricity boards; and how many acres have been removed from the registers following the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of January 1989, the registers of unused and under-used land owned by public bodies contained details of 2,243 acres of such land owned by water authorities and 2,938 acres owned by electricity boards.

Following the privatisation of the former British Gas Corporation, 1,456 acres of land owned by that body were removed from the registers.

Future Bills

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the next Bills on (a) local government, (b) town and country planning and (c) housing.

Mr. Ridley: The Government's Local Government and Housing Bill was published on Thursday, 2 February. There are no proposals for a Bill on town and country planning in the present Session. I cannot anticipate the contents of legislative programmes for future years.

Rating Reform

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would on present estimates (a) a ward sister and (b) a teacher of five years experience and living in an average three bedroom terraced house in Waveney pay under (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) a combination of local income tax and capital value rates.

Mr. Gummer: A ward sister earning £13,000 living in a house in Waveney worth £60,000 and with a rateable value of £200 would pay a rates bill of £422, a community charge of £194 (disregarding the transitional safety net) and £485 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax (LIT). A teacher on a similar salary, living in an identical property, would pay the same rates and community charge bills as the ward sister, and broadly the same capital value rates/LIT bill. In both cases the capital value rates/LIT bill would vary somewhat, depending on the taxable income of the individuals.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of what a married couple with one child, and only one parent working, earning (a) £8,000 per annum living in a two bedroomed house valued at £65,000, (b) £12,000 per annum living in a three bedroomed house valued at £85,000, and (c) £18,000 per annum living in a three bedroomed house valued at £100,000, would pay in (i) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20 and (ii) rates if they lived in Chelmsford.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 2 February 1989]: The figures are given in the table, together with the assumptions used in each case. It has been necessary to supply assumptions about rateable value and taxable incomes.

Example A
Married couple; gross income £8,000; taxable income £1,000; capital value £65,000; rateable value £175

Rate bill	413
Community charge (no safety net)	[1]458
Capital value rate/LIT bill	525

[1] 2 × £229.

Example B
Married couple; gross income £12,000; taxable income £5,000; capital value £85,000; rateable value £275

Rate bill	649
Community charge (no safety net)	[1]458
Capital value rate/LIT bill	730

[1] 2 × £229.

Example C
Married couple; gross income £18,000; taxable income £11,000; capital value £100,000; rateable value £375

Rate bill	885
Community charge (no safety net)	[1]458
Capital value rate/LIT bill	920

[1] 2 × £229.

Sewers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of all domestic properties are served by (a) sewers adopted under section 18 of the Public Health Act 1936, (b) sewers connected to the mains but themselves unadopted and (c) private sewers unconnected to the mains; and what proportion of new houses fall into these several categories.

Mr. Howard: More than 95 per cent. of the population of England and Wales are connected directly or indirectly to the public sewer network. No comprehensive information is available on the proportion of domestic properties served by sewers adopted by water authorities under sections 17 and 18 of the Public Health Act 1936, or which remain unadopted.

Water Authorities (Finance)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the anticipated outstanding debt for each water authority, expressed in sterling, for 1989-90.

Mr. Howard: I expect the liabilities of the water authorities to pass to the successor bodies under the provisions of the Water Bill before the end of 1989. Figures for debt outstanding at the end of 1988-89 will be published in each authority's annual accounts in the usual way.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the external finance limits for each water authority, for the years 1986-87 to 1989-90.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is set out in the table for 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89. I expect the water authorities to pass to the successor bodies under the provisions of the Water Bill before the end of 1989.

Authority	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Anglian	45·7	36·0	23·5
Northumbrian	18·0	−1·0	4·0
North West	58·0	60·2	54·0
Severn Trent	7·9	−2·4	−16·5
Southern	2·2	−5·0	−13·5
South West	4·7	1·0	1·0
Thames	−82·0	−95·0	−95·0
Wessex	26·8	13·0	25·0
Yorkshire	25·8	21·5	15·0

External finance limits for the Welsh water authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rate Support Grant (Cambridgeshire)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total rate support grant to Cambridgeshire for each year from 1983-84 to 1989-90; and what it would have been if total expenditure had not exceeded Government targets in those years when that occurred.

Mr. Gummer: The table shows the latest figures for total rate support grant payable to authorities in Cambridgeshire for each year from 1983-84 to 1989-90.

In 1984-85 the grant of Cambridgeshire county council was abated by £4·152 million because its total expenditure exceeded Government targets. In 1983-84 Peterborough's grant was abated by less than £500.

Rate support grant payable to authorities in Cambridgeshire under latest supplementary report and 1989-90 settlement report

	£ million
1983-84	93·665
1984-85	92·883
1985-86	87·556
1986-87	83·195
1987-88	84·693
1988-89	78·166
1989-90	72·219

Waste Regulations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce legislation to strengthen waste regulatory controls.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Legislation will be introduced as soon as possible based on the Government's announcement of 29 June 1988 and the results of consultation exercises announced on 23 November and 24 January. Copies of the consultation papers have been placed in the Library of the House.

Inner City Programmes

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) of 30 January, Official Report, columns 24-28, which are the inner cities programmes his Department is carrying out; what non-government organisations are taking part in such programmes; where each of these programmes is operating; and on what date each one was started.

Mr. Trippier: My Department's principal inner city programmes are described in the publication "DoE Inner City Programmes, 1987-88", which also gives an account of their achievements and development and contains a map of the areas in which they are operating. These programmes and the years of their inception are: urban development corporations (1981), grants for urban development (1982—now subsumed in city grant which started last year), the urban programme (1969), derelict land grant (1981 in its present form), enterprise zones (1981) and land registers (1981).

A large number of non-governmental organisations are making use of these programmes and it would not be practicable to list them.

TRANSPORT

Judicial Review

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out for the last 10 years (a) the number of decisions relating to motorway and other major infrastructure projects made by the Secretary of State for Transport that have been referred for judicial review, (b) in how many instances the High Court has found against the Secretary of State and, (c) in those cases where the High Court dismissed an application for judicial review, what was the cost to his Department of defending the action and his estimate of the length of delay caused to the project by such applications.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the last 10 years 16 orders made by the Secretary of State for Transport on motorway and major road projects have been challenged in the High Court. No orders made by the Secretary of State have been referred for judicial review.

Two of the challenges were successful.

We do not have details of the costs incurred in defending these cases. On all those where the application was dismissed, costs were awarded against the appellant.

Delay to the projects varied from nil to four years depending on the particular circumstances in each case.

Driver Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were his reasons for proposing the direct licensing of personal data contained within driver information systems, as outlined in part II of the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Bill; and how these proposals relate to the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The possible licence condition at clause 10(8)(f) of the Bill would enable the Secretary of State to require an operator of a driver information system to provide him with information from the system and to authorise him to make it available to others. This provision reflects the fact that the autoguide system will generate information on the speeds and journey times of autoguide-equipped vehicles. Such information could be of value to the Department and other highway authorities in developing traffic management strategies.

It is not our intention that part II of the Bill should provide for the licensing of personal data or that it should override any part of the Data Protection Act.

If any amendments are necessary to place that beyond doubt, we shall bring them forward.

Road Traffic Discs

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road tax discs are lost or stolen each year; and if he has any plans to seek to introduce legislation to deter theft of tax discs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On the basis of subsequent applications for refunds or duplicates, very roughly 150,000 licence discs—about 0·5 per cent. of licences issued—are lost or stolen each year.

Theft of licence discs is a crime. There is no need for further legislation.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been carried out on theft-proof alternatives to the road tax disc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The vehicle excise licence disc includes a number of security features which make it difficult to forge or fraudulently alter, and thus make it unattractive to thieves.

Research continues into the possibility of making licences more difficult to remove from vehicle windscreens without affecting the security and other design features. They often need to be removed legitimately for refunds.

Various high-technology alternatives to tax discs have been examined. So far none of them is as cost effective as the present system.

Road Schemes (Open Space)

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used in the evaluation for COBA of public open space to be acquired for road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In addition to the DV's valuation in COBA, the manual of environmental appraisal requires the appraisal framework to include full reference to any public open space taken by a road scheme, and the effect on those who use it.

The Department is required to provide replacement public open space, of satisfactory quality, for any taken for road schemes. The cost of this is also included in the COBA appraisal.

The Department accepts the independent valuation of the district valuer for all land and property costs used in the assessment of road schemes.

Shipping (Western Isles)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the density of shipping traffic on the Atlantic side of the Western Isles where the sea depth is 100m.

Mr. Portillo: The Department of Transport does not have this information.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many navigation lights and radar reflectors are at present deployed on the western side of the Western Isles.

Mr. Portillo: There are 13 navigation lights and one radar beacon (racon). For general navigation the Northern Lighthouse Board maintains three major lights at Barra Head, Butt of Lewis and Flannan Isles, and two minor lights at Carloway and Greinam in the Isle of Lewis. For local navigation, local bodies provide eight other minor lights. The Ministry of Defence operates a racon at Monach off North Uist.

British Rail (Staff)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what directions have been given to the British Railways Board in respect of reductions in staffing or manpower of its employees; and what efficiency targets or other targets have been given to the board which impinge on future staffing levels.

Mr. Portillo: The only formal directions given to the railways board in recent years concern accounting provision and loan repayments. The objectives which the Government wish the board to pursue were set out in a letter from the Secretary of State to the Chairman on 21 October 1986, and published in the Official Report of the same day (columns 772-74). The quality of service standards agreed between the Government and board were published in the Official Report on 17 July 1987 (columns 671-72). It is for the board to decide how best to meet those objectives, including the levels of manpower required.

British Rail (Meetings)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 26 January at the launch of the central London rail study.

Driving Licences

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with named bodies or persons having experience of administration of driving licences for private drivers, public service licences, and licences for heavy goods vehicles; and if he will place responses to such consultations in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's officials have regular meetings with those involved with the operation of the ordinary and vocational licensing systems. The Department consulted widely last year about proposals for a new unified licensing system. A summary of the responses was placed in the Library.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Portillo: The information is:

Donation to		£
	1979-80 to
Channel ferry disaster fund	1985-86	nil
King's Cross disaster fund	1986-87	[1]1,000,000
Clapham junction disaster fund	1987-88	250,000
East midlands air crash disaster fund	1988-89	250,000
		[2]150,000

[1] Repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund, which was repaid in 1987-88.
[2] The balance of the Government donation of £250,000 was met by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has as to the annual cost in each of the past 10 years of the issue of drivers' licences by the driver and vehicle licensing centre, Swansea; and if he will give the number of staff employed in each year at the centre for this purpose.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total cost of operating the driver licensing system and the staff employed in DVLCs driver licensing division in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Financial year	£ million	Licensing division staff numbers
1978-79	12·3	1,053
1979-80	11·3	901
1980-81	12·7	919
1981-82	16·0	949
1982-83	17·6	942
1983-84	19·4	932
1984-85	20·5	915
1985-86	20·3	965
1986-87	20·4	964
1987-88	21·0	915
Total cost	171·5

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the number of driving licences issued to new drivers in each of the last 10 years, together with the total number of valid licences in each year and the percentage of the total that new drivers' licences represent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table provides the required information.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving licences were reissued in each of the past 10 years as a result of (a) a change of address, (b) loss, (c) disqualified drivers requalifying and (d) other causes; and what percentage of the total number of licences issued in each of these years each of these categories represent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no statistics available about the number of driving licences issued for change of address. The driving licence form which is used for this purpose may also be used for change of name—for example, females on marriage. The statistics are therefore combined. The table shows the categories of licences issued in the last 10 years.

	(a) Change of address including names (replacements)	per cent. of total	(b) Loss (duplicates)	per cent. of total	(c) Disqualification (renewal after disqualification)	per cent. of total	(d) Others	per cent. of total	Total licences issued (including first issues to new applicants)

North-West (Road Building)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road building work contracts in the north-west during 1988-89 scheduled to cost over £1 million.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is the table:

Scheme	Total cost excluding land
M63 (junctions 1-3)	21·0
M63 (junctions 3-5)	21·7
M63 Portwood-Brinnington M66 Brinnington-Denton	45·5
M62 widening (junctions 21-22)	10·00
A565 Derby Road improvement	2·1
A483 Gresford-Pulford bypass	[1]4·6

[1] English section only.

In addition work has been carried out on five major motorway maintenance contracts with a value of over £1 million. Contracts on local authority roads are not included.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his Department's current policy regarding the provision of insulation grants and other assistance for people living adjacent to (a) motorways and (b) airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: For people living near new motorways and other new public roads, there is provision for insulation against noise in the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 and for compensation for injurious affection in the Land Compensation Act 1973. Offers of insulation or grant are made where dwellings receive or are expected to receive noise levels which meet the criteria set out in the regulations. Claims for compensation for nuisance caused by specified physical factors arising from the use of a road can be made against the highway authority one year after the new road is opened to traffic. These provisions do not assist those who live near older roads not covered by the legislation introduced in 1973 or who have moved near a motorway since it opened.

Details of the provisions and procedures for claims are set out in the land compensation series of booklets, in particular No. 2 entitled "Your Home and Nuisance from Public Development" and No. 5 "Insulation against Traffic Noise".

The Government have designated Heathrow and Gatwick for noise insulation grant purpose and has made, by statutory instrument, various noise insulation grants schemes. The most recent schemes for these airports which provided for grants to be paid by the then British Airports Authority effectively ended in March 1985. As promised in the 1985 airports policy White Paper, these schemes were reviewed. This suggested that small areas outside the scheme boundary at each airport should be included retrospectively. BAA plc have agreed to operate and fund extensions to the schemes which will be promulgated by statutory instrument shortly. We have no plans to introduce new schemes at these airports.

We are committed to introducing a scheme at Stansted when the airport reaches 2 million passengers per annum. We understand that BAA has introduced schemes at its non-designated airports and that several other airports also pay such grants.

The Land Compensation Act 1973 provides that if there has been depreciation in value of property as a result of change in the noise climate (or other physical factor) arising from major apron and runway alterations to an existing airport, or the coming into use of a new airport then the airport operator is liable to pay compensation equal to that depreciation in value to the property. The Act does not provide for the payment of compensation for loss of property value to owners of property around airports which may be progressively affected by the intensified use of an airport. Although no powers exist to require airport owners or operators to acquire properties suffering from severe noise-blight, BAA plc introduced voluntary schemes to do this at Heathrow and Gatwick. The schemes, with boundaries based on the 65 NNI (noise and number index) contours and ownership predating 17 October 1969, closed on 31 December 1988 though applications received before then are still being processed. Similar arrangements have been made for noise-blighted properties near airports owned by local authorities.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations British Rail will be undertaking with affected individuals and communities following the publication of the four route options for the construction of a fast rail link between the Channel tunnel and London termini.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that BR will be setting out its proposals for further consultations when it announces its preferred route.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British Rail consults fully the communities affected by any of the four Channel tunnel fast rail links options; and if he will set out his criteria for assessing the effectiveness of consultation.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is well aware of the need to consult those affected by its proposals. It will be for Parliament to judge whether those consultations have been effective if and when it considers BR's Private Bill.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to a loan guarantee scheme, underwritten by his Department, as a possible vehicle for providing extra money for British Rail to construct a Channel tunnel fast rail link from the Kent coast to London termini.

Mr. Portillo: None. Such a scheme would not affect the need for BR's investment to be commercially viable.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to use the hybrid Bill procedure to progress British Rail's proposals to build a new railway line through Kent.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to use the hybrid Bill procedure.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received from the proponents the costings for the proposed railway route known to its promoters as Talis.

Mr. Portillo: I have not.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to whether the private Bill procedure will be used in the event of the British Railways Board seeking legislative approval to construct a Channel tunnel high-speed fixed rail link from the Kent coast to London termini.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail has no alternative but to use the Private Bill procedure to acquire all the powers that it needs to construct and operate new railway lines.

Roads and Maintenance

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total amount spent on roads and maintenance in 1987-88 and the estimated amount for 1988-89.

Mr. Bottomley: The total amount spent on roads and maintenance in Great Britain in 1987-88 was £3,382 million. The forecast outturn in 1988-89 is £3,541 million.

Railway Safety (Survey)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct the chairman of British Rail to publish the survey of safety on the rail network carried out by the British Transport police at Liverpool street and Fenchurch street stations in November 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 February [Official Report, column 439].

British Transport Police

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Transport police officers were employed in total in each of the last five years; and of the total, how many were allocated to British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: BTP figures for officers in post are in the table:

(end years)	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Total	1,961	1,817	1,834	1,846	1,830
of which allocated to British Rail	1,425	1,446	1,417	1,455	1,427

The change in the total between 1984 and 1985 reflected the termination of arrangements between Associated British Ports and the BTP.

M40 Extension

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the first public inquiry into the M40 extension took; how many witnesses gave evidence; how many pages of evidence were taken; when the first public inquiry ended; and when the inspector presented his report of that inquiry to him.

Mr. Bottomley: The public inquiry took 117 days. There were 169 witnesses and 756 documents and 232 plans were taken in evidence. The inquiry ended on 3 June 1983. The inspectors' report was presented to the Secretary of State in March 1984.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Government first announced an intention to construct the Banbury bypass/M40 extension; when the first public inquiry into the M40 extension began; and what were the reasons for the delay between the two dates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first announcement about the M40 extension was made in April 1968. The first public inquiry, for the Waterstock to Warwick section, commenced in September 1982. The time between can be accounted for by public consultation, detailed design and statutory procedures on the section between the M42 and Warwick.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he announced his decision on the route of the M40 extension subsequent to receiving the inspector's report; what were the dates of court hearings for judicial review of that decision; and what is the estimated delay on the M40 extension of such hearings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport announced their decision on 14 December 1984. The orders were challenged. The court hearings were on 23 May and 20 December 1985. The estimated delay was one year.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the recent public inquiry into the M40 extension commenced; how many witnesses gave evidence; how many pages of evidence were taken; when the inquiry ended; and when the inspector submitted his report to him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The public inquiry into the Waterstock-Wendlebury section opened on 8 September 1987 and closed on 22 January 1988. One hundred and eighty-three witnesses presented 625 documents of varying lengths. The transcripts for 63 sitting days averaged about 80 pages a day. The inspector's report was received on 28 July 1988.

Port of Dover (Improvements)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is still Government policy to ensure that improvements to the road and rail access to the ferries sailing from the port of Dover should take place in a manner consistent with enabling the ferries to compete in a fair manner with the proposed Channel tunnel after 1993.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. We are firmly committed to an even-handed approach towards the tunnel and the ferries.

A20 Folkestone—Dover

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the delay in the inspector's report on the proposed dualling of the A20 between Dover and Folkestone; and when he expects a decision to be announced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The complex issues in the inspector's report and the objections and representations, are being carefully considered. We hope to make an announcement in the summer.

A1 Morpeth

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest available figures for traffic flow at peak times on the A1 road between Morpeth and the Scottish border; and if he will make a statement on the growth trend of traffic on that section of the A1 over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's northern regional office has installed three permanent loop counting sites on the A1 north of Morpeth. Two of the sites, one north of Berwick and another north of Alnwick have been in operation for more than a year. The third site, just south of Alnwick, has been operating since October 1988.

The latest flow figures at these sites showing a seven-day average for the week ending Sunday 1 January 1989 are as follows:

	Vehicles per day (24 hours)
North of Berwick	5,650
South of Alnwick	8,200
North of Alnwick	4,850

The highest recorded flows during the past 12 months on the two sites in operation in that period were:

	Vehicles per day (24 hours)
North of Berwick	9,770
North of Alnwick	7,730

There are no figures available that would accurately reflect the traffic growth over the last ten years on this section of road. Local planning data from the Alnwick and Berwick districts indicates a growth factor of 28 per cent. over this period.

Cambridgeshire

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been total central Government expenditure on roads in Cambridgeshire for each year from 1979-80 to 1988-89, and that anticipated for 1989-90, at cash figures and at 1989 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information in the form requested is not readily available and may be obtainable only at a disproportionate cost. I will write to my hon. Friend.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Cyril Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on what plans London Regional Transport has to purchase additional rolling stock for the Docklands light railway.

Mr. Portillo: Ten vehicles were ordered in July 1987 from BREL. Following competitive tendering, London Regional Transport has recently awarded a contract for a further 10 vehicles costing £9·85 million to BN Ferroviares et Metalliques SA, a Belgian-based company. BN has associated with Hawker Siddeley Rail projects, which will be supplying the major sub-systems. The additional rolling stock is part of the programme for upgrading the capacity of the Docklands light railway and extending it to Bank station.

A11

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates he envisages the start of each of the various phases of dualling of the A11 between (a) Stumps Cross and the Newmarket bypass and (b) the Newmarket bypass and the Barton Mills bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Listed below are the five schemes currently being prepared in the national trunk road programme with an indication of the expected start, subject to completion of the statutory procedures. I cannot be more specific at this stage.

Scheme	Planned start year
Stump Cross to Four Wentways improvement	After 1991
Four Wentways Junction improvement	1991
Four Wentways to Newmarket dualling	1991
Newmarket to Red Lodge	1991
Red Lodge bypass	1990

Railway Development

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each newly constructed underground railway and substantial alteration to an existing railway which has been approved by Transport Ministers since 1959.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 January 1989]: Following is a list of approvals by Ministers of Transport to the use of new or substantially altered underground railways during the period 1959-88, following inspection by officers of the railway inspectorate. It does not include resignalling schemes, station refurbishments or the provision or uplift of maintenance facilities.

London Underground lines

THE ARTS

"Social Trends 19"

49. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the arts content of the recently published "Social Trends 19".

Mr. Luce: I welcome the evidence of growth in public interest in and total expenditure on the arts. This is clearly shown by the Social Trends publication.

National Maritime Museum

50. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the attendances at the national maritime museum since charging was introduced.

Mr. Luce: Admission charges were introduced at the national maritime museum on 2 April 1984. Attendances in 1988, at over 700,000, exceeded substantially the estimated level of attendances in 1983, the year before the introduction of admission charges, and represented an increase of 60 per cent. over 1987.

Area Museums Councils

51. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will encourage the further establishment of area museums councils.

Mr. Luce: I welcome the work of the area museums councils as regional centres of expertise and initiative in museums matters. I have seen much of their work at first hand. I recently had the pleasure of opening the new headquarters of the north of England museums service in Newcastle. I understand from the Museums and Galleries Commission that discussions are at present taking place about the feasibility of establishing an area museums service for Northern Ireland.

British Theatre Association

52. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to provide adequate funding to make the British Theatre Association library available for theatrical research.

63. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to provide adequate funding to make the British Theatre Association library available for loans to repertory theatres.

56. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to provide adequate funding to make the British Theatre Association library available for academic research.

58. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on where the library of the British Theatre Association will be moved after closure.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) earlier today.

54. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the size of the British Theatre Association library's acquisition budget in each of the past five years.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the BTA that its acquisition budget if the past five years has been as follows:

1983-84	3,337
1984-85	4,297
1985-86	3,961
1986-87	7,595
1987-88	8,641

55. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the photographic collection of the British Theatre Association library.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the BTA that it does not set out to maintain a comprehensive collection but does hold several thousand photographs covering west end productions and foreign productions, dating from the 1920s.

57. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many loans of texts were made by the British Theatre Association library in each of the past five years.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the BTA that it lends both sets of texts and single texts; a set can be up to 12 volumes. The figures for the past five years are as follows:

	Sets	Singles	Totals
1983-84	12,580	6,092	18,672
1984-85	9,040	5,889	16,929
1985-86	8,980	6,602	15,582
[1]1986-87	8,310	4,998	13,308
1987-88	8,640	6,620	15,260

[1] The library was closed for two months due to a change of premises.

61. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many first editions of theatrical texts are owned by the British Theatre Association library.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the British Theatre Association that approximately two thirds of the stock (that is, close to 200,000 volumes) consists of first editions. This includes sets of plays (multiple copies of a single title) which are first editions.

62. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many (a) individuals, (b) professional theatres and (c) others are members of the British Theatre Association library.

Mr. Luce: I am advised by the British Theatre Association that the total membership is 2,150, divided thus:

	Per cent.
Individuals active in professional theatre	30
Other individuals	10
Professional bodies	11·5
Amateur theatre groups and educational institutions	48

The percentages are approximate.

The British Theatre Association estimates that the individuals and groups represent some 200,000 people.

64. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the collection of the British Theatre Association was last valued.

Mr. Luce: I am advised that the British Theatre Association has never valued the collection, in view of the prohibitive costs of such a valuation.

Arts Provision (Midlands)

53. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he will next make an official visit to Derby to discuss the provision of arts in the midlands.

Mr. Luce: I hope to visit Derby before too long.

Museum of the Moving Image

59. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the figures for attendances at the museum of the moving image on the south bank.

Mr. Luce: Since it opened in mid-September 1988, the museum of the moving image has attracted over 190,000 visitors.

Business Sponsorship

60. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of business sponsorship of the arts is spent outside London and the south-east.

Mr. Luce: Figures for the total level of business sponsorship outside London and the south-east are not available. However, under the business sponsorship incentive scheme, which matches new sponsorship, 70 per cent. of awards have gone to arts organisations based outside London.

Museums Training Institute

65. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what benefits will flow from the establishment of the museums training institute.

Mr. Luce: The museums training institute will be responsible for forming a view on the museum industry's training needs, identifying standards for the occupations in the industry, reviewing the content and delivery of training, promoting the provision of training, providing training in selected areas and validating training courses.

Since publication of the Museums and Galleries Commission working party report on museums training and career structure in July 1987, there has been considerable progress made in the development of museum training. The analysis of key skills and competences, which I announced in my statement of 17 March 1988, has laid a firm foundation for constructive progress. I anticipate that the museums training institute will develop these initiatives further, improving the quality and availability of training in the museum industry.

Arts Organisations (Assistance)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage greater assistance to arts organisations in rural and deprived areas through the business sponsorship investment programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Seventy per cent. of awards under the business sponsorship incentive scheme go to arts organisations outside London; rural areas such as the Borders and Outer Hebrides feature in the scheme as well as inner cities. In 1987-88, Scotland was the second most successful region under the scheme, attracting £345,938 of new sponsorship which was matched by £194,185 of Government money.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Relocation

73. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of Civil Service relocation.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 16 January at column 75, to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith).

Privatisations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations, industries and firms privatised since May 1979, giving in each case the income to Government from the sale of each, the costs of broking, underwriting and advertising of each sale, the initial share price, the present share price, and the size and current value of shareholding retained by the Government, together with the nature of any golden share or any other arrangement to restrict takeover or shareholdings in any way.

Mr Norman Lamont: The information required about income to Government, share prices and size of residual shareholdings is as follows:

For information about advertising costs, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 3 March 1988, at column 629. For the costs to Government of broking and underwriting I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave today to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor).

For information about special shares held by the Government in privatised industries, I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 15 December 1987 at column 427 which lists special shares held in companies privatised prior to the British Steel sale. The special share in Amersham International was redeemed on 27 July 1988 and the special share in Enterprise Oil was redeemed on 31 December 1988. There is also a special share in British Steel, the rights of which are defined in the company's articles of association.

Wines and Spirits (Duties)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the current price of wines and spirits in the European Economic Community and the levels of duty imposed on them; and what equivalent information he has for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: Information on prices of wines and spirits in the European Community member states is not readily available. Rates of excise duties and VAT in each of the member states, according to the latest information available, are set out in the table:

Country	Wine Excise duties: Table wine not exceeding 12 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 75 cl bottle)	Wine Excise duties: Fortified wine at 18 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 70 cl bottle)	Wine VAT per cent.	Spirits Excise duty: Spirits at 40 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 75 cl bottle)	Spirits VAT per cent.

National Savings

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in administrative costs which will result from the introduction of a minimum £5 sum for deposits in national savings ordinary accounts.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated reduction in staff working on ordinary account at the National Savings Bank is 60 full-time staff. The reduction in running costs there is around £500,000 a year. There will also be savings in Post Office agency charges.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total reduction in moneys deposited in national savings ordinary accounts which may result from the introduction of a minimum £5 deposit.

Mr. Lilley: In 1987-88 some £10 million was deposited in the ordinary account in amounts under £5. It is not possible to forecast to what extent the new minimum will lead to people accumulating sums to deposit and to what extent they will refrain from depositing such amounts in their ordinary accounts.

Local Pay Additions

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to pay local pay additions to higher executive officers and senior executive officers in London.

Mr. Brooke: Departments formulate their own plans for local pay additions, in accordance with guidelines set by the Treasury, and submit proposals to the Treasury for approval. The guidelines do not exclude payments to higher executive officers and senior executive officers. A total of 572 HEOs in the London weighting area, but no SEOs, are currently in receipt of LPAs.

Pay Agreement

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on a long-term pay agreement with the NUCPS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Discussions on new longer term flexible pay arrangements for the grades NUCPS represent are continuing between the union and the Treasury.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the volume of private sector investment in British industry for the last year for which figures are available, excluding leased assets; what were the comparable figures for the previous 12 month period; and if he will express both figures as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

	Industrial investment[1]
	£ million at 1985 prices	as a percentage of GDP[2]
1986 Q4—1987 Q3	26,357	8·1
1987 Q4—1988 Q3	30,457	9·0

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of manufacturing output in the United Kingdom for the last year for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures in the previous 12 month period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Manufacturing output in the three months up to November 1988 was 7·2 per cent. higher than in the same period a year earlier. The comparable figure for the previous 12 months was 5·8 per cent. Manufacturing output reached its highest ever level during 1988. Over the last five years its annual growth rate has averaged 4 per cent. This is in stark contrast to the economy's performance between 1974 and 1979 when it fell on average by ½ per cent. a year.

Correspondence

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 11 October 1988 on behalf of Mrs. Lily Grose, of Chyvean, 31 Pennance road, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Mr. Lilley: I replied to the hon. Member's letter on 1 February.

VAT

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement about implementation of the judgment of the European Court of Justice on 21 June 1988, respecting certain of the United Kingdom's value added tax zero rates.

Mr. Lilley: I told the House on 21 June 1988 at column 957-58 that the Government would propose legislation to implement the judgment of the European Court of Justice affecting certain of the United Kingdom's VAT zero rates. As I also promised at that time, there has been an extensive consultation. The Government are very grateful to the many organisations and individuals who have responded. Some matters are still under discussion, but I am now able to announce decisions on most features of the implementing legislation which the Government will be proposing to the House as part of this year's Budget and Finance Bill. I am taking this unusual step in order to allow the maximum feasible time for technical consideration of the clauses and preparation on the part of those traders who will have to operate them, in many cases from 1 April 1989.

As I made clear in my statement to the House on 21 June, this adverse judgment is based on an interpretation of existing Community law to which the United Kingdom gave its assent in 1977. We are obliged to comply with it. This means applying VAT to a number of goods and services at present excluded. Our aim has been to implement the ruling in a way which, while respecting the terms of the judgment, minimises the burgen of tax and compliance. The Government have in large measure been able to meet the legitimate demands of the construction and property industries, by introducing the option to tax rents and devising suitable transitional arrangements, consistently with the obligation to implement the judgment promptly. And we have had particular regard to the potential impact on charities. I regret that they cannot be wholly shielded because many of them have activities which constitute "business" for VAT purposes and therefore come within the ambit of the judgment. But we have done as much as we can to safeguard their position.

I am including several minor changes from the current provisions for construction and property in zero rate group 8 and exempt group 1 which do not flow directly from the European Court judgment. These have been inserted to rectify weaknesses in the law which have become apparent in recent years, often as a result of litigation. These changes are marked with an asterisk in the explanatory notes to the draft clauses.

The provisional draft clauses with explanatory notes on their effect are contained in Customs and Excise documents which I am placing in the Library of the House.

On non-domestic construction, most of the changes that I announced on 21 June are confirmed in the draft legislation but I am glad to say that as well as retaining zero rating for new housing it will also be retained for most new communal residential accommodation such as old people's homes, hospices and boarding accommodation at boarding schools. It will also be retained for new churches and other buildings for non-business use by charities. It has not been possible to retain zero rating for premises used for business, including private hospitals and fee paying schools, which the judgment explicitly ruled were too remote from the final consumer. The change to standard rating for buildings which cease to qualify for zero rating comes into effect from 1 April 1989, although there will be some transitional relief. As I announced last June, this will preserve zero rating for agreements entered into, in writing and for a price, before 21 June 1988. Additionally, it will allow some relief for supplies made before 21 June 1993 in connection with developments that are the subject of a binding legal obligation as a result of an agreement entered into before 21 June 1988 between a developer and a landowner or planning authority.

The option to tax rents, which comes into effect on 1 August 1989, is being extended to agricultural land. Building land will not be taxed, except in defined cases where this is necessary to ensure fair competition.

I am now able to announce decisions on the other groups affected by the judgment.

The fuel and power changes will be effective on 1 July 1990. Zero rates will continue for domestic consumers, and for charities for non-business purposes. Domestic use will include not only private dwellings, caravans, houseboats and self catering holiday accommodation but also communal residential homes, hospices, school and student boarding accommodation but not private schools and fee paying hospitals.

The water and sewerage services changes will be effective on 1 July 1990. All supplies of services of emptying cesspools, septic tanks etc to industrial users for use in connection with the carrying on of a business will be standard-rated. Similarly so will all supplies of water to industry. Industry means any activity described in divisions 1 to 5 of the standard industrial classification. All other supplies will be zero rated.

News services changes will be effective on 1 April 1989. The zero rating will be repealed, and the standard rate thus applied to all news services. This includes supplies to newspapers and individual members of the public (but the Court ruling did not extend to newspapers themselves).

Protective boots and helmets supplied to employers will become standard rated from 1 April 1989.

The estimated yield from the private sector of the proposals contained in the draft clauses will be some £55 million in 1989-90, rising to about £165 million by 1992-93. This includes some £110 million from application of the Court ruling to non-domestic construction. Without the measures to mitigate the impact, the yield from construction would have been £450 million.

Civil Service Trade Unions

Mr. Wells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest estimates for the numbers of elected representatives of Civil Service trade unions in each of the main Government Departments and of the cost of providing paid time off.

Mr. Brooke: The details for 1987-88 are shown in the following tables. Compared with the position as at 31 March 1987, the total amount of paid time off for union business shows a reduction of 75 man years (6·7 per cent.), with a consequential saving (in real terms) of £0·47 million. This reflects, for the sixth successive year, the tighter control and accountability measures introduced by the revised national facilities agreement in 1982.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost would be of increasing mortgage income tax relief from its present level of £30,000 to (a) £35,000 and (b) £40,000; and how much would go to those earning over £20,000 per annum.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 February 1989]: The direct revenue cost, at 1988-89 levels, of increases in the ceiling of mortgage interest relief are given in the table. These estimates make no allowance for any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Ceiling £	Cost £ milion	Cost attributable to tax units with earned income over £20,000 in 1988-89 £ million
35,000	230	100
40,000	390	180

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the mortgage tax relief limit was raised to £30,000; what the additional annual cost to the Exchequer would be if it was raised to £35,000 and £40,000 respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The ceiling for mortgage interest relief was raised to £30,000 in 1983-84. The direct revenue cost, at 1988-89 levels, of increases in the ceiling of mortgage interest relief are given in the table. These estimates make no allowance for any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Ceiling £	Cost £ million
35,000	230
40,000	390

Inflation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each of the last complete financial years (a) the forecast rate of general inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator in the Autumn Statement published immediately prior to each financial year and (b) the actual rate of inflation in each financial year as measured by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) the actual rate of inflation in each financial year as measured by the retail price index.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The information requested by my right hon. Friend is shown in the table:

Percentage change on a year earlier

For the year	Gross domestic product at market prices: Autumn Statement forecast[1]	Gross domestic product at market prices: Outturn[2]	Retail price index[3]
1983-84	5	4·6	4·7
1984-85	5	5·0	5·1
1985-86	4¼	5·5	5·9
1986-87	4¼	3·4	3·2
1987-88	3¾	5·2	4·0

[1] Forecast in the Autumn Statement published immediately prior to the coming financial year.
[2] Latest outturn data.
[3] Change in the average value of the retail price index on the preceding financial year.

Company Cars

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his latest estimate of the proportion of the benefit to an individual taxpayer of company car capital, running and maintenace costs which are taxed under present arrangements; and how much additional tax revenue would be received by the Government if that proportion were increased to 100 per cent. of such costs;

(2) what is the amount of additional tax revenue that would be raised by charging employees' and employers' national insurance contributions on the full benefit obtained by individual taxpayers from company cars.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 January 1989]: The benefit of company cars provided to directors and higher paid employees is taxed by reference to a set of scale charges. The results of independent studies are consistent with the Government's view that the value to typical employees of being able to use their company cars privately exceeds the present scale charges. But the value to any particular employee depends on a wide range of factors. It is not possible, therefore, to provide an estimate of the aggregate extent to which the private use of company cars is undertaxed, nor of the additional revenue which would arise if the full value to the employee was used in computing income tax or national insurance contributions.

Private Schools

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many private schools in Scotland benefit from financial concessions as a result of having charitable status; and if he will estimate the loss of Exchequer revenue as a result of such concessions for the most recent year for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Comprehensive information in the form requested is not available. Inland Revenue records of bodies in Scotland which are eligible for income tax relief identify 75 schools with charitable status. This includes some special schools for handicapped children or for pupils with behavioural problems.

Company Privatisation

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the costs of privatisation of companies, both by private sale and public flotation, for each company privatised since 1979, and for each year since 1979, including separate figures for (a) underwriting, selling and broking, (b) commission, (c) bank costs, (d) marketing, (e) fees to advisers, (f) bonus shares, (g) bill vouchers and (h) any other costs.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 January 1989]: The total costs to the Government of each privatisation since 1979 are in the table. Estimated costs of underwriting, selling and broking commission, receiving bank costs, marketing, advisers' fees and incentives in respect of all primary share sales from British Telecom onwards are given in the following reports presented to the House by the Comptroller and Auditor General:

Session 1984-85
Department of Trade and Industry: Sale of Government Shareholdings in British Telecommunications plc HC 495

Session 1987-88
Department of Energy: Sale of Government Shareholding in British Gas plc HC 22
Department of Transport: Sale of Government Shareholding in British Airways plc HC 37
Department of Trade and Industry: Sale of Government Shareholding in Rolls-Royce plc HC 243
Department of Transport: Sale of Government Shareholding in BAA plc HC 312

Figures given in the reports for customer bill vouchers and bonus shares relate to the maximum value assuming all incentives will be taken up by shareholders. Final figures will depend on the number of eligible shareholders at the end of the qualifying periods. The value of bonus shares distributed for Britoil in 1986 was £3 million.

For residual share sales, and for primary share sales prior to British Telecom, the information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. The Department of Trade and Industry expects to able to report the costs of the British Steel flotation shortly.

SCOTLAND

Drinking Water

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those water supplies in Scotland which fail to meet the standards set out in the European Economic Community directives on the quality of drinking water and whether or not these are the subject of derogations; how and when it is proposed for each of these water supplies to meet the standards laid down; and what the latest estimated cost of complying with the standards is in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The EC drinking water directive allows departure from its standards either by delay under article 20 or by derogation under article 9. Scottish public water supplies subject to application for delay and those subject to derogations are set out in the tables. Improvement programmes, with timetables, for supplies subject to delay have been submitted to the European Commission. Most are in progress and a significant number are virtually complete.

Recent review has indicated further supplies which do not meet the standards. These are not included in the tables pending consideration by Scottish Development Department of appropriate action.

Up-to-date detailed cost figures for individual supplies are not available, but recent estimates by Scottish water authorities suggested that the overall cost of fully complying with the standards might approach £700 million.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the management structure at Lennox Castle hospital in November 1988; how many persons were in each post; and if he will indicate the length of service of each person in the most senior posts;

(2) when the management structure at Lennox Castle hospital was last reviewed by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The senior management structure at Lennox Castle on 1 November 1988 comprised a sector administrator, a physician superintendent and a director of nursing services. The post holders had been in post for six months, one month and six years respectively.

This has now been superseded by new arrangements which were the subject of discussion by Greater Glasgow health board on 24 January 1989. The new management structure gives overall responsibility for all services in the mental handicap sector to a single person, the sector manager. He leads a management team of support services manager, nursing services manager and clinical services manager. That team will be supported by a development officer, personnel manager and management accountant. Of these seven posts, five appointments have now been made, including that of sector manager.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the principal findings of the Mental Welfare Commission report on conditions at Lennox Castle hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following a visit to four of the wards at Lennox Castle hospital on 9 December, the commission informed Greater Glasgow health board of a number of points of concern. Details of these concerns are matters between the commission and the health board and have been the subject of discussion between them.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received over the past five years from Greater Glasgow health board asking for substantial additional expenditure to be spent on Lennox Castle hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board has included bids for expenditure at Lennox Castle in its annual capital plans since 1986 and made a separate representation in 1986 for additional resources. As a result upgrading of wards and other works have taken place at a cost of £3·8 million including a new 24-bed intensive care unit opened in June 1988. Moreover, I announced on 23 January 1989 my approval to the board's plans to spend £4·56 million on the redevelopment of Lennox Castle hospital.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which committee or sub-committee of Greater Glasgow health board has a direct responsibility for oversight of Lennox Castle hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Overall responsibility for the planning and quality of service provided in all the hospitals administered by Greater Glasgow health board rests with the board's policy and planning committee. Direct responsibility for oversight of the hospital rests with the management of the mental health unit.

Nursing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the total number of appeals following the regrading exercise, the number completed and the number decided in favour of the nurse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to health boards on a date for the completion of (a) informal appeals and (b) formal appeals on nurse regrading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards have been asked to complete initial reviews of appeals by the end of February. There is no deadline for completing formal appeal hearings, but boards are expected to deal with appeals quickly as well as fairly.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of local government staff in Scotland for each year since 1975.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Quarterly figures for local authority manpower have been published jointly by the Scottish Office and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities since 1976 and are available in the Library.

Prisons

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are currently being held in each prison, and in total; and how many prison officers are currently in each prison, and in total.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of jobs lost in manufacturing and in the service section in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The information set out in the table relates to the number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers confirmed to the Training Agency as occurring in the Greenock travel-to-work-area, which includes Port Glasgow, in each year from 1984 to 1988.

Sand Eels (Conservation)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis his Department will decide on the appropriateness of conservation measures for the Shetland sand eel fishery if it proves difficult both to estimate the maximum sustainable yield and to advise on an appropriate total allowable catch for the Shetland sand eel stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The health of the Shetland sand eel stocks depends to a very large extent on the levels of recruitment of juvenile fish, which fluctuate because of natural factors, as well as the level of the fishery. Below a certain level of stock size recruitment levels are likely to be affected by the abundance of spawning fish and the prime objective, so far as possible, will be to maintain the spawning stock above the critical level. The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland will be discussing with industry representatives possible conservation measures.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the percentage of O and 1 group sand eels in catches from Shetland waters in each month of each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in 1988 catches of fishing vessels attempting to land sand eels from Shetland waters were found to exceed 25 per cent. by weight of fish of less than 3in long; what was the percentage of small sand eels in any such catches; what was the method of disposal for these catches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Of the 42 samples examined during 1988, two contained more than 25 per cent. by weight of sand eels less than 7·5cm; the percentage of small sand eels was 26·5 and 37·9 respectively; and both catches were sent for reduction to meal and oil. Sampling data are not, however, comprehensive. The level of incidence of small sand eels in catches may depend on recruitment levels, the effects of the voluntary restrictions on catches of small sand eels, or both.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the steps taken by his Department to monitor the voluntary measures taken by Shetland fishermen to reduce the catches of the youngest sand eels in Shetland waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Regular samples are provided voluntarily to scientists of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. The number of landings sampled each month since the voluntary restrictions were introduced are as follows:

	1987	1988

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the level of recruitment of sand eels to (a) the Shetland population, (b) the northern North sea, north of 56°30'N, and (c) the southern North sea in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Source:
(1) International Council for the Exploration of the Seas.
(2) Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland (new assessments); figures for 1987 and 1988 are provisional.

The very low figure for Shetland for 1987 reflects the incidence of the poorest year class since the fishery began in 1974. The 1988 year class is also thought to be below the average over the period 1974-86. Scientific assessment indicates that recruitment is affected primarily by natural factors affecting the first six months of sand eel life, and that the decline in stocks has not been caused primarily by the commercial fishery.

Rating Reform

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those medical sources from which he sought advice over the desirability of including Alzheimer's disease in the list of exempted conditions for poll tax purposes; what is the medical definiton of the "fluctuating nature" to which he referred in the Official Report, 1 February, column 281; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend receives medical advice from the chief medical officer, Scottish Home and Health Department, and his staff. People with degenerative mental disorders such as Alzheimer's disease have a gradual onset of their condition leading to a progressive decline in all aspects of mental functioning. Fluctuations in the level of mental functioning may occur during the natural progression of the degenerative condition and may also occur if the person develops an additional illness.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest estimates of the cost of collecting the community charge for each one of the regions in Scotland; and what is the present cost of collecting the rates.

Mr. Lang: All regional councils in Scotland will have included an estimate of the cost of collecting the community charge in the budgets which they have now set for 1989-90. Full details of their budgets have not yet been submitted to the Scottish Office.

The latest estimate of the cost to each regional council of collecting the rates are contained in their budgets for 1988-89 and are set out in the table.

[1] Excludes lands valuation, for which Grampian did not make a separate estimate.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the latest available breakdown of the hectarage planted, approved for planting and awaiting approval for planting under the woodland grant scheme for each of the Forestry Commission's conservancies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information—covering the period from 15 June 1988, when the woodland grant scheme was first opened to applications, to 31 December 1988—is as follows:

Hectares

Conservancy	Planting[1] for which grants have been paid[2]	Area approved for planting[1]	Area awaiting approval for planting[1]
North England	—	550	1,570
East England	—	829	4,373
West England	—	577	1,300
Wales	—	505	905
North Scotland	53	2,828	9,744
Mid Scotland	11	1,489	2,635
South Scotland	1	1,561	3,265
Total	65	8,339	23,792

[1] Including replanting.
[2] These figures do not include planting that had taken place but on which grants had not been paid by 31 December 1988, since this information is not readily available.

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) farmers and (b) farm workers were employed in each county in Scotland in June 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As a result of local government reform, counties ceased to be used for agricultural statistics purposes after 1975. My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member last December to provide him with information about the numbers of farmers and farm workers employed in each region in Scotland in June 1988.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the responses received on the consultation document, "The Scottish New Towns—Maintaining the Momentum."

Mr. Lang: No. I made clear at the meeting with representatives of SLANT (Scottish Local Authorities with New Towns) and those members representing Scottish new towns, held on 1 February 1989, that copies of the responses received would be available in each of the new towns towards the end of February.

Neilston Primary School

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the case for an extension to Neilston primary school; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have considered carefully the representations made by my hon. Friend and the parents and community representatives following the meeting which he kindly arranged about the need for an extension to Neilston primary school. Strathclyde regional council has recently requested that provision be made for a four-classroom extension in its capital allocation for 1989-90, and I expect this request to be considered sympathetically. Authorities should be informed shortly of their capital allocations for next year.

Road Accidents

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many accidents involving death or injury have occurred per vehicle mile on the A74 for each year since 1980;

(2) how many accidents involving death and injury have occurred per vehicle mile on the A96 for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 January 1989]: The accident rate is expressed as the number of injury (including fatal) accidents per million vehicle kilometers. The figures for the A74 trunk (south) and the A96 trunk in each year since 1982 are as follows:

	A74 trunk (south)	A96 trunk
1982	0·156	0·517
1983	0·135	0·523
1984	0·145	0·484
1985	0·125	0·442
1986	0·144	0·432
1987	0·135	0·453

In comparing these figures it should be remembered that the A74 is a dual carriageway and the A96 is an almost entirely single carriageway road. The annual traffic levels are estimates based on limited samples and are subject to a fairly wide margin of error. The A74 trunk (south) is south of the M74. Accident rates are not available for 1980 and 1981 or for other parts of the A74 and A96.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured on the A74 for each year since 1980;

(2) how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured on the A96 for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 January]: The information requested, along with additional information to clarify this answer and answers to related questions, is as follows.

	A74 trunk (north)	A74 trunk (south)	A74 total	A96 trunk	A96 total
(a) Number of fatal casualties
1980	—	4	8	19	21
1981	—	12	17	14	15
1982	—	11	15	15	16
1983	—	11	13	11	12
1984	1	7	14	5	6
1985	1	10	18	12	14
1986	—	18	23	15	15
1987	—	17	19	8	9
(b) Number of serious and slight casualties
1980	26	184	312	334	388
1981	21	126	261	325	379
1982	23	137	298	349	411
1983	30	130	271	339	380
1984	21	148	281	330	389
1985	30	146	321	295	332
1986	38	188	305	320	372
1987	53	164	271	289	326

The A74 trunk (north), length 5·3 km, is north of the M74; and the A74 trunk (south), length 93 km, is south of the M74. The A74 and A96 totals include non-trunk sections of road. In comparing the figures for the A74 and A96, it should be remembered that the A74 is a dual carriageway and the A96 is a 166 km, almost entirely single carriageway, road.

House Building

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were built to be rented in the public sector in each year since 1979 in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 January 1989]: The information set out in the table is for houses completed by local authorities, new towns, Scottish Special Housing Association and Government Departments for the years in question. These figures could contain some houses built for sale.

Public Sector (Excluding Housing Associations)
New houses completed

Year	Inverclyde	Strathclyde	Scotland

NHS Hospitals (Glasgow)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the National Health Service Greater Glasgow hospitals and the latest figures for the waiting lists in each of them.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The latest waiting list figures for all National Health Service hospitals in Greater Glasgow are set out in the table. The mean waiting time for in-patients in 1987 was 73·7 days and for day cases was 47·8 days.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission the Scottish universities research and reactor centre to undertake aerial surveys, similar to that just undertaken in West Cumbria, for all areas in Scotland near to nuclear establishments or where there has been radioactive fall out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Radioactivity in the environment near nuclear establishments is intensively monitored by the site operators as a condition of their authorisations to discharge radioactivity. The Scottish Development Department checks each operator's results and undertakes additional independent monitoring to confirm them. Aerial surveys would not contribute materially to the normal monitoring process. However, the Scottish Office is interested in the possible use in emergencies of the aerial surveillance system developed and deployed by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre and will be discussing this with the centre.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest available information on levels of radioactivity in (a) fish in lochs (b) hares and rabbits and (c) other animals in south-west Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Information on the level of radioactivity in fish and animals in Scotland resulting from the Chernobyl accident is published on a regular basis by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. For the south-west of Scotland the latest measured levels for fish range from 15 bq/kg to 737 bq/kg, for hare from 165 bq/kg to 4,530 bq/kg and for rabbits from 20 bq/kg to 155 bq/kg. Monitoring of hare and rabbit was discontinued in 1987 as the reading in these animals, which form a relatively small part of most people's diet, gave no cause for concern. Levels in deer range from 2 bq/kg to 2,740 bq/kg.

Chemical Hazardous Waste

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new plans he has to deal with the future disposal of chemical hazardous waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: We have recently consulted widely on proposals to strengthen controls on waste disposal in Scotland, and will announce our conclusions shortly. We expect to issue two further consultation papers on aspects of waste disposal within the next few weeks. We are also reviewing the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 and the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Regulations 1977.

A96

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fatal road accidents have occurred on the A96 trunk road between Aberdeen and Inverness in each of the past five years and in 1989 to date, indicating the number of fatalities in each accident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The information requested for the A96 trunk road is as follows:

	Total fatal accidents	Number of fatal accidents by number of fatal casualties in each accident				Total fatal casualties
		1	2	3	4
1983	10	9	1	—	—	11
1984	4	3	1	—	—	5
1985	12	12	—	—	—	12
1986	12	11	—	—	1	15
1987	8	8	—	—	—	8
[1]1988	10	10	—	—	—	10

[1] To August.

Statistics on accidents are available centrally only to August 1988.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his survey on accident blackspots on the A96; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The Scottish Development Department will provide both Highland and Grampian regional councils with a detailed brief next month in order that they may carry forward studies of the A96. This work will include examination of the route as a whole to determine where accident remedial schemes should be introduced. It is not possible to say precisely when the studies will be completed but they may take a year or so. The hon. Member will, however, wish to know that road safety measures will shortly be completed between Oyne Fork and Pitcaple which was previously identified as the worst accident spot on the route.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what budget allocation he has set aside for improvements to the A96 in each of the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1989]: Last December, I met members and officials of Highland and Grampian regional councils to discuss their request for improvements to the A96 trunk road. As a result of that meeting studies of the A96 are being extended to identify, along the entire route, possible accident remedial schemes and schemes to improve overtaking opportunities. When this work, to be carried out by both regional councils as the Secretary of State's agents for the trunk road, is complete I will be able to formulate an overall strategy and consider expenditure provision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report his letter of 11 August 1988 informing the Agriculture and Food Research Council of his decision to terminate the research work being undertaken into salmonella at Bristol.

Mr. Ryder: I did not write to the Agriculture and Food Research Council Institute of Food Research on 11 August 1988, but a member of my staff did and the hon. Member may be aware of the contents of that letter.

The letter recorded agreement by my Department and the institute to phase out support for four research projects.

The first is a project on the manipulation of the microbial flora of the gut of young chickens in order to control salmonella in broiler hens. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary explained the reasons for terminating the funding of this project in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 15 December, Official Report, column 653. The second project relates to bacteria on meat and food-borne illnesses. This was a basic research project, the short-term objectives of which were completed. The longer term objectives have been incorporated into a revised programme of microbiological research in the Institute of Food Research.

The third project related to the development of methods for determining authenticity, adulteration and origin of food and beverages. This was terminated because of the slow progress and the ability of other contractors to carry forward the work. The final project referred to in the letter related to the processing of potato tubers and was terminated in line with the institute's commitment to reduce efforts in commodity-led research and in the light of the fact that the Ministry was pursuing related research at other centres.

The decisions reached on these four projects need to be viewed in the context of the decision to increase the funding of the institute's programme on food safety from £740,000 this year to £849,000 in the next financial year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the protein processing plants that were found to be contaminated with salmonella in 1987 and 1988 were allowed to continue selling feedstuffs within the time limits imposed upon them for producing a salmonella-free product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Until recently, statutory provisions did not exist to prevent the supply of processed animal protein from premises where salmonella had been detected by testing samples of the product. An amendment order to the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1981 came into operation on 2 February and provides Ministry inspectors with such powers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of incidents of salmonella duldin in cattle in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of incidents of salmonella duldin in cattle in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

	Number
1979	566
1980	498
1981	435
1982	556
1983	586
1984	424
1985	511
1986	463
1987	544
1988	[1]502

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his decision to withdraw research funds from the work at the Institute of Food Research on competitive exclusion as a method of controlling salmonella in poultry.

Mr. MacGregor: Work on competitive exclusion at Bristol, which has been in progress for more than a decade, has reached the point where successful trials have been carried out in commercial production units. Following appraisal by representatives of MAFF and AFRC, it was recognised that the principle of competitive exclusion has been established as a method of control relevant to salmonella in poultry. It was concluded that the technique was ready for adoption by industry under appropriate circumstances and with suitable safeguards to prevent the introduction or spread of disease. Major poultry firms are aware of this work at Bristol. It is for industry to decide whether to adopt the technique for commercial application.

I have now received the report of a joint MAFF, DoH and British Egg Industry Council working group report on salmonella and eggs dealing with research into this area and am considering its recommendations urgently. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

We are already funding an extensive programme of research relevant to control of salmonella in poultry as follows:

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence there is as to whether deer carry Aujeszky's disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Aujeszky's disease affects primarily pigs and rodents but occurs incidentally in most other species. Man, however, is not considered to be susceptible to infection. In deer the disease, if it occurs, results in death soon after infection with no significant transmission to other animals. Aujeszky's disease has been recorded in deer in other countries but available evidence suggests that its occurrence is rare in this species.

Aluminium

Mr. Holland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the comparative figures for aluminium levels in the various brands of cow and soya baby milk formulae; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I repeat the undertaking given to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) as to publication of the results of the Ministry's survey (Official Report, columns 608-9). It is not my policy, however, to disclose information by brand name.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to ensure the withdrawal of brands of cow and soya baby milk formulae with high levels of aluminium in the light of recent research by the Medical Research Council and Dr. Mary McGraw of Southmead hospital.

Mr. Ryder: I am aware of the research mentioned. In addition, my own Department has recently completed a survey of infant formulae.

I shall take any necessary action when the results have been assessed by my Department with the Department of Health.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the outside experts consulted by his Department on the effect on babies of food containing high levels of aluminium;

(2) on what date his Department first received information that some popular brands of baby milk contain high levels of aluminium;

(3) what urgent steps his Department has taken in order to stop baby milk with high levels of aluminium being sold in shops.

Mr. Ryder: There have been a number of reports about aluminium in baby milk, dating back to 1985. As a result of these, my Department carried out a study on the levels of aluminium in infant formulae which has now been completed. The results of this survey have been referred to the Department of Health's independent medical and scientific advisory committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment and I will take their advice into account in deciding whether and what action is needed.

Fisheries Byelaw Applications

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the fisheries byelaw applications that are currently awaiting his Department's approval, indicating in each case when the application for approval was first submitted to him.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

Byelaw-making authority	Number of byelaws awaiting confirmation	Date submitted for confirmation
North Western and North Wales Sea Fisheries Committee	7	11 November 1988
Devon SFC	1	8 December 1988
Kent and Essex SFC	1	10 January 1989
Southern SFC	2	20 January 1989

There are no byelaws awaiting confirmation which have been submitted to us by water authorities pursuant to the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975.

Letter

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 24 October 1988 to his Department on matters raised by constituency branches of the National Farmers' Union; and why there has been a delay.

Mr. Ryder: My hon. Friend raised a number of important points which required careful consideration by officials in different parts of my Department. I regret that this, together with pressures of other work, delayed the reply to my hon. Friend which has now been sent.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice or recommendations he has received from his Veterinary Products committee on the safety implications for (a) animals and (b) humans of bovine somatotropin which have emerged as a result of the operation of the experimental farm trials by Monsanto into the use of bovine somatotropin in cows.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am unable to comment on the progress of individual applications for product licences but, as I explained to the hon. Member in the answer that I gave him on 31 January, field trials are authorised only after the veterinary products committee is satisfied as to the safety of both humans and animals.

Minced Meat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether his Food Standards Committee is investigating the content and labelling of minced meat; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what powers he has to control the content and labelling of minced meat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The food standards committee (the predecessor of the Food Advisory Committee) recommended the introduction of statutory controls on the composition and labelling of minced meat. Last year my colleagues decided not to introduce specific controls on the ground that there were already adequate controls afforded by the Food Act 1984 and the Food Labelling Regulations 1984.

Meat (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers his veterinary staff have to monitor radioactivity levels in meat in slaughterhouses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Powers to monitor levels of radioactivity in meat in slaughterhouses derive from section 4 of part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Eurostat

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has access to Eurostat information.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has access to the publications of Eurostat, a range of its on-line electronic information services and working documents relating to the activities of certain committees.

Beef Production

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of (a) the beef production of the European Community and (b) intervention buying of beef comes from Great Britain, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total production of beef and veal in 1988 in the European Community is estimated by the European Commission as 7,660,000 tonnes. The provisional figures for United Kingdom production in 1988 is 965,000 tonnes (12·6 per cent.). In 1988 391,000 tonnes of beef were bought into intervention in the Community, of which 39,000 tonnes (9·9 per cent.) were purchased in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Establishments

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of times his Ministry has reassessed habit surveys of members of the public around each nuclear establishment in each of the last 10 years, with the aim of identifying the most exposed members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The habit surveys around nuclear establishments carried out by my Ministry in each of the past 10 years were as follows:

1979—Nine Surveys
Berkeley/Oldbury, Hunterston, Sellafield (Four surveys), Springfields, Winfrith, Whitehaven
1980—One Survey
Bradwell
1981—Four Surveys
Sellafield, Trawsfynydd, Sizewell, Wylfa
1982—Four Surveys
Chapelcross, Sellafield (Three surveys), Springfields
1983—Three Surveys
Heysham, Sellafield, Springfields
1984—Four Surveys
Hartlepool, Sellafield, Springfields, Torness
1985—Four Surveys
Dounreay, Sellafield, Springfields, Winfrith

1986—Seven Surveys
Cardiff, Dounreay, Dungeness, Hinkley Point, Sellafield (Two surveys), Springfields
1987—Six Surveys
Trawsfynydd, Hunterston, Sellafield (Four surveys)
1988—10 Surveys
Wylfa, Rosyth, Sellafield (Five surveys), Springfields, Loch Dee, Winfrith

Environmental exposure pathways and their significance are liable to change and the habit survey programme is therefore kept under continual review. Surveys are repeated at intervals, the frequency depending on the level of radiation exposure involved and possible changes in habits.

Radioactivity

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans there are to deal with contamination in excess of generalised derived limits as set by the National Radiological Protection Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My Ministry has well established plans to deal with the occurrence of radioactive contamination in excess of the generalised derived limits recommended by the National Radiological Protection Board. If restrictions on the harvesting, movement and sale of contaminated livestock and foodstuffs are necessary, they would be imposed using the powers contained in part 1 of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the results of his aerial survey of radioactivity in Cumbria.

Mr. Ryder: We expect to receive copies of the final report of this survey from the Scottish universities research and reactor centre in the near future. Publication will then follow immediately.

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) farmers and (b) farmworkers were employed in each county in England in June 1988.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that information for June 1988 is not available. I will send these statistics to the hon. Member as soon as they come to hand.

North Venture Ltd.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department to complete the preliminary examination of the licence application by North Venture Ltd. for the deep sea disposal of certain categories of waste.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The application is being considered urgently and I wish to make a decision as soon as possible.

Poultry Meat Inspection

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of man years of his staff involved in poultry meat inspection in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Meat inspection is the responsibility of local authorities. Officers from my Department visit all slaughter premises to advise on hygiene and welfare standards. The manpower involved for poultry slaughter premises, in the years for which figures are available, was of the order of:

	Man years
1983-84	8·5
1984-85	8·5
1985-86	9·1

Slaughterhouses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the criteria that slaughterhouses have to meet for approval for exporting meat to other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: For the requirements applying to red meat slaughterhouses I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Wednesday 1 February (Official Report, columns 240-41) to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins).

All licensed poultry slaughterhouses must comply with the provisions of the Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1976, as amended. The regulations implement EC directive 71/118, as amended, on health problems affecting trade in fresh poultry meat. Plants which engage in intra-Community trade may not take advantage of certain derogations permitted by the regulations and the directive for plants producing for the domestic market only.

Bottled Water

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing the appropriate legislation to require purveyors of bottled waters to state on the label the mineral, bacterial and chemical contents of the water.

Mr. Ryder: Legislation on the exploitation and marketing of natural mineral waters is harmonised throughout the European Community and our implementing regulations (the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985) require certain chemcial and microbiological criteria to be met. Labels on natural mineral waters are required to bear a statement of the analytical composition giving its characteristic constituents or bear the words "composition in accordance with the results of the officially recognised analysis of ... (date of analysis)". I am currently considering the need for specific statutory controls on other bottled waters.

Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now make a statement about the new farm and conservation grant scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: With the agreement of the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Northern Ireland and for Scotland, I announced on 28 November my intention to introduce a new capital grant scheme giving greater priority to the control of pollution and support for conservation. After consultations with the EC Commission orders were laid before Parliament on 2 February which if approved will introduce the farm and conservation grant scheme on 20 February.

In my earlier statement I said that I had agreed with my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury a provision of up to £50 million over the next three years on grants for pollution control. This means that we are now able to set a grant rate of 50 per cent. for this type of investment. In the lowlands where, because of the predominance of dairy farms, the potential for pollution is particularly acute, this will be the highest rate of grant ever offered for effluent facilities. We understand that it is also the highest rate in Europe. This substantial increase in the lowland grant rate underlines the Government's commitment to dealing with on-farm pollution and will strengthen the case for heavy penalties against those who continue to pollute.

The farm and conservation grant scheme also includes new conservation grants for heather, native woodlands and traditional barns. Farmers will receive grants of 50 per cent. in the LFA and 40 per cent. elsewhere for fencing stock out of heather moors and woodlands for a period in order to promote regeneration. In time the result will be better grazing and shelter as well as the restoration of important environmental features. Grants for the repair and reinstatement of agricultural buildings made of materials traditional in the locality, will be available at 35 per cent. provided that the farmer undertakes to keep the buildings in agricultural use.

At the same time, we are increasing the grant rates for heather burning and bracken control from 15 to 40 per cent. in the lowlands and from 30 to 50 per cent. in the LFA. These new rates will also apply to other familiar conservation grants on hedges, stone walls, shelter belts, stiles and footbridges. All told, these changes give a greater priority to conservation than ever before.

Support for agricultural improvements under the new scheme will be confined to those investments which keep existing farmland in good condition without increasing surplus production. Grants will not be available for new buildings and roads. Drainage will be aided only where it is necessary to renew existing facilities on previously drained land. Grants for this and for fencing, reseeding and regeneration, lime and fertiliser, energy-saving facilities and flood protection will be provided at 25 per cent. in the LFA and 15 per cent. elsewhere.

In retaining these grants, we have been particularly conscious of their importance to farmers in hill and upland areas. The Government's commitment to agriculture in these areas is reflected both in the scope of the scheme and in the fact that grant rates in the LFA will continue to be higher than elsewhere for all items except waste handling and traditional buildings.

In the horticulture sector we intend to reintroduce grants for orchard replanting at up to 35 per cent. Rates of 40 and 35 per cent. will be available for the replacement of heated glasshouses and installation of heating systems from 1 December 1989 when the current rates under the agriculture improvement scheme come to an end. The closing dates for horticultural claims will be 31 March 1994 for orchard replanting and 31 December 1993 for the two other grants.

As under the agriculture improvement scheme grants for agricultural improvements will be available only under an improvement plan. Grants for other types of investment will also be available without a plan but subject to prior notification in the case of waste facilities and traditional buildings.

Public expenditure provision for the new scheme is reflected in chapter 4 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 604). The cost is forecast to reach around £55 million a year.

Leaflets and forms for the new scheme will be available from local Ministry offices on 20 February.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the discussions with the Department of Health on the future research programme into child sexual abuse to be concluded; and if he will make an announcement.

Mr. John Patten: Discussions are in progress with the Department of Health on that part of the Home Office research and planning unit's programme of research for the financial year 1989-90, which concerns child sexual abuse. The details of the research projects on this topic which the Home Office will undertake will be published in the summer in the Home Office research and planning unit's programme of research. Copies of this publication will be placed in the Library.

Football

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often police have used the power given under the Public Order Act 1986 to impose a limit on the number of people attending a football match.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware that the Public Order Act has been used for this purpose.

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exclusion orders have been imposed on football supporters under the Public Order Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 August 1987, 1,417 orders have been recorded by the Football Association.

Haringey Police (Complaints)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the level of complaints against the Haringey police from the Asian community; what steps are being taken to investigate these and improve police-community relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the statistics of complaints are extracted from individual files when action on the complaint is complete. He further tells me that in 1987 action was completed on three complaints against the Haringey police involving Asian complainants. Action on six such complaints was completed in 1988.

All complaints against officers of the Metropolitan police are investigated in accordance with the procedures laid down in part IX of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the associated regulations.

The commissioner places the highest importance on good relations between his force and all sections of the community. His force is committed to a range of policies designed to this end.

Rapes (Suffolk)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number of rapes reported to the police in the administrative county of Suffolk during each of the years 1979 to 1988 and the number of convictions obtained after prosecutions.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences of rape recorded by the police in each police force area is published annually in table S3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 3", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The number of offences of rape recorded by the Suffolk constabulary in January to September 1988 was 37. Information held centrally, which may be incomplete, shows five persons convicted of rape in 1979, three in 1983 and three in 1987; provision of corresponding figures for other years would involve disproportionate cost.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Hurd: My Department is represented at meetings arranged under the auspices of the following organisations:

Anglo-French Policing and Frontier Controls Working Group
Council of Europe
Commonwealth
Comité Technique Internationale de Prévention et d'Extinction du Feu
Conference Permanente Européenne de la Probation
European Committee on Standards
European Community
European Group on DNA Integration
European Civil Aviation Conference
IATA Working Group on Inadmissible Passengers
Intergovernmental Commission on Channel Tunnel
International Civil Aviation Organisation Facilitation Committee
International Maritime Organisation Facilitation Committee
International Standards Organisation
International Penal and Penitentiary Foundation
International Prison Chaplains' Association
Internationale de Métrologie Légale
Interpol
NATO
United Nations
Western European Union

In the financial year 1987-88 my Department's subscription to Interpol was £440,000, to the Major Donors' group of the United Nations fund for drug abuse control £162,000 and to the Council of Europe's co-operation group to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking in drugs (the Pompidou group) £34,000. The cost of other commitments could be estimated only at disproportionate cost.

Data Protection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to extend the Data Protection Act to cover paper and card indexes held by the Economic League and similar bodies.

Mr. Renton: No.

Voting Rights

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the disqualification of the residents of Caldey Island, Pembrokeshire, from parliamentary and European elections; and what action he proposes to ensure that the residents are refranchised in time to vote in the European elections in June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Caldey Island is not within the district of south Pembrokeshire. Since 1983 parliamentary constituencies, and hence European parliamentary constituencies, in Wales have been defined by districts and district wards. The jurisdiction of electoral registration officers is also determined by district. It has recently come to light that this removes the right of the residents of the island to be included on the electoral register We are discussing with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, who is responsible for local government areas in Wales, how best to restore the franchise to the residents of Caldey Island.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Kent as to what stage has been reached in police investigations in relation to the Herald of Free Enterprise incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Kent that the police investigation is nearly complete and that a final report will then be submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to lay a code of practice under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 before Parliament.

Mr Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has today laid before the House, under section 21 of the Act, a code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures which will be published tomorrow.

This code is based upon guidelines published in 1987 jointly by the Royal Society and the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare. It is a tribute to the excellent and thorough work done by these bodies that little amendment has been needed to convert their guidelines into a code of practice which should command widespread support.

Political Bodies (Funding)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide that bodies acting solely as channels for contributions to political bodies shall be disbarred from charitable status.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 6 February 1989]: No organisation that acted solely as a channel for contributions to political bodies could lawfully be a charity.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) of 25 January, Official Report, column 575, access to European Investment Bank loans for Cyprus will be permissible for applications deriving directly fron the area known as the Turkish republic of north Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: EIB loans require Government guarantees. Direct access to European Investment bank loans from the Turkish area of Cyprus would therefore not be possible.

John McCarthy

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments have taken place in efforts to secure the release of John McCarthy.

Mr. Waldegrave: Despite recent rumours of the imminent release of one or more British hostages, and the efforts made, particularly by Her Majesty's ambassador in Beirut, to follow up these reports, I regret that there have been no substantive developments. We continue to follow up all available information.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the final treaty on chemical weapons disarmament and verification, currently being negotiated in Geneva, will require that all old burial and destruction sites of chemical warfare agents will need to be indentified for the purposes of verification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The question of old chemical weapon burial and destruction sites has been raised in the Geneva negotiations and their coverage under a comprehensive chemical weapons convention is still under discussion. There is general agreement in the negotiations that upon entry into force of such a convention, states would be required to declare their existing chemical weapon stockpiles, accept on-site inspection of such stockpiles and destroy them within 10 years. Production of chemical weapons would cease immediately and production facilities would be dismantled over the 10-year period. Chemical weapon destruction facilities would be declared and progress in the destruction of stocks monitored.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify each donation which his Department has made in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Eggar: We can find no trace in our records of any donation made by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (diplomatic wing) since 1979 in response to public appeals.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the sources of information on which he bases his assessment that the Soviet Union has continued without any break in its nuclear weapons modernisation programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not our policy to comment on sources of information obtained on subjects of this nature.

"Death on the Rock"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the inaccuracies identified by his Department in the Thames Television programme "Death on the Rock."

Mr. Waldegrave: Our concerns over the broadcast of the programme "Death on the Rock", and the serious and damaging inaccuracies it contains, are set out in a Government press statement of 26 January, and the attached correspondence from officials to Lord Windlesham, which my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces has laid in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Power (China)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on new plans under study by the People's Republic of China to build more nuclear power plants in Guandong, near Hong Kong, in addition to the Daya Bay Plant under construction.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware of no such plans.

COMECON (Travel)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1979 permission for emigration to, or travel within, the Soviet Union or other COMECON eastern bloc countries has been denied to applicants formerly employed at the Government communication headquarters at Cheltenham.

Mr. Eggar: We have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 26 January at column 704.

Permanent Representative (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of people employed in the offices of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Communities; and what is the total annual cost, including salaries, rent, rates, equipment, depreciation, allowances, training, and expenses, for 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: The total number of people employed in the offices of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Communities is 84, including locally engaged staff.

The total cost for the financial year 1987-88 was £5·5 million. This is the latest figure available.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost to public funds of the Falkland Islands Government for the latest year for which figures are available, per capita for the permanent population of the islands.

Mr. Eggar: For the financial year 1987-88, our public expenditure in the Falkland Islands was as follows:

Development aid:	£6,780,000
Garrison costs:	£118,000,000
Total:	£124,780,000

For the financial year ending 30 June 1988, public expenditure by the Falkland Islands Government was £15,541,731.

Human Rights (Turkey)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities regarding continuing reports of systematic and widespread use of torture in places of detention;

(2) if he will make representations to the Turkish Government urging them (a) to repeal those laws which criminalise the non-violent expression of opinion, (b) to abolish the use of military courts when trying civilians, (c) to conform to international standards of justice in the proceedings of civil courts and (d) to abolish the use of the death penalty; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend raised the continuing allegations of breaches of human rights when the Turkish ambassador paid an introductory call on him on 1 February. I also did so during his call on me on 2 February. He assured us that his Government were aware that there were areas where further improvement was necessary and were acting to eliminate shortcomings. We welcome that assurance.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Turkish authorities regarding the case of Ibraham Acan.

Mrs. Chalker: We are aware of the circumstances of Mr. Acan's case. We urge the Turkish Government to ensure that they respect and abide by the terms and conditions of the human rights agreements to which they are signatories.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Turkish authorities on breaches of the European convention for the prevention of torture and request them to make known the steps being taken to end the use of practices condemned therein.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have both recently made the Turkish ambassador aware of our concern about allegations of breaches of human rights in Turkey. Through him we have reminded the Turkish Government of the need to abide by the international conventions to which they are signatories.

Rates Arrears

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have been asked to pay rates arrears for diplomatic properties in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are seeking payment of rates arrears for diplomatic properties in London from the following states:

Burkina	Libya
Costa Rica	Morocco
France	Nigeria
Grenada	Paraguay
Iran	Somalia
Iraq	Sudan
Laos	Uganda

We regularly approach missions which are in arrears to urge them to make payment.

Mr. Ian Richter

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to secure the release of Mr. Ian Richter from imprisonment in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The continuing imprisonment of Mr. Richter remains a source of grave concern to the Government. The sentence passed on him is severe, and we have made numerous appeals for clemency to the Iraqi authorities. We note that Mr. Richter is now the only remaining long-term western prisoner in Iraq. His early release would remove a major obstacle to the improvement of Anglo-Iraqi relations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he is satisfied that the Crown Prosecution service is able to undertake prosecutions involving extensive technical detail, such as serious fraud cases and health and safety at work prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution service is able to undertake prosecutions involving extensive technical detail. In general the most serious fraud cases are conducted by the serious fraud office and health and safety at work prosecutions are conducted by inspectors appointed under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974.

THE ARTS

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Luce: Since 1983 when the Office of Arts and Libraries was established, grants have been made to the bodies it sponsors and to many other institutions and projects. Examples of donations to specific appeals include £500,000 to the Royal Academy trust appeal fund launched in 1982, £25,000 to the Dulwich picture gallery appeal in 1985, and £150,000 in response to an appeal by the Carnegie (United Kingdom) trust for the improvement of arts venues for the benefit of disabled people in 1988.

Arts Administration Inquiry

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he will publish a table of (a) the places which and (b) the dates when Mr. Richard Wilding will be visiting to take evidence for his inquiry into the structure of arts administration.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Full details of Mr. Wilding's visits have not yet been finalised, but he will be visiting all the English regional arts associations during the course of the review; the dates of those visits are as follows:

Date	Place
2-3 February	South West Arts
16 February	Merseyside Arts
20 February	Yorkshire Arts
21-22 February	Northern Arts
27 February	Southern Arts
1-2 March	East Midland Arts
2-3 March	Lincolnshire and Humberside Arts
7-8 March	North West Arts
9-10 March	West Midland Arts
14 March	Merseyside Arts (second visit)
20 March	South East Arts
21 March	Eastern Arts

PRIME MINISTER

Bradford, South

Q44. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when next she expects to pay an official visit to Bradford, South.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Stretton on Dansmoore

Q104. Mr. James Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Stretton on Dansmoore, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Government Departments (Value for Money)

Q156. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister what progress is being made in achieving greater value for money within Government Departments; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government attach very high priority to getting better value for money from public expenditure and good progress is being made. Efficiency scrutinies have saved over £1·4 billion on a cumulative basis; and in the current year Departments aim to achieve value-for-money improvements in purchasing and supply totalling some £340 million, while market testing and contracting out is now saving some £40 million a year. The recent Public Expenditure White Paper provides many more examples of value-for-money improvements. Beyond this, we are creating agencies to improve efficiency in Executive activities on which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office announced progress on 1 February, at column 237-239. Finally, we are continuing to improve output and performance measurement so that all Departments and managers can be set targets and be judged on the results that they achieve.

Libya

Q159. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Libya.

The Prime Minister: No.

Freedom of Information Rally

Q164. Mr Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to accept any invitation issued to address the freedom of information and official secrets rally at the Albert hall, Nottingham on 8 February.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Key: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others including the Spanish Foreign Minister. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with the Soviet Deputy Prime Minister. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

NATIONAL FINANCE

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Brooke: Subscriptions were made during 1987-88 to the following international organisations at a total cost of £18,700:

Plan Econ
Institute of International Finance
Data Resources Incorporated
Wharton
International Council for Automatic Data Processing in Government Administration

London Docklands

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the total allowance in cash terms which the developers of the Canary wharf scheme in London's docklands will be eligible to claim under the scheme for 100 per cent. allowances on the capital amount, assuming the scheme is built to completion as set out in the master building agreement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bow and Popular (Ms. Gordon) on 20 January at column 348.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the report of the court of auditors in relation to the use of accountancy and other devices by the European Economic Community to deal with their overspending in relation to budgetary controls agreed by the European Council; and what steps he will take to prevent such devices being used in the future in the light of the further increase in Community resources agreed in February 1988.

Mr. Brooke: I share the concern of the court of auditors about the use of accountancy devices which camouflage the underlying trend of Community expenditure. The new budget discipline arrangements put in place following the February 1988 Brussels European Council, and especially the legally binding controls on agricultural expenditure, address the fundamental problems which prompted the use of such devices in the past.

Incomes, Profits and Rents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of (a) personal incomes, (b) company profits, (c) dividends and interest payments and (d) rents for each year since 1975; and what has been the percentage increase in each during each of these years.

Mr. Major [holding answer 2 February 1989]: This information appears in the 1988 edition of the Central Statistical Office publication "United Kingdom National Accounts" which may be found in the House of Commons Library. The information may also be obtained from the CSO databank which is a collection of macroeconomic time series in computer readable form to which the House of Commons Library has direct access. This databank includes the latest versions of all series on it.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current in-patient waiting lists for (a) West Glamorgan and (b) Neath and Port Talbot for (i) urgent and (ii) non-urgent cases.

Mr. Grist: Waiting list information is collected on the basis of the number of people waiting for admission to a particular hospital. Information on waiting lists as at 31 March 1988, the latest available, is given in the following table:

	In-patient Waiting List
	Urgent	Non-Urgent
West Glamorgan	172	5,151
Neath and Port Talbot Hospitals	43	1,344

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current waiting lists for first time out-patient appointments, specialty by specialty, in (a) West Glamorgan, and (b) Neath and Port Talbot; and what are the average waiting periods for each specialty.

Mr. Grist: Waiting list information is collected on the basis of the number of people waiting for a first time appointment at a particular hospital or clinic. Information on waiting lists as at 31 March 1988 is given in the following table.

Information on the average waiting period for appointments is not available centrally. However the notional waiting time to clear out-patient waiting lists is presented in the following table for comparison:

	West Glamorgan		Neath and Port Talbot Hospitals
	Waiting list	Notional waiting time[1] (days)	Waiting list	Notional waiting time[1] (days)
General Medicine	266	20	100	27

Haematology	16	4	—	—

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report (a) the total extent, in hectares, of each environmentally sensitive area, (b) the extent of agricultural land within each environmentally sensitive area, (c) the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements in each environmentally sensitive area, (d) the number of agreements concluded with farmers in each environmentally sensitive area and, (e) the total area of land covered by agreements in each environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

	Cambrian mountains (designated 1 March 1987)	Cambrian mountains extension (designated 1 January 1988)	Lleyn peninsula (designated 1 January 1988)
(a)	72,800 hectares	80,200 hectares	39,750 hectares
(b)[1]	53,900 hectares	58,050 hectares	39,280 hectares
(c)[2]	200	350	960
(d)[3]	108	51	97
(e)[3]	13,179·40 hectares	1,777·20 hectares	4,439·31 hectares

Notes:

[1] Figures cover semi-natural rough grazings and improved agricultural land but exclude woodlands.

[2] Estimated.

[3] As at 3 February 1989.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what opportunities he foresees for (a) Wales and (b) west Wales as a result of the construction of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The Government have revitalised the economy of Wales: industry is now more diverse and competitive and overall economic performance and activity have improved. Wales is thus well placed to take full advantage of the trading opportunities which the tunnel will afford in terms of better access to Europe.

West Wales will share in these benefits and, in particular, the improved facilities at Milford Haven and Pembroke dock put the area in a strong position to take advantage of all the opportunities for increased levels of trade with Europe.

Welsh industry is already involved with the construction phase of the tunnel. To date several Welsh firms have been successful in attracting work worth over £7 million. I am sure that Welsh concerns will continue to play a valuable role during construction.

ENVIRONMENT

Drinking Water (Quality)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those water supplies in England which currently fail to meet the standards set out in the European Economic Community directives on the quality of drinking water and whether or not these are subject to derogations; how and when it is proposed for each of these water supplies to meet the standards laid down; and what the latest estimated cost of complying with the standards is in each case.

Mr. Moynihan: Drinking water supplies to the following areas in England regularly exceed one or more of the standards set in the EC drinking water directive. Under the terms of the directive the Department has granted derogations (exemptions) for non-toxic parameters provided that the situation is due to the nature and structure of the ground and there is no public health risk. We have also applied to the Commission under article 20 for a longer period in which to meet the directive in certain cases and have submitted programmes of improvement. Implementation of the remedial programmes would mean that most supplies should comply with the directive by 1990. Most of the derogated supplies should comply by 1995.

In addition, a number of other supplies occasionally fail to meet one or more of the standards set in the directive. We have asked water authorities to identify these supplies and where we cannot grant derogations under article 9 of the EC directive, programmes of improvement are being prepared.

Water undertakers are preparing estimates of the cost of improving drinking water quality. It would be difficult to distinguish precisely that part required to meet the standards set in the directive from investment to meet other requirements of quality and reliability.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the waste disposal authorities and sites for which copies of site licences under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 have been requested by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and not supplied.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has not asked waste disposal authorities to provide copies of all their waste disposal licences. The inspectorate has employed consultants to assemble basic information, from the registers of waste disposal licences maintained by the waste disposal authorities, and to form it into a computer data base. This is periodically up-dated.

Waste disposal authorities have occasionally been requested by HMIP to provide copies of specific licences or samples of licences. In general such requests have been met. There have been a few occasions when such a request has not been acted on. Without a search of all correspondence files it is not possible to give a list of such occasions.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley and for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 12 December 1988, Official Report, columns 402-3, in which locations the 1987 sediment monitoring results by Yorkshire water authority show an increase of mercury concentration and the 1986 sediment monitoring results by Yorkshire water authority show an increase of cadmium over the previous year.

Mr. Moynihan: The two locations are the river Humber at Stone creek in respect of mercury, and the river Rother at Canklow in respect of cadmium.

Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), Official Report, 12 January, column 742, if he will make a statement on the performance targets set for the chairman of Yorkshire water authority in 1987-88, and if he will specify the annual bonus received by the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority in each of the last four years.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about Government controls on the Yorkshire water authority, including performance aims and achievement against them, is set out in the authority's annual report and accounts for 1987-88 on pages 59-62. A copy is available in the Library.

Water authority chairmen and executive board members were first eligible for performance bonuses in respect of 1986-87. The chairman of the Yorkshire water authority received a bonus of 11·5 per cent. of his annual salary for that year and 13 per cent. for 1987-88.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he proposes to issue in respect of the poll tax to women who have no independent source of income; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Nor does it plan to issue guidelines to individuals on this aspect of the community charge. Anyone with no independent source of income may have a spouse or partner who is jointly liable for the community charge. Where this is not the case, and the person has no income or capital, he or she is likely to be eligible for both income support and community charge benefit.

Defective Houses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authorities have Spooner style houses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations his Department has received regarding Spooner houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Eighteen local authorities in England have reported ownership of Spooner houses built between 1945 and 1951; and six have reported ownership of the later, and different, Spooner-Caspon house. My Department has received some inquiries about both house types, and has explained that on the evidence available, designation under the housing defects legislation is unlikely to be appropriate.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those types of properties covered by the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Trippier: The following property types are designated nationally in England, under the housing defects legislation:

Airey
Boot
Boswell
Cornish Unit
Dorran
Dyke
Gergory
Myton

Newland
Orlit
Parkinson
Reema Hollow Panel
Schindler and Hawksley SGS
Smith
Stent
Stonecrete
Tarran
Underdown
Unity and Butterley
Waller
Wates
Wessex
Winget
Woolaway

Local designations are in force for Smith-type houses with additional foundation defects at Birmingham, Dudley, Sandwell and Nuneaton and Bedworth; and also for certain other properties in Dudley with a foundation defect.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those types of properties for which proposals for designation under the Housing Defects Act have been submitted but which have not been so designated.

Mr. Trippier: My Department receives various inquiries concerning designation under the housing defects legislation. Since 1984, formal requests for designation in England have been considered, but not accepted, in respect of the following types:

National designation:
Duo-Slab
Truscon RD27
Certain properties in West Bletchley (with "Finlock Gutters" etc.)

Local designation:
Bison (Hounslow and Reading)
"Cornes" properties (Congleton)
"Czechoslovakian" Timber properties (South Derbyshire)
Duo-Slab (Mark I and II) (Leeds)
Hawksley Aluminium Bungalows (Taunton)
Certain properties in Gillingham (plaster problems)
Certain properties in Wolverhampton (foundation problems)

Top Hill Low Reservoir, Yorkshire

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the facilities for studying wildlife which have been provided at Top Hill Low reservoir in north Yorkshire will be maintained should privatisation take place; why a permit charge has recently been levied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I understand that Yorkshire water authority has no plans to reduce the facilities at Tophill reservoir now or after privatisation. Facilities at the reservoir are controlled by the Tophill wildlife group which, since 1 January 1988, has paid a nominal annual permit fee of £25 to the authority for the facilities. I understand that the group levies a charge on members to cover the permit fee and to give them a working income.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the membership and remuneration of the board of the Warrington and Runcorn new town development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The membership and remuneration of the board of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation is as follows:

	Annual salary with effect from 1 October 1988 £
Professor A. Mercer (Chairman) MA PhD	16,354
Mr. A. Dean Smith (Deputy Chairman) FRICS JP	7,432

Repossessions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of repossessions by building societies in each year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 2 February at column 353.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantities of radioactive barium sulphate residues remain at Amersham International sites; what is their total curie content; and what present plans exist for the final disposal of these radioactive wastes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 1·5 gigabequerels (approximately 40 millicuries) of radioactive barium sulphate residues remain at the Amersham International site at Amersham. No such residues are stored on any other Amersham International site.

The residues are sludges contaminated with radium-226 resulting from the treatment of radioactive effluent prior to discharge from the site. Residues are stored safely in the site effluent treatment plant. When the plant is de-commissioned, the waste sludges will be disposed of safely under the terms of an authorisation issued by HMIP.

Some radioactive barium sulphate residues arising from work on radium-226 in the 1940s and 1950s were at that time buried on the Amersham site. These burials were excavated in the late 1960s and the radioactive waste was disposed of by burial at the British Nuclear Fuels disposal site at Drigg in Cumbria.

Council Houses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to offer council houses free to tenants who have lived in them for many years.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will publish tables showing (a) the planning applications for out of town retail developments which have been referred to him on appeal in each of the past five years, (b) their date of referral, (c) their size in square feet, (d) the outcome of each appeal, and (e) the local planning authority concerned;

(2) whether he will publish tables showing (a) the planning applications for city centre retail developments which have been referred to him on appeal in each of the past five years, (b) their date of referral, (c) their size in square feet, (d) the outcome of each appeal and (e) the local planning authority concerned.

Mr. Chope: Information on appeals involving retail development is not readily available in the form requested. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish tables showing (a) the planning applications for leisure development which have been referred to him on appeal in each of the last five years, (b) the date of referral, (c) the local planning authority concerned, (d) their size in square feet and (e) the outcome of each appeal.

Mr. Chope: Since 1985-86, 1,473 appeals of this type have been determined of which 742 were allowed. The size and nature of the proposals varies widely. I regret that the other details requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure that as far as is reasonably possible the caterers chosen to supply food for the conference sponsored by Her Majesty's Government to be held in March on the depletion of the ozone layer and chlorofluorocarbons will be using (a) refrigerant units not needing chlorouorocarbons and (b) food packaging not including chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on 25 January at col 567-68, Government Departments have been asked to review their policies, specifications and practices with a view to reducing the use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and halons to the maximum possible extent. In addition, the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre and the Government hospitality fund, which will be catering for the conference, have been specifically asked to ensure that use of products and equipment containing CFCs is avoided as far as possible.

Industrial Estates

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on the sale of local authority freeholds to industrial leasehold tenants on local authority industrial estates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each local authority to adopt its own policy on this question. In general we consider that, where industrial estates are sold, the tenants should have a fair chance to purchase the freehold.

Structure Plans

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he proposes to complete his review of the process by which the structure plans are prepared;

(2) what role he is planning to give county councils in preparing future structure plans.

Mr. Chope: A White Paper on the future of development plans (CM 569) was published on Monday 30 January. The White Paper proposes the abolition of structure plans, but envisages that county councils should continue to have a key role in the planning process, both in relation to the preparation of regional planning guidance, and in the formulation of planning policies on issues which need to be considered on a county-wide basis. Each county will be required to prepare a statement of county planning policies on a defined range of subjects. They will also be required to prepare a separate minerals development plan. In England, development control responsibility for minerals and waste disposal will remain with the county councils.

Rubbish Tips

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to place a statutory ban on building closer than 250 m to dangerous tips in respect of the methane gas hazard associated with rubbish tips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No, but it is proposed to issue to local authorities shortly a circular about the use of their planning powers in relation to landfill sites which may generate methane gas, and this will refer to the circumstances of development near such sites. A draft of the circular was issued for comment on 12 December.

Dumps

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the financing of safety measures at former dumps; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Such measures are the responsibility of those, including local authorities, with relevant rights to the land.

Local authorities will assess the requirements in the light of surveys currently being conducted and will determine their priorities accordingly. Capital allocations for 1989-90 allow for such work, with a sum of £5 million held in reserve for urgent work on landfill gas remedial measures for which no other resources are available.

Derelict Land

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are being made available under the derelict land programme in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The resources available for derelict land reclamation under the derelict land programme will be £67·182 million in 1989-90, we expect that about 900 hectares of land will be reclaimed by the programme in 1989-90 thus maintaining the momentum of the programme which, since 1979, has funded the reclamation of more than 11,000 hectares of derelict land. In addition, urban development corporations are now tackling some of the most extensive areas of dereliction and city grant is also helping redevelop derelict sites in inner city areas.

As in previous years more than 90 per cent. of derelict land grant will be spent in the northern and midlands regions. We have given particular priority to Yorkshire and Humberside and the west midlands. We are providing £12 million to the Yorkshire and Humberside region to increase the attack on persistent dereliction. £13 million is allocated to the west midlands and of this £6 million is intended to continue the investigative and remedial work on old limestone workings in the black country. Overall the allocations include more than £12 million for coal mining and related dereliction, a further increase on last year's record expenditure.

We are approving a new rolling programme for the joint local authority initiative in the Dearne valley in south Yorkshire. Existing rolling programme status for the lower Don valley (Sheffield) and Preston docks is to cease. We are also introducing triennial reviews for all rolling programmes and major projects and under these arrangements the present programmes in Wigan, north-east Lancashire, Wirral, Normanby park, Corby and the black country will be examined with the local authorities in the course of 1989 and targets set for completion of their work. Total expenditure on the 13 local authority rolling programmes approved for 1989-90 will be nearly £19 million.

The allocations will permit completion of work on the major reclamation of the Consett steelworks and the 1990 Gateshead garden festival site. Progress will be maintained in Corby, Wigan and the black country and on the exciting private sector Meadowhall development in Sheffield. A start should be made on the BICC site in Knowsley.

In general, priorities for derelict land reclamation remain as set out in the department's circular 28/85, "Reclamation and Reuse of Derelict Land". This stressed the importance of schemes designed to reclaim urban, especially inner city, land for housing and industrial and commercial uses. These priorities will be reflected in the schemes that will be supported in 1989-90.

However, as I announced on 20 July 1988, I have undertaken to review priorities for derelict land reclamation in the light of the findings of the 1988 derelict land survey. In doing so we shall also have regard to the recent report of the National Audit Office on derelict land grant and to the forthcoming report of the Public Accounts Committee. Officials are already engaged on the review with terms of reference "to review the causes and incidence of derelict land and the measures needed to deal with it and to prevent dereliction in future having regard to value for money."

If changes are proposed to policies or procedures for the reclamation of derelict land then a consultation paper will be published before firm decisions are taken.

Endangered Species

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to publish the results of his monitoring of progress in the implementation of the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 3 February at column 43.

Pesticides

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches of the maximum admissible concentration of single and mixed pesticides in water reported by the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan: Last year sample analyses indicated that there had been some breaches of the precautionary standard for pesticides in drinking water in some supplies provided by the Anglian water authority. However, all were within levels considered acceptable by medical advisers.

Correspondence

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the letter of 22 December 1988 from the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury relating to clause 7(5) of the Water Bill.

Mr. Moynihan: I have sent the hon. Member a reply today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, following the recommendations of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, he will amend the method of funding of the Agricultural and Food Research Council so as to distinguish between the funding of food research in the public interest and work of direct benefit to industry; and if he will direct the Agricultural and Food Research Council to ensure that its Bristol laboratory remains open and intact.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have made their position clear on the removal of public support for near market research and that is already reflected in the commissions which my Department places with the Agriculture and Food Research Council. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science is responsible in this House for matters directly affecting the research councils.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not usual for my Ministry to make donations to public appeals for financial aid but the Ministry has on occasion been prepared to sponsor projects within the purview of such appeals. The most recent example has been a £50K sponsorship of a project within the ambit of the British Food and Farming 1989 appeal. Identification of examples for the period back to 1979-80 could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Nutritional Labelling

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to proposals by the European Commission for revised nutritional labelling; and if he will make it his policy to resist any extension of the four principal nutrients now recommended for use in the United Kingdom and specified in Codex Alimentarious.

Mr. Ryder: The European Commission's proposals on nutrition labelling are currently under discussion at Council working group level. I am aware of the food industry's view that nutrition labelling should be restricted to energy, protein, carbohydrate and fat with optional declarations of other nutrients, as recommended by the Codex Alimentarius.

Potato Marketing

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to complete his review of potato marketing policy; and if he will ensure that in relation to any proposals he makes for change in the existing arrangements, producers, users and consumers will be brought together to develop a strategy which ensures that the market need is met.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is now considering and evaluating the responses to the consultation document in September 1988, including comments on the suggestion that non-producer interests should be represented in market management decisions. We are not yet in a position to say when this process will be completed, but a decision will not be unduly delayed.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give, for each year since its introduction (a) the total amount of conservation grants paid under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme and (b) the total amount of funding received from the European Economic Community for conservation grants under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme.

Mr. Ryder: In the financial year 1987-88 the payments made under the ESA schemes in England amounted to £2·944 million. Our estimate of expenditure in the current financial year is £8·3 million. Information on funding received from the European Economic Community towards the ESA expenditure in 1987 is not yet available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report (a) the total extent in hectares, of each environmentally sensitive area, (b) the extent of agricultural land within each environmentally sensitive area, (c) the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements on each environmentally sensitive areas, (d) of the number of agreements concluded with farmers in each environmentally sensitive area and (e) the total area of land covered by agreements in each environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Ryder: The total area in hectares of each environmentally sensitive area in England is as follows:

	Hectares
Broads	29,870
Somerset Levels and Moors	26,970
South Downs	53,340
Pennine Dales	15,900
West Penwith	7,210
Breckland	94,030
North Peak	50,250
Suffolk River Valleys	32,150
Shropshire Borders	21,000
Test Valley	2,690

The figures are provisional and subject to minor amendment when final measurement and checking has been completed. The extent of agricultural land in each environmentally sensitive area is still being measured. Information on the number of farmers eligible to enter the environmentally sensitive area scheme in each area is not available.

The number of agreements concluded in 1987 and total area of land covered in each environmentally sensitive area together with applications and agreements for 1988 are as follows:

Area	Agreements 1987		Applications and agreements 1988
	Number	Area hectares	Number	Area hectares
Broads	389	6,735	239	5,627
Somerset Levels	523	7,709	148	1,437
South Downs	58	3,104	65	2,743
Pennine Dales	218	8,130	39	1,175
West Penwith	139	5,552	10	314
Breckland	—	—	86	3,933
North Peak	—	—	77	35,911
Shropshire Borders	—	—	184	13,747
Suffolk River Valleys	—	—	287	7,191
Test Valley	—	—	15	373

The last five environmentally sensitive areas (and the South Downs Western extension) were not open for applications until 1988.

Soil Erosion (Norfolk)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated annual rate of soil loss by erosion in Norfolk.

Mr. Ryder: While information is available in respect of areas known to be particularly susceptible, this is not representative of the whole country. Figures are not available for individual counties. The basic principles of soil erosion and measures to minimise its risk are well understood and have been incorporated in ADAS advice to farmers for many years. ADAS has published advisory leaflets on water erosion and on wind erosion and will advise farmers on techniques to minimise erosion risks.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Charitable Donations (VAT)

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has about the role, in France, of the Fondation de la France in routing corporate charitable donations to schools and higher education institutions, thereby exempting such donations from value added tax under the 6th directive on value added tax and whether he has plans to encourage donations in the United Kingdom by such a method.

Mr. Butcher: The Department has no information on the Fondation de la France or its methods of routing charitable donations. We welcome charitable donations to schools and higher education institutions but their United Kingdom tax treatment is and must remain in line with the 6th directive.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has about the effect on the LINK programme of charging value added tax on the value of donations of computer equipment, software and services made by companies to schools and higher education institutions.

Mr. Butcher: None. LINK provides a framework for collaborative research involving industry and the science base; donations play no part in the funding arrangements.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has had consultations on seeking a method of removing from companies wishing to make donations in kind to schools and higher education institutions the disincentive of having value added tax levied on the value of such donations.

Mr. Butcher: The arrangements for value added tax are a matter for HM Customs and Excise. I understand that there are no plans to change the present arrangements which are in line with the EC 6th directive on VAT.

Student and Pupil Records

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue the consultative document on the keeping and disclosure of further education student records and to make the regulations on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend hopes to do so within the next few months.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not readily available.

Business and Commercial Subjects

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current position with regard to the extent to which business and commercial subjects are taught in schools, the extent to which such subjects were taught in schools five and 10 years previously and the extent to which he envisages such subjects being taught in schools over the next 10 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimates from the 1977 and 1984 secondary school staffing surveys show the following:

Tuition in business studies (1) as a percentage of all tuition received in maintained secondary schools

	1977 (England and Wales)	1984 (England)
Year groups 1-3	*	*
4-5	3·7	3·3
6th form	4·6	4·7
All year groups	1·7	1·6

*less than 0·1 per cent.
(1)Business studies includes commerce, accounts, bookkeeping, typing and shorthand.

Further information will be provided by the 1988 secondary school staffing survey, the results of which are expected to be available in the spring.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 25 January, Official Report, column 596, he will publish in the Official Report the protocol of the medical research trial on the benefits of zidovudine for healthy people who are HIV positive; how many people are involved; and when the results of the trial will be available.

Mr. Jackson: Planned numbers to be involved in the trial are 1,000 in the United Kingdom and 1,000 in France, as set out in the relevant MRC press notice earlier placed in the Library. Results are expected to be available by the end of 1992, and will be published as soon as is practicable after that. The protocol is extremely lengthy and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the report of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay; when it will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have asked the interim advisory committee to submit its report by mid-February at the latest. I will be arranging for its early publication.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the total Natural Environment Research Council budget was allocated by that council to (a) the Institute of Terrestial Ecology research station at Bangor and (b) the research vessel support service at Barry in each of the years 1979 to 1988; and what figure is projected for 1989 in each case.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Year from 1 April	(a) Bangor per cent.	(b) Barry per cent.
1979	0·69	7·44
1980	0·59	7·10
1981	0·55	7·78
1982	0·59	8·20
1983	0·59	6·32
1984	0·64	7·02
1985	0·66	6·57
1986	0·62	8·05
1987	0·69	8·24
1988	0·54	5·88
1989-90	[1]	5·31

[1] Not yet available.

Figures are gross proportion of NERC gross total expenditure.

Environmental Research Vessels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the projected costs of creating facilities at Southampton in the event of moving the environmental research vessel support base from Barry.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Natural Environment Research Council estimates the capital cost of creating the relevant new facilities in Southampton for the research vessel services from Barry and the Deacon laboratory from Wormley at about £21 million over four years at 1988-89 prices. Offsetting savings from land sale receipts and expenditure on work otherwise needing to be committed will total some £11 million.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what budget his Department has allocated in (a) cash terms and (b) adjusted to 1989 prices to the research vessels support service base at Barry for each of the years 1979 to 1988; and what figure is projected for 1989.

Mr. Jackson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many jobs he estimates will be shed at Natural Environment Research Council establishments and vessels during 1989; where these job losses will be located; where any new posts are to be located; and how many of the deleted posts he estimates will be vacated by (a) redundancy and (b) relocation.

Mr. Jackson: The Natural Environment Research Council identified 160 posts, the majority of which were in marine sciences, to be shed during the financial year to 31 March 1989. In consequence, 38 staff will be made compulsorily redundant, the remainder of the posts having been shed through voluntary redundancy. I understand that in 1989-90 further posts will have to be lost; it is hoped to limit these to 60, through voluntary redundancy. The locations of the posts concerned are not yet known.

Science Budget

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the distribution of the science budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have considered the recommendations of the advisory board for the research councils and have decided that the science budget for 1989-90 should, subject to approval by parliament of the Estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	74·57
Economic and Social Research Council	32·02
Medical Research Council	176·34
Natural Environment Research Council	123·46
Science and Engineering Research Council	404·96
The Royal Society	11·64
The Fellowship of Engineering	0·97
Science Policy Studies (ABRC)	0·22
Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology	0·08

I am publishing the board's advice today. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENERGY

Margam Pit

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whose consent is required for the commencement of work on Margam pit; and whether British Coal has sufficient capital available for the work in 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Decisions on particular investments are a matter for British Coal. However, there are long-standing arrangements under which major projects are the subject of prior consultation with the Secretary of State. British Coal's capital allocation for each of the years 1989-90 to 1991-92 has been reduced by £25 million from the figures originally set out in Cm 606. Within these capital allocations, it is for British Coal to determine the priority to be given to specific projects.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will express the difference as a plus or minus figure for the latest available year against 1979 in the level of net flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries, at 1979 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The difference between the level of net flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries in 1979 and 1987, at 1979 prices, is minus £5,584 million. The 1979 figures is dominated by an exceptionally high level of bank lending fuelled by the recycling of petro-dollars.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will express the difference as a plus or minus figure for the latest available year against 1979 in the level of (a) public expenditure on aid, (b) the aid programme and (c) official development assistance, at 1979 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest year for which information is available is 1987. The information is:

Gross public expenditure on aid	: minus £208 million.
Net aid programme	: minus £228 million.
Net official development assistance	: minus £388 million.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the value at 1980 prices of net private flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries, for the latest available year, expressed in percentage terms of its value in 1979.

Mr. Chris Patten: The value at 1980 prices of net private flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries in 1987 expressed in percentage terms of its value in 1979 was 1·5 per cent.

Christian Aid (Report)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he plans to make to the report from Christian Aid "British Overseas Aid 1975-87", a copy of which was sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: This report was sent to me for information. I do not intend to make a statement on it.

Ethiopia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the aid to Ethiopia, expressed per capita of the population of that country, for the latest year for which the figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross British bilateral aid to Ethiopia in 1987 was the equivalent of 19p per head of the population of that country.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the security of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The recent incident in which a journalist gained entry to the construction site will doubtless require those responsible to review and improve their procedures. It would not be appropriate for me to make a statement on the details of the security arrangements.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities and other interested parties about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Manchester; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Glasgow; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Liverpool; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Newcastle; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Leeds; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Plymouth; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Birmingham; and if he will make a statement;

(9) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Southampton; and if he will make a statement;

(10) what consultation has taken place between his Department, British Rail, the appropriate authorities, and other interested parties, about the route for a high speed rail link between the Channel tunnel and Bristol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No consultations involving my Department have taken place about trains beyond London. British Rail is carrying out widespread regional consultations in preparation for the plan which it is required to publish by the end of 1989, in accordance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987, setting out its proposals for Channel tunnel rail services serving various parts of the United Kingdom.

Radioactive Materials

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will update to include 1988 his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 27 July 1988, columns 247-48, about the number of incidents involving the loss of radioactive materials in transit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 15 December at column 660.

On 26 September 1988 the Antigua-registered vessel Ardlough sank off the North Wales coast. A small quantity (50MBq) of Californium 252 was lost. There were no significant radiological consequences.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 24 January, column 466, to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, he will set out the form in which consignors of radioactive materials by air must satisfy in advance his Department that the arrangements comply with international regulations; and if he will list any instances when permission has been declined.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consignors whose package designs require approval must submit detailed safety reports to the Department of Transport for assessment against the provisions of the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations. They are notified of any shortcomings and given the opportunity to remedy them before resubmitting their case for reassessment. A copy of the Department's "Guide to Applications for Competent Authority Approval of Package Designs, Shipments and Special Form Material" has been sent to the hon. Member for information.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, Official Report, 24 January, column 466, the International Atomic Energy Agency special review of international nuclear materials transport was begun; what evidence, and in what form, has been submitted by the United Kingdom; and when he expects the special review to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review began in March 1988. The United Kingdom is represented on the review committee and the recently published report by the Advisory Committee on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material on the transport of plutonium by air was submitted to a technical meeting in December 1988. The recommendations and the need for further work will be considered by the standing advisory group of the International Atomic Energy Agency in April 1989.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what transport licence arrangements exist to cover the transport of (a) nuclear materials from atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston to atomic energy research establishment Harwell for processing and (b) nuclear materials from atomic energy research establishment Harwell to atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston for processing; and what liaison arrangements exist between his Department and the international safeguards authorities at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna and EURATOM in Luxembourg over such transport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The safety procedures observed by the Ministry of Defence in the transport of nuclear materials are no less stringent than those required of civil operators.

They comply with the internationally agreed standards set by the IAEA. Liaison arrangements concerning international safeguards are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Newly Qualified Drivers

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider introducing a scheme requiring the display of probationer plates for newly qualified drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of schemes were introduced in other countries during the 1960s, so they have been in operation for some time. So far, none has been successfully evaluated. There is no evidence that they help to reduce casualty rates. In New Zealand, for instance they have been withdrawn upon introduction of enforcement systems more similar to our own.

A comparable P plate system is in use in Northern Ireland, where the legal system for enforcement of road traffic law is different. Using the only comparative data available, the relevant figures are:

Comparison of casualty rates for Great Britain and Northern Ireland: 1961-1987

Year	Casualty rate per 1,000 vehicles
	Great Britain	Northern Ireland
1961	35·0	23·5
1966	29·5	21·3
1971	22·7	20·8
1976	19·1	18·9
1981	16·7	17·8
1983	15·3	16·0
1984	15·7	17·3
1985	15·0	18·4
1986	14·8	20·0
1987	14·0	20·5

British Rail (Rolling Stock)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will approve British Rail's proposal to order new rolling stock for the lines from Marylebone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend today gave approval for the first of a new generation of inner suburban diesel vehicles for Network SouthEast services out of Marylebone. A total of 77 new class 165 Networker Turbo vehicles will be ordered at a cost of £39 million. Services on the lines currently employ late 1950's vintage stock, all of which will be replaced. Delivery of the first new stock is expected in October 1990.

These new vehicles will bring great benefits to the increasing number of passengers who travel into Marylebone. The new vehicles will be faster, more comfortable, and offer greater reliability than those that they replace.

Dial-A-Ride

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether a decision has been made on funding of dial-a-ride for next year.

Mr. Portillo: I am pleased to announce that the grant to London dial-a-ride services for 1989-90 will be £7·27 million. That is an increase of £1 million on 1988-89 and will facilitate a substantial expansion of the service. After four successive annual increases dial-a-ride funding in 1989-90 will be over 70 per cent. higher than it was when London Regional Transport took over responsibility for funding from the GLC.

EMPLOYMENT

Energy Grants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many energy grants have been paid in each month since April.

Mr. Nicholls [pursuant to his reply 11 January 1989]: I regret that there was an error in the reply I gave on Wednesday 11 January at column 711 concerning the number of energy grants that had been paid in each month since April 1988.

The correct information is provided in the following table:

	Number
1988
April	16,828
May	16,463
June	7,049
July	9,389
August	9,475
September	24,562
October	17,202
November	8,867
TOTAL	109,835

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department participates, where appropriate, in the work of all the international organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member, when employment and related issues are under consideration. The cost of commitments to these organisations is not generally met by the Department of Employment except in the case of the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The United Kingdom contribution to the ILO in 1987-88 was £3,813,000.

Product Clearance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice the Health and Safety Executive is giving to new applicants for the clearance of products.

Mr. Nicholls: People who contact the Health and Safety Executive's pesticide registration section for information about obtaining approvals are sent an information package which includes application forms and an explanatory booklet. The section issues a regular newsletter which includes an up-to-date estimate of how long approvals are likely to take.

HSE (Scientific Staff)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions have been given to scientific staff at the Health and Safety Executive as to the times of day at which to answer telephone inquiries.

Mr. Nicholls: Telephone inquiries to the Health and Safety Executive can be made at any time of the day. To reduce delays in processing applications for approvals scientists in the pesticide registration section organise their work so that normally mornings are dedicated to dealing with applications and time is set aside in the afternoon to phone back those applicants who wish to have direct scientific advice. Pesticide approval holders and relevant trades associations have been told of these arrangements in the January issue of the section's newsletter.

Restart

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will examine the working of restart in connection with those who are on the redundant mineworkers pension scheme; and if he will make a statement on the regulations as they are currently being applied by his Department.

Mr. Lee: People who receive payments under the redundant mineworkers payment scheme (RMPS) are required to sign on at unemployment benefit offices and to satisfy the conditions for receipt of benefit. This will bring them within the restart programme and they are offered interviews in the same way as every other member of the restart client group. The RMPS is the responsibility of the Department of Energy. Officials from my Department and the Department of Energy are examining the RMPS regulations and benefit procedures which bring those on the RMPS within the coverage of the restart programme.

Construction (Fatalities)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the total number of fatalities in the construction industry reported by the Health and Safety Executive for each year between 1960 and 1987 and (b) the total number of fatalities in the construction industry reported by the Health and Safety executive as a percentage of the combined employed and self-employed work force for each year between 1960 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the available information. Fatalities to the self-employed and members of the public were not reportable until 1 January 1981. The few voluntary reports collected between 1978 and 1980 are included with employees. Fatal injuries to the self-employed working on their own have never been reportable.

The relative incidence of injuries between employees and the self-employed will be affected by differences in the range of activities in which they are engaged and by differences in the propensity to report injuries.

n.a. not available.

[1] Reported to Her Majesty's factory and agricultural inspectorate and all other relevant enforcing authorities under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR) for 1981 to March 1986, and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) for 1986-87 onwards. Fatalities between 1960 and 1980 are limited to those reported to Her Majesty's factory inspectorate.

[2] The construction industry is defined as in the standard industrial classification (SIC) 1968 (order XX) for employment data up to 1970 and injury data up to 1980. From 1971 for employment data and 1981 for injury data, it is as defined in SIC 1980 (division 5).

[3] As at June each year.

[4] First quarter (January to March).

[5] Year commencing 1 April.

[6] Provisional.

Curriculum and TVEI

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the Training Commission dealing with the curriculum in schools and the extension of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Cope: At 1 February 1989, 163 permanent officials and 14 casual staff were employed to administer the technical and vocational education initiative, of whom five were part-time. In addition, 40 educational advisers were employed on short-term contracts.

Catrine Unemployment Office

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the figures for use of the Catrine unemployment office for (a) advice, (b) signing on and (c) other services for each month since June 1979.

Mr. Lee: Full information is not available. Details of the number of people using Catrine part-time unemployment benefit office to sign as unemployed since 1985 can be supplied and are given in the table.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made on proposals for legislation to control the release of genetically engineered organisms into the environment to replace the current system of voluntary guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There is already legislation which controls in various ways the planned release of genetically manipulated organisms into the environment. This includes the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 and a number of other Acts, the administration of which falls to several Government Departments but prior notification is often voluntary. I am informed by the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission that further to publication of a consultative document in 1987, he expects to submit to my right hon. Friend legislative proposals to make it compulsory in all cases by the middle of this year.

The United Kingdom is also participating in negotiations on a European Community directive on this subject.

Employment Training Scheme

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Derbyshire are currently participating in the Government's employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: At 27 January 1989 there were 2,044 trainees on employment training in Derbyshire.

Coalmining (Women)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received in respect of proposals to permit women to be employed underground in the coalmining industry; how many were generally in favour and how many were unfavourable; if he will publish his response to any such representations.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Fourteen representations were received in respect of proposals to permit women to be employed underground in mines in response to the consultative document "Restrictions on Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation". Of these 10 were generally in favour and four were against.

Economic League

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the implications for his employment policies of the activities of the Economic League.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Over the last 12 months my Department has received 30 letters about the activities of the Economic League.

Industrial Death Grants

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he proposes to introduce to replace industrial death grants following their abolition on 11 April 1988; when the standard rate of £52 for single parent and £78 for two parents, as applied to YTS fatalities was first introduced; how the level of those awards was varied throughout their lifetime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 February 1989]: All payments made under the analogous industrial injuries scheme run by the Training Agency and its predecessors are exactly the same as those available to employed earners from the Department of Social Security's statutory industrial injuries' scheme. Under the statutory scheme industrial death grant payments were abolished on 11 April 1988. The rates of industrial death grant remained the same from the introduction of the statutory scheme in 1948, until they were abolished. The question of any replacement of the death grant is for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Security.

East Midlands Tourist Board

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of expenditure provided by his Department to the East Midlands tourist board in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 6 February 1989]: My Department provides general grant-in-aid funding towards the costs of all English tourist board (ETB) activities. The ETB has made the following total payments to the East Midlands tourist board:

Financial Year	Total Payments £
1984-85	112,000
1985-86	124,000
1986-87	191,000
1987-88	216,000
1988-89	218,000

Training (East Anglia)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest available figures for (a) the number of places and (b) the number of trainees in place in employment training for each training agency area in East Anglia.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: It is planned to have about 5,000 places available in Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire by April 1989. At 27 January 1989, there were already over 2,900 trainees on the programme.

Coal Mines (Sanitation)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce specific statutory requirements for the provision of sanitation in deep coal mines.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Specific statutory requirements for the provision of sanitation in all coal mines already exist. They are section 94 of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 and the Coal and Other Mines (Sanitary Conveniences) Regulations 1956.

These provisions are being reviewed and will be updated as part of the Health and Safety Commission's programme for the renewal of mining safety legislation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Internal Market Council

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report the nature and purpose of amendmens he proposes to make to Acts of Parliament so as to comply with the common position adopted by the Internal Market Council of the European Economic Communities at their meeting on 21 December 1988 in respect of draft directives and amendments relating to the harmonisation of national legislation concerning safety of machinery.

Mr. Maude: The draft directive is still under negotiation. A common position was agreed at the internal market council on 21 December. Under the co-operation procedure, the European Parliament now has an opportunity to consider the common position, before the directive can be finally adopted by the council. It is therefore too soon to give a definitive assessment of the impact on United Kingdom legislation.

However, several United Kingdom laws may need to be amended. The most relevant are the Health and Safety at Work, etc, Act 1974 and the Consumer Protection Act 1987. More specific requirements dealing with hazards arising out of the use of machinery in particular industries are contained in various other statutory provisions; the most important of these are the Factories Act 1961 and numerous sets of regulations made under it.

Broadcasting and Film

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into trade unionism within the broadcasting and film industries.

Mr. Maude: Questions as to possible restrictive labour practices in television broadcasting and film protection were jointly referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 28 March 1988 by my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Employment, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Secretary of State for the Home Department. The Commission has not yet submitted its report to Ministers. Once it has done so, it will be published as soon as is practicable.

1992 Hotline

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many calls have been received to date by his Department's 1992 hotline.

Mr. Maude: DTI's 1992 hotline has received over 113,000 calls since it opened on 18 March 1988.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what is now his estimate for the deficit on the balance of payments for 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The deficit on the current account of the balance of payments for 1988 is provisionally estimated to be £14·3 billion.

Cars

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, how much of the increase in 1988 in the demand for cars was met by production in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988 of the 2,215,574 new cars registered in the United Kingdom, 965,883 were manufactured in the United Kingdom. The comparable figures for 1987 were 2,013,693 and 972,968.

Further Education

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will list the separate schemes under the support for further education programme of his Department; and what are the total sums expended on them since 1983.

Mr. Forth: My Department has supported further education with a number of schemes at various times since 1983. £3·2 million has been expended on the further education scheme for IT skills updating, £5·1 million was expended on the CNC machine tools scheme and £2·5 million on the scheme for computer aided design.

The further education sector also benefited from a number of schemes which also applied to higher education, schools and management education. Separate figures for futher education are not available.

Capital Projects

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what information he has on the average rate of return currently being obtained by the private sector in the United Kingdom for new capital projects.

Mr. Atkins: No information is available on rates of return obtained on new capital projects. Real rates of return on capital employed for industrial and commercial companies are calculated from national accounts statistics and published in British Business, most recently on 30 September 1988. The net real rate of return on capital employed for industrial and commercial companies excluding North sea activities in 1987 was estimated at 10 per cent. the highest since 1969.

Balance of Payments Deficit

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate for the balance of payments deficit for 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The deficit on the current account of the balance of payments for 1988 is provisionally estimated to have been in deficit by £14·3 billion.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest statement of the balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactured goods in 1988 is provisionally estimated to have been in deficit by £14·3 billion.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member countries have shown a greater increase in industrial investment since 1979 than the United Kingdom

Mr. Atkins: Comparable statistics for industrial investment are available only up to 1986 and do not cover all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. Of the countries for which comparisons are available, the following have shown a greater increase between 1979 and 1986 than the United Kingdom:

United States of America
Denmark

Finland
Iceland
Netherlands
Norway
Sweden

However, United Kingdom industrial investment in 1986 may have been adversely affected by the phasing out of some capital allowances. Since 1986 industrial investment has increased substantially and the latest Department of Trade and Industry's investment intentions survey indicated that this strong growth will continue in 1989 and 1990.

Amateur Radio

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he is to take any further powers to control interference to television and telephone communications arising from equipment used by amateur radio operators.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. The European Community directive on electro-magnetic compatibility will require all electrical apparatus, including radio transmitters placed on the market, not to cause interference to other apparatus, and for such apparatus, including television and telephones to be adequately immune from interference.

I anticipate the directive entering into force on 1 January 1992. Irrespective of legal requirements, the responsible use of amateur radio apparatus depends upon licensees co-operating with their neighbours on interference problems: I am glad to say that the vast majority of radio amateurs exercise that responsibility.

Cinema Industry

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has for each year since 1975, on the annual contribution of public funds to the cinema industry in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 February 1989]: I have no annual information on the contribution of public funds to the cinema exhibition industries in France, Germany, Italy, Spain and Sweden for each year since 1975. In the United Kingdom there has been no public funding of the cinema exhibition industry over the same period.

Manchester (EC Aid)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide details of grants made from the European Economic Community regional and social fund to (a) the city of Manchester and (b) the Trafford district of greater Manchester in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Commitments made from the European regional development fund to (a) the City of Manchester and (b) the Trafford district of Greater Manchester were:

	(a) £	(b) £
Infrastructure projects
1984	1,014,750	nil
1985	49,500	237,500
1986	145,000	nil

Toyota Motor Company

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, should the Toyota motor company decide to build an assembly plant in the United Kingdom, any possibility of Government financial aid towards start-up costs would be subject to EEC Commission restriction or rejection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 February 1989]: If the Toyota motor corporation were to apply for financial assistance for establishment of a motor vehicle assembly plant in the United Kingdom, and if the Government were to decide to make an offer of aid, then the European Community procedures described in my other answer today to my hon. Friend would apply. The company is aware of the position.

Motor Industry (Aid)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any proposal by the Government to give financial aid to the motor vehicle sector must be notified to the EEC Commission in advance of any actual financial aid given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Using its powers under the state aids provisions of the EEC Treaty, the Commission has recently introduced a Community framework for state aids to the vehicle sector. From 1 January 1989 any proposal by Governments or other public authorities to give financial assistance to a manufacturer of motor vehicles or motor vehicle engines must be prenotified for clearance by the Commission if the cost of the project exceeds 12 million ecu (about £8 million).

English Folk Dance and Song Society (Elections)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he has received the report of the Electoral Reform Society on the conduct of the recent elections to the national executive committee of the English Folk Dance and Song Society; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will set up an inquiry into allegations of malpractice in the recent elections to the national executive committee of the English Folk Dance and Song Society;

(3) what representations he has received about allegations of irregularity in the recent elections to the national executive committee of the English Folk Dance and Song Society.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 February 1989]: I have not received a report by the Electoral Reform Society into the conduct of the recent elections of the national executive committee of the English Folk Dance and Song Society, but my Department has considered a request from another quarter for an investigation into alleged malpractices in relation to those elections. Companies Act powers are not appropriate for the investigation of these matters.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water Standards

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those water supplies in Northern Ireland which fail to meet the standards set out in the European Economic Community directives on the quality of drinking water and whether or not these are the subject of derogations; how and when it is proposed for each of these water supplies to meet the standards laid down; and what the latest estimated cost of complying with the standards is in each case.

Mr. Needham: There are 114 water supply areas in Northern Ireland of which 13 are subject to derogations made under the EC drinking water directive. Requests for seven delays under the directive were made in 1985; subsequent remedial works enabled three to be withdrawn. A programme of works to enable the remaining four delays to be also withdrawn should be completed by 1992.

Where derogations or delays apply, a small number of directive parameter values for non-toxic substances may be exceeded on a regular basis. In the supply areas for which there are no derogations or delays there are occasions when a value for a non-toxic substance is exceeded for a short time. The directive values for toxic substances are not exceeded. A programme of works over 10 to 12 years has been identified to ensure compliance with the directive. The estimated cost is £200 million.

Rate Demands

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will take steps to ensure that the notice of rate demands in Northern Ireland shows a more detailed breakdown of the application of expenditure on a similar basis as prevails in Great Britain.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information provided with the rates demand note in Northern Ireland is in accordance with that prescribed by the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. The order, unlike the relevant legislation in Great Britain, does not require the provision of the information referred to on or with the rates demand note. This recognises the essential differences between the local government and rating systems in Northern Ireland and Great Britain, in particular the existence in Northern Ireland of a local district rate and an overall regional rate, both of which are collected together by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. I have no plans to change this legislation.

A free leaflet explaining how the regional rate is struck is available each year from local rating, social security or Housing Executive offices.

Census Questionnaire

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Northern Ireland hon. Members will be given an opportunity to comment on the draft census questionnaire being formulated before it is published; and if he will ensure that irrelevant questions are not included in the census document when published.

Mr. Needham: The Government will prepare a draft census order and lay it before Parliament in accordance with the Census Act (Northern Ireland) 1969. The order will provide for the taking of a census of population in Northern Ireland in 1991, and among other things, will set out the particulars to be stated in the census returns. At a later stage, census regulations will make detailed provision for the conduct of the census and contain specimens of the forms to be used. All the questions asked will be relevant.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the draft census questionnaire includes a question about the respondent's knowledge of Irish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Government propose to include in the 1991 census of Northern Ireland a question of knowledge of Irish language in parallel with the language questions to be included in the censuses for Wales and Scotland.

Schools

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to increase the category A expenditure admitted for each of the voluntary grammar schools in Northern Ireland for the current school year and the last two school years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Grant on category A expenditure by each voluntary grammar school in any school year is directly related to the number of approved teaching posts in the school.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to the Department of Education to indicate the level of funding to any given secondary school in Northern Ireland or the pattern of funding among those schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: As voluntary grammar schools are funded direct, the Department has detailed information about the level of funding to individual schools. In the case of other secondary schools non-teaching costs are funded by education and library boards and teaching costs by the Department of Education, but total funding levels to individual schools are at present not available centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to collect statistically reliable estimates of pensioners' income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We believe that the statistics that we collect are reliable. I refer the hon. Member to an article published in the May 1987 issue of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library, which sets out the statistical basis of the pensioners' income figures used by the Department. We will be publishing an updated version of that article in the near future.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department is an affiliated member of the International Social Security Association. The 1989 membership subscriptions will be approximately £112,000. In addition the Department participates in the work of all international organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member, whenever social security issues arise. It is impossible to apportion the overall United Kingdom contribution to each organisation between social security and other activities.

Deductions from Benefit

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has given any advice to levying authorities about the legislative basis upon which they can make deductions from benefits if an individual fails to pay his or her poll tax;

(2) what guidance has been sought by, and what advice he has given to, Strathclyde regional council on deduction of unpaid poll tax from those on welfare benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When community charges are introduced in Scotland, the Government's intention is to provide that, where a person on income support has failed to pay his community charge, and where the local authority has obtained a court order in respect of an amount of personal community charge that he is owing, the local authority may ask this Department to recover the amount specified in the order by deductions from his income support payments. The regulations that will provide for this are being prepared and will be laid before Parliament shortly. Advice will then be issued to local authorities, including Strathclyde regional council, on both the interpretation of the legislation and the operational aspects of the regulations.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the numbers of 16 to 17-year-olds claiming supplementary benefit who had no parents or were estranged or living away from their parents, at each annual claimant count from 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the needs of clothing and footwear for men and boys, and for women and girls, are estimated for purposes of the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social fund officers consider each application on its merits when determining the extent of such awards.

One-parent Families

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents received community care grants to assist them with rehousing after their marital relationship broke down in each of the years for which there are figures in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Maternity Payments

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average single payment for maternity needs in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in the last year in which such payments were available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Single payments for maternity needs were abolished in April 1987. The May 1987 annual statistical inquiry gives information relating to single payments made in Great Britain in the 12 months preceding the date of the inquiry. This shows that the average single payment for maternity needs in that year was £104·10. Information for Scotland could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information for Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents with dependent children were in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit in the last year in which it was available and (b) income support in each year it has been available for (i) Scotland and (ii) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Great Britain	Scotland
Supplementary benefit—lone parents	659,000	76,000
Income support—lone parents	684,010	78,938

Note:
The figures supplied are for Great Britain. Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.
Source:
The annual statistical inquiry May 1987.
Income support quarterly statistical inquiry 31 May 1988.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much community charge rebate a working single parent with two young children and a net income of £124·60 a week would qualify for.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Assuming that both children are under the age of 11 and that no members of the family are disabled, and also assuming an annual personal community charge of £280 a year (the average charge in Scotland, weighted by population), no rebate would be payable.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much community charge rebate a single mother with two young children and in receipt of £64·75 income support a week would qualify for.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Anyone getting income support, however large or small the amount, will qualify for the maximum rebate of 80 per cent. of his or her personal community charge. An amount reflecting the estimated average 20 per cent. community charge liability which income support claimants will have to pay has been included in the levels of income support from 1 April 1989.

Benefits (Cost)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each social security benefit how much extra would be spent if all those entitled to claim that benefit, according to his Department's own estimates, did so.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 January 1989]: No precise estimates of total unclaimed benefits can be provided and those figures which the Department does publish give no more than the broadest orders of magnitude. I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 21 to 25 and table 15.17 on pages 272 to 273 of Cm. 288 (the 1988 public expenditure White Paper) for details of the latest available take-up estimates for the main income-related benefits. Take-up estimates for 1985 should be available shortly.

HEALTH

Resources

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each English regional health authority the value of resources available for service development in each year including the current year since 1983, expressed in cash terms, and as a percentage of total resources both including and excluding the effects of the cost improvement programme.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table. Figures for 1988-89 are not yet available.

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

Income and expenditure figures are based on health authorities' summarised accounts.

Health authorities have been required to make cost improvements since 1984-85. Data on efficiency savings made by authorities before that date were not collected centrally.

Real terms growth has been calculated using the gross domestic product deflator.

Responsibility for the cost of the London Ambulance Service, previously shared between all four Thames regions, was transferred to South West Thames in 1987-88.

The consequent increase in expenditure in that region has been excluded from the spending figures in the table.

Hospitals

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what way and at what level plans and decisions on building or expanding National Health Service hospitals will be taken within the new framework for the National Health Service set out in "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regions will continue to be responsible for the strategic oversight of health authorities' capital planning and capital programmes, but there is to be increased delegation of decisions on individual schemes both from Department to region and from region to district. There may also be additional delegation to local level of responsibility for the management of individual schemes. NHS hospital trusts will be responsible for their own capital investment decisions and for managing their own schemes, providing their borrowing is contained within the overall national annual financing limit.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the savings made or estimated to be made by withdrawing exclusive telephone lines from the central control room of the London ambulance service to ambulance stations; and what assessment has been made of the advantage gained or disadvantages experienced in operational efficiency.

Mr. Freeman: No estimates have been made of the costs of withdrawing the private wire circuits between the central control room of the London ambulance service and ambulance stations. They have been upgraded to accept data transmissions as part of the introduction of the computer-aided dispatch system. The primary function of these circuits is the mobilisation of ambulance crews by providing direct contact between the control room and ambulance stations. It would not therefore be practical to discontinue their use. As the new system has been installed for less than four weeks, it is not yet possible to assess effectively the advantages gained or any disadvantages which might be experienced.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent changes have been made in the control room equipment or organisation of the London ambulance service; if he has assessed the efficiency and effectiveness of any new equipment; and if he will place in the Library a copy of any evaluation study or efficiency report relating to recent capital expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: To facilitate the installation of a new computer-aided dispatch system, the London ambulance service central control room has transferred to temporary accommodation while changes and refurbishment to accommodate computer terminal equipment are carried out. The automatic call distribution telephone system has been extended and a new selective calling radio system introduced: in addition, to alleviate difficulties caused by the temporary reorganisation, the number of control staff answering calls has been increased. As the computer-aided dispatch system will not be fully functional until August 1989, it would be premature to carry out any evaluation at this stage.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the installation of a computerised system of call distribution at the London ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The installation of the automatic call distribution system by the London ambulance service is being carried out in two parts. The first phase was completed in the existing control room in March 1988 and harnessed 999 calls and calls from the other emergency services to the new system. The second phase, which began on 8 January 1989, involves the temporary relocation of the control room to enable the remaining telephone lines (from hospitals, doctors, ambulance crews, and the divisional control rooms) to be linked to the computer-aided dispatch system. The computer-aided dispatch system will not be operational till August 1989.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capital and revenue budget for the London ambulance service for each of the last five years; what proportion the South West Thames regional health authority, the South East Thames regional health authority, the North East Thames regional health authority and the North West Thames regional health authority contributed, respectively; and if the budget of the London ambulance service is cash-limited.

Mr. Freeman: The figures are in the table.

Capital budget

Revenue budget

	SWTRHA 17·53 per cent.	SETRHA 32·38 per cent.	NETRHA 28·91 per cent.	NWTRHA 21·18 per cent.	Total

1988-89	46,060,840	—	—	—	46,060,840

Since 1987 the Department of Health has made the total allocation direct to the managing authority, South West Thames RHA. The South West Thames RHA would normally expect the London ambulance service to remain within its budget.

Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each health authority (a) the square footage of unused properties and (b) the square footage or acreage of unused land and the estimated value of each category as a percentage total land and property and value as a percentage of the total land and property value of each authority; and if he will make a statement as to his Department's policy on the sale of unused land and property.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not collected routinely centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the total surplus property (both land and buildings no longer currently used for Health Service purposes and with no future use envisaged) of each regional health authority is held centrally and this information as at 31 March 1988 is as follows:

Values of surplus properties are not collected separately centrally but information is held on the estimated income from property disposals for each regional health authority for the current financial year and the three following years. This information was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 24 January at column 546. Our policy on the sale of unused property is that it should be disposed of in a publicly acceptable manner for the best price possible.

Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Gateshead (ENT)

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total waiting list, the longest time any patient had to wait and the numbers waiting by number of months wait for the ear, nose and throat department at the Queen Elizabeth hospital, Gateshead, over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect waiting information centrally for individual hospitals. For details about the Queen Elizabeth hospital, the hon. Member may wish to contact the district general manager of Gateshead district health authority.

Weil's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many deaths from Weil's disease have been recorded for each of the last 10 years;

(2) if he will list the places where deaths from Weil's disease over the last 10 years have been recorded.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table; 1987 is the latest full year available. Death registrations with Leptospirosis (Weil's Disease)[1] as underlying cause of death: numbers and county district of usual residence, England and Wales 1978-88.

Waiting Lists

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has plans to provide additional funds to reduce hospital waiting lists in the Merseyside region.

Mr. Mellor: Last December, we announced a further £1·445 million for Mersey region from the waiting list fund for 1989-90. This brings the total additional funds we have allocated to Mersey region through this initiative to £4·488 million over three years. In addition, Crewe district health authority will have an opportunity to bid against the £6 million reserved from the waiting list fund next year for districts with special waiting problems.

Radioactive Iodine

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how quickly iodine tablets have to be administered following exposure to iodine 131 to be (a) 100 per cent. effective and (b) 50 per cent. effective in counteracting the effects of radioactive iodine.

Mr. Freeman: I am advised that experiments have shown that a dose of up to 100mg of stable iodine is almost 100 per cent, effective if taken immediately before or at the time of exposure to radioactive iodine. It is still 50 per cent. effective if taken about five hours after exposure.

Core Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list all those services which are not regarded as core services as defined in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" paragraph 4.15;

(2) whether gynaecology is a core service as described in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper stipulates that DHAs will be responsible for ensuring that the health needs of the population they serve are met; that there are effective services for the prevention and control of diseases and the promotion of health and that their population has access to a comprehensive range of high quality, value for money services. The broad categories of "core" services set out in the White Paper are examples of those to which patients need guaranteed local access. It will be up to each district health authority to consider in the light of their own particular circumstances what services constitute "core" services for them and what other servies can be obtained in a more flexible way. The duty of the district will be to obtain the best services for their populations from whatever source including their own hospitals, from other authorities' hospitals, from the new self-governing hospitals or the private sector.

Breast Feeding

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the percentage of women breastfeeding their baby at six weeks in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: Annual statistics on the incidence of breastfeeding are not collected centrally. However, national surveys of infant feeding practices in 1975 (England and Wales), 1980 and 1985 (Great Britain), show that the percentages of women breastfeeding at six weeks were as follows:

	Per cent.
1975
England and Wales only	46
1980
England and Wales	42
Great Britain	41

	Per cent.
1985
England and Wales	40
Great Britain	38

Vaccination

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the vaccination programme.

Mr. Freeman: Uptake figures for the year 1987-88 (April to March) show an increase in the national vaccination rate for polio, diphtheria and tetanus to 87 per cent., measles 76 per cent. and whooping cough 73 per cent. Ninety-six out of 190 district health authorities in England have now reached or surpassed the 1990 target of 90 per cent. for polio, while measles and whooping cough are showing welcome signs of moving towards that target.

These figures do not include the results of a very successful campaign against measles last summer (when three times the average monthly usage of the vaccine was recorded), or the introduction from October 1988 of the combined vaccine against measles, mumps and rubella (MMR), which has already been an outstanding success. Already more than 1·2 million doses of that vaccine have been distributed, against a requirement for the recommended groups of 400,0000.

We intend to maintain this momentum and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced in December that £7·8 million has been allocated towards purchase of the MMR vaccine in 1989-90.

From 1989-90 we shall also be committing at least £1 million per annum towards the promotion of immunisation jointly with the HEA. This remains a very important part of our programme in which both health authorities and general practitioners are expected to play a full part.

Fertility Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify in which districts (a) there are and (b) there are not fertility services.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The provision of infertility services is a matter for individual health authorities to decide in the light of local needs and priorities.

Well Woman Clinics

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how may well woman clinics there are;

(2) if he will list those districts which (a) do and (b) do not have well woman clinics.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Grading

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses, midwives and health visitors from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in the North East Thames regional health authority and for the North West Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is available in the Library.

Single Parents

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his assessment of the number of single parents with dependent children in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom for each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Comparable information for the whole of the United Kingdom and for constituent countries is not available. However, the estimated number of one-parent families with dependent children in Great Britain was 940,000 in 1984, 970,000 in 1985 and 1,010,000 in 1986. Estimates for earlier years are not strictly comparable. An article which discusses these estimates and gives the definitions used is included in "Population Trends No. 55 (Spring 1989)" to be published shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Biocides

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report of the expert advisory committee on biocides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have arranged today for a copy of this report which was produced in response to a recommendation in the Badenoch report and which is being published by HMSO to be placed in the Library. I am grateful to Dr. Wright, director of Newcastle public health laboratory and his committee for producing a thorough analysis of the use of biocides in minimising the risk of multiplication of legionellae pneumophilia in hospital cooling tower water systems and other water systems in hospitals.

The report is being sent to all health authorities in England so that those responsible for maintenance of hospital cooling tower systems may take its recommendations fully into account. The Department will be pursuing those recommendations which call for national action. Although this report deals only with water systems in health care premises, I hope that it will receive a wider readership as much of the report will be of more general application.

I am sure that it will be very useful to those concerned with the operation and maintenance of health buildings and will help in reducing the risk of the spread of legionnaire's disease in hospitals. I also trust that, as the report has wider general application, it will serve as a further reminder to employers of their responsibility, under the Health and Safety and Work etc. Act, to maintain a safe working environment for their employees.

National Health Service Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the final cost to public funds of (a) the recently completed National Health Service review and (b) its launch, publicity and communication to National Health Service staff and others.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 3 February 1989]: Work on the review was undertaken as an integral part of the Department's contribution to Government business, and the manpower costs involved are not separately identifiable. The estimated cost of the launch including the exercise of communicating with NHS staff and discussing the review's conclusions with them is £1,250,000.

Elderly Persons (Residential Places)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of continuing care residential places are provided for the elderly (a) by local authorities, (b) by voluntary organisations and (c) by the private sector in each region for (i) the year 1987 and (ii) the year 1988.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Provisional information on the number of places in homes for elderly people as at 31 March 1987 by social services inspectorate regions is given in the table. Information for the year ending 31 March 1988 is not yet available.

Continuing Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards his Department is considering to ensure that not all continuing care facilities will be provided by the private sector.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Our view is that a mixture of statutory, voluntary and private facilities is the best way of meeting the wide range of care needs of dependent people of all ages. We are considering the future organisation of care provision in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' report.

Listeria Monocytogenes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in view of the fact that the infectious dose of listeria monocytogenes for vulnerable people is not known, he will prohibit the consumption of food that contains listeria by those people known to be particularly at risk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 2 February 1989]: Listeria monocytogenes is known to be widely distributed in the environment, and the World Health Organisation working group on foodborne listeriosis has said that its total elimination from all food is impracticable and may be impossible. It is important to reduce the risks as much as possible, and both the Government and the food industry are working together to consider optimal production methods which will achieve this.

SCOTLAND

Projects (EC Grants)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total value of European Community grants to Scottish projects in the period 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Lang: We estimate some £1·3 billion in European Community grants has gone to Scottish projects in this period, not including European social fund grants to national schemes.

Regional Aid

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total value of United Kingdom Government regional aid in the period 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Lang: Gross expenditure on regional preferential assistance in Scotland in the period 1 April 1978 to 31 March 1988 was just over £2·1 billion.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many visits were made to Lennox Castle hospital over the past two years by the general manager of Greater Glasgow health board and individual members of the board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board has a programme of visits which takes members round all its hospitals. Although the programme was disrupted in 1988 by the consequences of industrial action, there has been one visit to Lennox Castle hospital in the last two years. No records are kept of informal visits by individual board members. The board general manager has visited Lennox Castle hospital on seven occasions in the last two years. I have visited the hospital on three occasions with the health board chairman and general manager, most recently on 23 January.

Legal Services

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the publication and preparation of the Green Paper on Scottish legal services;

(2) on what date the Green Paper on Scottish legal services was originally due to be published.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my right hon. and learned Friend informed the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 26 October 1988, he intends to seek views early this year on his further proposals on the future work and organisation of the legal profession in Scotland.

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the total money allocated to the Greater Glasgow health board for nurses' wages for the year 1988-89 and (b) the projected expenditure for 1988-89 for nurses' wages based on the actual regrading.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board has been given an additional £24·177 million, over and above its initial allocation for 1988-89 to meet the cost of the pay awards to nurses and other staff covered by the review bodies. Information on the actual cost of nurses wages in 1988-89 for individual boards will not be available centrally until boards submit their annual accounts in June.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency nurses, in whole-time equivalents, have been used in the Greater Glasgow health board from 1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

	Agency Nurses W.T.E.
1988
October	96·73
November	105·39
December	114·73
Average for period	105·62

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prescriptions for benzodiazepines were dispensed by community pharmacists in Scotland in 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that some 3 million NHS prescriptions for benzodiazepines were dispensed by community pharmacists in Scotland in 1987.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of people in Scotland dependent on benzodiazepines.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available. It is very difficult to define clinical dependency objectively in a way which would enable such information to be collected.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many working days were lost for the last year for which figures are available, resulting from people withdrawing from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what facilities are available in Scotland for those wishing to withdraw from benzodiazepines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what funds are currently available to assist those wishing to withdraw from benzodiazepines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision and funding of services for those dependent on benzodiazepines is primarily the responsibility of health boards and local authorities. NHS services are provided by the usual range of primary care and hospital-based services. In addition, many of the local statutory and voluntary sector projects concerned with the treatment and rehabilitation of drug misusers include a service for benzodiazepine dependants. Last month I announced that an additional £1 million per annum will be made available to health boards for 1989-90 for the development of services for drug misusers.

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the reason for Argyll and Clyde health board employing private contractors for cervical cytology; what information he has on the qualifications and training of the staff of the private company; and whether the health board will be liable for any errors of the private company.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Argyll and Clyde health board engaged the services of a private firm to screen a number of cervical cytology smears during the period January to March 1988 in order to deal with a temporary backlog in cervical smears reporting which had developed in one of the board's laboratories. The board rightly wished to avoid any lengthy delay in informing women of the results of their smears—delay which could cause unnecessary anxiety in those women concerned.

Officers of the board satisfied themselves that the firm concerned employed suitably qualified staff and operated a proper quality control system. The board accepts liability for any errors resulting from the arrangement on the same basis as it accepts liability for smears reported by its own laboratories.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1986 the amount of money spent by each health board on training laboratory staff for cervical cytology screening; what assistance his Department has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The training of laboratory staff is a matter for individual health boards to determine and this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to provide additional funding to health boards for cervical cytology.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are providing additional funds—about £5 million in the current year—to assist all health boards to improve their computer facilities. This will enable boards to establish a fully computerised call and recall system for cervical cancer screening. Computer software is also being provided to boards free of charge.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Greater Glasgow health board operates a system of performance review of persons occupying senior management, medical and senior nursing posts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department will give to community charge officers if they discover a person is copying the extract of the community charge register available for public inspection for purposes wholly unconnected with the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The rules which apply to the inspection of the community charges register are clearly set out in section 20 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended, and in the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 1988. I do not consider that specific advice on the application of these rules is required.

Pre-school

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of three and four-year-old children, expressed numerically and as a percentage of the age group (a) in nursery classes, (b) in primary classes and (c) attending pre-school playgroups in each of the local education authority areas in 1977, 1982 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of three and four-year-old children in education authority nursery schools or departments and education authority primary schools or departments in 1977, 1982 and 1987 are shown in the table. The numbers of children attending education authority and registered pre-school playgroups in 1977 and the numbers of places available in 1982 and 1987 are also shown. These numbers have been expressed as rates per hundred of the three and four year old child population. Information about the ages of children attending pre-school playgroups in 1977 and the numbers attending in 1982 and 1987 are not available.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many arrests took place at Celtic v Rangers and Rangers v Celtic football matches in 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 269 arrests were made at these matches.

Ecology

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a consultancy research contract with the countryside interpretation unit, presently based at the Open university, Milton Keynes, as part of his Departmental programme to increase public environmental awareness of Scotland's natural ecology.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has no immediate intentions of placing a consultancy contract with the countryside interpretation unit. Research contracts are commissioned in keeping with the Department's research priorties and on the basis of competitive tenders, unless there are special reasons for inviting a single contractor. The Department will consider proposals for research relevant to its responsibilities in line with its established contractual procedures.

Further Education

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many fifth-form pupils have moved into full-time further education in each of the last three academic years giving the figures in numerical and percentage terms and for each standard planning region;

(2) how many 18-year-old students have progressed into higher education in each of the last three academic years, giving figures in numerical and percentage terms and for each standard planning region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information at the level of detail requested is not readily available. The most recent information from the biennial Scottish young people's survey relating to the destination of school leavers was published in December 1988 in Scottish Education department statistical bulletin "School Leavers' Destinations (No. 12/E1/1988)" which is available in the Library.

Single European Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the grants available to small businesses preparing for the single European market of 1992.

Mr. Lang: An extensive range of assistance is available to firms in Scotland to help them meet the challenge of the single market. The enterprise initiative assists companies to improve their competitiveness by developing skills in six key areas of managment practice. Substantial help is available to assist firms break into export markets or to develop their existing overseas business, and regional enterprise grants for innovation and investment have been designed specifically for small firms with fewer than 25 employees. In addition, a range of assistance is available to small businesses from the Scottish development agency.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken in the past 12 months to prepare Scottish businesses for the single European market of 1992.

Mr. Lang: In addition to the Government's "Europe Open for Business" campaign which covers the whole of the United Kingdom, my Department is working closely with the Scottish development agency, enterprise trusts, chambers of commerce, and other organisations in Scotland, and both Ministers and officials have taken part in an extensive series of seminars and business meetings held throughout Scotland. My right hon. and learned Friend has also established the single market committee of the Scottish Economic Council to examine the impact of the single market on the economy of Scotland and to submit proposals to encourage those concerned to prepare for it. Our aim is to ensure that every sector of industry and commerce in Scotland is fully prepared for the challenges and opportunities which the single market will present.

Conservation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since its introduction (a) the total amount of conservation grants paid in Scotland under the enviromentally sensitive areas scheme and (b) the total amount of funding received from the European Economic Community for conservation grants in Scotland under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has made the following payments under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme:

1987	16,300
1988	186,800

Information on the amount of European Community reimbursement is not yet available.

Radio Forth

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions the Lord Advocate gave to officers of Strathclyde police to interview Mr. David Johnston a reporter working for Radio Forth.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Mr. Johnston was interviewed by police officers on the proper instruction of the Lockerbie disaster senior investigating officer.

School Buildings

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an expenditure estimate of the outstanding backlog of building work in primary and secondary schools in (a) repairs and maintenance, (b) modernisation, (c) other capital works and (d) new build.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local authorities are themselves responsible for estimating the detailed expenditure needs of their education buildings. They have substantial resources, both current and capital at their disposal for necessary building works.

Her Majesty's Inspectors

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of Her Majesty's inspectors' school reports published in each of the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 inclusive for Scotland and each local education authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The publication of Her Majesty's Inspectors' reports on schools was instituted from the beginning of the 1983-84 session. The number of reports produced for each of the school sessions since then are set out in the table below:

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Borders	3	5	5	5	4
Central	8	7	9	10	9
Dumfries & Galloway	5	6	5	7	6
Fife	9	10	11	11	12
Grampian	17	15	17	17	15
Highland	13	10	17	14	10
Lothian	19	14	20	21	19
Strathclyde	52	62	51	51	54
Tayside	13	11	16	13	12
Orkney Islands	2	2	1	2	1
Shetland Islands	1	4	1	3	1
Western Isles	1	6	5	4	3
Scotland	143	152	158	158	146

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of Her Majesty's inspectors in each of the years 1979-80 to 1987-88, inclusive.

Mr. Rifkind: The total number of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in post at 1 September in each of the years 1979 to 1988 inclusive is as follows:

	Number
1 September 1979	119
1 September 1980	109
1 September 1981	99
1 September 1982	93
1 September 1983	105
1 September 1984	109
1 September 1985	114
1 September 1986	116
1 September 1987	113
1 September 1988	[1]105

[1] At this date there were seven Her Majesty's Inspector vacancies, for which open recruitment competitions had been advertised.

Curriculum Development

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from independent/non-maintained schools about curriculum development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of public money spent on compensation to owners of sites of special scientific interest in Scotland for each year since 1982; and where each one of those sites is located.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council is empowered to enter into management agreements with owners or occupiers of land designated as a site of special scientific interest, or within a national nature reserve. Details of individual payments are confidential, but data on the numbers and costs of such payments are published in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Forestry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total new plantings of private forestry in Scotland during the current planting season; and what estimate he has as to how this has been affected by the changes in the tax regime.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The main planting season extends to the end of May and it is therefore not possible at this stage to provide a meaningful estimate of the amount of new planting that is likely to take place.

Training

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the numbers of training places taken up in Scotland since the new training scheme was introduced and of the numbers who have refused or left the training scheme.

Mr. Ian Lang [holding answer 1 February 1989]: By 20 January 1989, almost 16,000 people had entered Employment Training. At 30 December 1988, the latest date for which information on leavers is available, 5,016 people had left employment training, mainly due to completing the balance of their training under previous programmes. No figures are kept of those who decide not to participate in employment training.

DEFENCE

Gulf (Visit)

13. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when next he intends to visit the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for defence hopes to visit the Gulf again later this year. I was there in Dubai and Qatar last week.

Defence Industry (Ownership)

14. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy toward the possible increase of foreign ownership or part-ownership of vital British defence industries.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the possible increase of foreign ownership or part-ownership of vital British defence industries.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy toward the possible increase of foreign ownership or part-ownership of vital British defence industries.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department monitors proposals for increased foreign ownership, or part ownership of United Kingdom defence industries and assesses on a case by case basis the implications for national security and our ability to secure value for money in procurement.

Value for Money

15. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline his future policy towards achieving value for money.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have introduced a range of initiatives including the planned introduction of the new management strategy; the pursuit of a more commercial approach in the area of defence procurement, and the extension of competiton in defence support services. We shall continue to pursue these efficiency measures energetically.

Conventional Stability Talks

16. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the Government's policy for the conventional stability talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom and its NATO allies are currently finalising proposals for tabling at the negotiation on conventional armed forces in Europe, previously known as the conventional stability talks, which is due to begin in Vienna in March. The objective will be to eliminate capabilities for surprise attack and large-scale offensive action by measures which include the elimination, by reductions, of the current imbalances in key equipments such as tanks and artillery. A total ceiling on tanks of about 40,000, shared equally between the countries of NATO and the Warsaw pact is envisaged. Such measures will require heavily asymmetrical reductions by the Warsaw pact to reflect its higher force levels, even if the reductions in its forces announced recently are implemented.

US Bases

17. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation took place between the United States Administration and Her Majesty's Government prior to the submission of the addendum to the United States defence budget submitted to Congress proposing to double United states spending on British bases.

31. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation took place between the United States Administration and Her Majesty's Government prior to the submission of the addendum to the United States defence budget submitted to Congress proposing to double United States spending on British bases.

75. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation took place between the United States Administration and Her Majesty's Government prior to the submission of the addendum to the United States defence budget submitted to Congress proposing to double United States spending on British bases.

133. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation took place between the United States Administration and Her Majesty's Government prior to the submission of the addendum to the United States defence budget submitted to Congress proposing to double United States spending on British bases.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of the United States' budget plans are a matter for the United States Government, but my Department maintains close liaisen with the United States authorities on their proposals for the bases made available to them in the United Kingdom. All military construction projects at these bases require the approval of her Majesty's Government before they can proceed.

25. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had at NATO's (i) planning group and (ii) high level group about United States proposals tc enhance its military bases in the United Kingdom.

50. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had at NATO's (i) nuclear planning group and (ii) high level group about United States proposals to enhance their military bases in the United Kingdom.

80. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's (a) nuclear planning group and (b) high level group about United States proposals to enhance their military bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of nuclear planning group and high level group discussions are confidential.

40. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for burden-sharing arrangements of the proposed increase in the financial commitment of the United States to its bases in the United Kingdom.

74. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for burden-sharing arrangements of the proposed increase in the financial commitment of the United States to its bases in the United Kingdom.

102. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for burden-sharing arrangements of the proposed increase in the financial commitment of the United States to their bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for burden-sharing arrangements of the proposed increase in the financial commitment of the United States to their bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States presence in the United Kingdom is an important contribution to the sharing of risks, roles and responsibilities within the Alliance. Details of United States spending plans are, of course, a matter for the United States Government.

56. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Defence Department about its plans to build new storage vaults for nuclear bombs at a number of its military bases in the United Kingdom.

69. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Defence Department about its plans to build new storage vaults for nuclear bombs at a number of its military bases in the United Kingdom.

86. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what discussions he has had with the United States Defence Department about its plans to build new storage vaults for nuclear bombs at a number of its military bases in the United Kingdom.

121. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Defence Department about its plans to build new storage vaults for nuclear bombs at a number of its military bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is involved in continuing discussions with the United States Government on this matter.

Nuclear-Powered Vessels

18. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane, Rosyth and the Firth of Clyde caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

30. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane, Rosyth and the Firth of Clyde caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

Mr. Younger: No. Thorough monitoring of radioactivity in environmental materials and gamma dose rates in air at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth is carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The results show that public radiation exposure in these areas is consistently less than 0·1 per cent. of the limit recommended by the international commission on radiological protection. This is equivalent to the radiation which would be received during a return flight in the Glasgow shuttle. The Ministry of Defence carries out its own monitoring of these sites, and the results are consistent with those produced by MAFF.

Single Market

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence procurement implications of the implementation of the single European market.

88. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence procurement implications of the implementation of the single European market.

Mr. Sainsbury: The implementation of the single European market does not directly affect the managment of defence procurement. The implementation will, however, have an important impact on many of our suppliers, as they operate in both the civil and defence sectors of the economy.

Women (Front-line Units)

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends deploying women in front-line units of the three services.

142. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends deploying women in front-line units of the three services.

Mr. Neubert: All three services are examining ways of increasing the range of employment opportunities for women. It remains our policy that women should not be employed in direct combat roles, though they may bear arms for self-defence and the defence of certain establishments.

Defence Establishments (Explosions and Fires)

22. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent explosions and fires at defence establishments.

136. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent explosions and fires at defence establishments.

141. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent explosions and fires at defence establishments.

Mr. Sainsbury: The 1988 figures for the defence establishments, as distinct from service establishments, are 80 fires requiring fire-fighting action and two explosions. These incidents resulted in four minor casualties, and the aggregate damages are assessed to be less than £40,000.

Trident

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) of 17 January, Official Report, column 133, he will indicate the major areas of cost reduction in the Trident programme.

63. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) of 17 January, Official Report, column 133, he will indicate the major areas of cost reduction in the Trident programme.

85. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) of 17 January, Official Report, column 133, he will detail the sources of the cost savings in the Trident programme.

126. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) of 17 January, Official Report, column 133, he will detail those areas in which there has been a real reduction in costs in the Trident programme.

Mr. Younger: The £104 million real reduction in the Trident estimate since my announcement in January 1988 has arisen largely in the missile area, where there has been a reduction of about £100 million. In addition, there have been other smaller reductions of £8 million in the submarine area, and some £24 million in the equipment area. These reductions have been offset by the net effect of smaller changes in other areas of the programme.

45. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has assessed the value for money received through the purchase of Trident; and if he will make a statement.

127. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) on 17 January at column 133 and to the detailed report on Trident which I placed in the Library of the House at the same time. These show that Trident remains outstanding value for money in providing effective deterrence.

48. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which Trident will provide the United Kingdom with a credible strategic nuclear deterrent into the 21st century.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's decision to replace Polaris with Trident was based on a full assessment of what was needed to maintain the effectiveness and credibility of Britain's independent strategic nuclear deterrent into the next century.

73. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received recent representations from the Amalgamated Engineering Union about the cost of Trident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Trident remains outstanding value for money in providing effective deterrence for this country.

European Fighter Aircraft (Radar)

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest procurement plans for the EFA radar system.

43. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest procurement plans for the EFA radar system.

71. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest procurement plans for the EFA radar system.

Mr. Sainsbury: A report by the prime contractor is currently under consideration by NEFMA, the international management agency for the EFA programme, and by the collaborating nations. I would hope a decision on the winning consortium could be made early this year.

143. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had discussions with any of his counterparts in the Governments funding the European fighter aircraft on the criteria which should be taken into account in reaching a decision on which consortium should be awarded the nose radar contract; and if he will make a statement on the prospects for an early decision.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend often discusses with his counterparts the current position on a wide range of projects, including EFA. In respect of the second part of his question I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale).

Chemical Weapons

27. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the readiness of British forces to repel attack by chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom abandoned its offensive chemical warfare capability in the late 1950s but maintains an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces to deter or repel any form of attack. We also carry out extensive research at the chemical defence establishment, Porton Down, into defensive measures to protect our armed forces against an attack using chemical weapons. This includes the detection of chemical agents, the protection of personnel, and medical counter-measures. Our armed forces are trained and equipped accordingly.

96. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government intend responding to the Soviet announcement of a unilateral cut in chemical weapons.

120. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government intends responding to the Soviet announcement of a unilateral cut in chemical weapons.

134. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government intend responding to the Soviet announcement of a unilateral cut in chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We welcome the announcement by Mr. Shevardnadze that the Soviet Union intends to begin destroying some of its chemical weapons stocks, but no details have been given of the rate of destruction or the quantity and type of weapons to be destroyed. There is a long way to go before Soviet stocks, which are the largest in the world, are brought down to the level of the West's. The United Kingdom abandoned its offensive chemical warfare capability in the late 1950s and the United States observed a unilateral moratorium on the production of chemical weapons from 1969 to 1987, although the Soviet Union continued production. The United States has already begun a destruction programme of their unitary chemical weapon stocks.

29. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent bilateral discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about chemical weapons production.

32. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent bilateral discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about chemical weapons production.

66. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent bilateral discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about chemical weapons production.

129. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent bilateral discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about chemical weapons production.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with his United States counterpart on a wide range of defence issues.

130. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether stocks of United States forces nerve gas or other chemical or biological weapons are advanced-based in Britain or in any other NATO country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no such stocks in Britain. However, United States forces in Germany hold stocks of chemical weapons.

NATO Nuclear Planning Group

28. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when next he intends attending NATO's nuclear planning group.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The next meeting of the NATO nuclear planning group is due to take place in the spring in Brussels.

Redundant Land and Buildings

33. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the sale of redundant land and buildings to assist in the financing of the equipment budget.

Mr. Neubert: It is the Department's policy to keep the size of its estate under constant review and to dispose of surpluses as quickly as possible so that holdings are the minimum required for defence purposes. The resources released as a consequence are available for other high priority defence requirements.

TGWU (General Secretary)

34. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received a request from the general secretary of the Transport and General Workers Union for a briefing on defence matters prior to his visit to the Soviet Union.

123. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received a request from the general secretary of the Transport and General Workers Union for a briefing on defence matters prior to his visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Disarmament

35. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's response to the detailed conventional forces reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other eastern European Governments.

38. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's response to the detailed conventional force reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other eastern European Governments.

79. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts about a NATO response to the detailed conventional force reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

97. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions are taking place to determine NATO's response to Soviet troop withdrawals from Eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

113. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts about a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation response to the detailed conventional forces reduction announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

117. Mr George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts about a NATO response to the detailed conventional forces reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

119. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's response to the detailed conventional forces reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

124. Ms. Mowlam To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's response to the detailed conventional forces reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

135. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts about a NATO response to the detailed conventional forces reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Eastern European Governments.

144. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response to the Soviet bloc troop reduction initiative he will be advocating to Britain's NATO partners.

Mr. Archie Hamilton The countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation have welcomed the reductions announced by the Soviet Union and other Warsaw pact countries as a significant step towards the elimination of the Warsaw pact's superiorities in conventional forces in Europe. But even if the announced reductions are implemented, the Warsaw pact will continue to enjoy significant numerical superiorities in key equipments such as tanks and artillery. NATO will therefore continue with its existing policy of deterrence whilst seeking balance in conventional forces in Europe at the new conventional arms control negotiations which are scheduled to begin in Vienna in March this year.

115. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a further statement on the extent to which, following the withdrawals from eastern Europe of Soviet tanks and manpower as announced by Mr. Gorbachev, the Warsaw pact will have achieved a balance with NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: If implemented, the reductions announced by Mr. Gorbachev in December 1988, and elaborated in January 1989, would leave the Warsaw pact with an advantage over NATO in tanks and artillery of some 2·5:1. NATO countries are still analysing the recent announcements of reductions in the forces of other Warsaw pact countries. It is clear, however, that significant imbalances would remain even if these reductions were also implemented.

Low Flying

36. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from (i) German citizens and (ii) the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany seeking a reduction of low flying in Germany.

112. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from (a) German citizens and (b) the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany seeking a reduction of low flying in Germany.

Mr. Neubert: My right hon. Friend has not received any such representations from citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, but last week he had discussions with his German colleague, Dr. Scholz, about a wide range of issues of mutual interest, including ways in which it might be possible to ease the impact of low flying training on German citizens.

58. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make arrangements for independent monitoring of low-level military flying exercises to enforce regulations concerning maximum speeds and minimum heights.

Mr. Neubert: No.

70. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the expected number of low-flying exercises over Northumberland in the next 12 months.

Mr. Neubert: Whilst detailed planning has not yet been finalised, low-flying exercises activity over Northumberland this year is expected to be no greater than in recent years. I shall of course continue to give hon. Members advance notification of any significant low-flying activity which may affect their constituents.

89. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the extent of low-flying training available to the RAF in West Germany is sufficient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The present level of low-flying training available to the Royal Air Force in the Federal Republic of Germany, together with that undertaken by Royal Air Force (Germany) aircrew in the United Kingdom and elsewhere is assessed to be sufficient to enable them to carry out their essential operational training and other tasks.

99. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to reduce the amount of low-flying in Scotland.

131. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to reduce the amount of low flying in Scotland.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying military aircraft passed within one mile of East Shilton and Hinckley, Leicestershire, each month between 1 January 1988 and 31 January 1989.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is not available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort and cost.

Manpower Shortfall

37. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to deal with the expected shortfall in manpower in the 1990s.

67. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to deal with the expected shortfall in manpower in the 1990s.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 3 February 1989 at column 443.

Soviet Defence Minister

39. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the Soviet Defence Minister to discuss disarmament proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no current plans to meet the Soviet Defence Minister.

Warrior (Trials)

41. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied with the outcome of trials of Warrior.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. The extensive trialing of prototype equipment during development, which is continuing with in-service production vehicles, demonstrates that Warrior is fully meeting its performance, reliability and maintainability requirements.

NATO (Contribution)

42. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the British contributions to NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 3 February 1989 at column 445.

United States Secretary of State for Defence

44. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to meet his new American counterpart.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence met Mr. Tower at the recent Wehrkunde conference in Munich.

Central Ordnance Depot, Donnington

46. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to visit Central Ordnance Depot, Donnington to discuss with the work force his plans for contractorisation.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no plans at present to visit Donnington.

Royal Ordnance Factories (Sale)

47. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the light of the report of the Public Accounts Committee on the disposal of Royal Ordnance factories, he will make it his policy to apply for outline planning permission prior to similar sales in the future.

68. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the light of the report of the Public Accounts Committee on the disposal of Royal Ordnance factories, he will make it his policy to apply for outline planning permission prior to similar sales in the future.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 67 of the Treasury Minute on the 43rd to 48th Reports from the Committee of Public Accounts, which was published on 18 January as Cm. 563.

NATO (Nuclear Strategy)

49. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about NATO's current nuclear strategy in the light of the last NATO nuclear planning group meeting at Scheveningen.

52. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about NATO's current nuclear strategy in the light of the last NATO nuclear planning group meeting at Scheveningen.

110. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about North Atlantic Treaty Organisation current nuclear strategy in the light of the last North Atantic Treaty Organisation nuclear planning group meeting at Scheveningen.

128. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's current nuclear strategy in the light of the last NATO nuclear planning group meeting at Scheveningen.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 29 November 1988 at column 573 to the hon. Member for Deptford (Ms. Ruddock).

On-site Inspections

51. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions Warsaw pact on-site inspections have taken place in the United Kingdom under the terms of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been one such occasion: the Soviet Union conducted an inspection in the south of England under the terms of the document of the 1986 Stockholm conference from 5-7 October 1988.

Soviet Union (Units)

53. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on briefing right hon. and hon. Members undertaking visits to the Soviet Union.

138. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on briefing right hon. and hon. Members undertaking visits to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-West (Mr. Moss) earlier today.

Greenham Common

54. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Greenham common air base by United States military forces.

55. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Greenham common air base by United States military forces.

87. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Greenham common air base by United States military forces.

92. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Greenham common air base by United States military forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Greenham common has been designated as a NATO standby operating base for many years and we envisage that this role will continue after the cruise missiles are withdrawn in about two years time. No decisions have yet been taken on any additional roles for the base thereafter.

NATO Secretary General

57. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) earlier today.

Northern Ireland (Army Personnel)

59. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of Army personnel serving in Northern Ireland and the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of Army personnel (including UDR) serving in the security forces in Northern Ireland were as follows:

	Number
1 January 1989	16,007
1 January 1979	20,488

Comparable figures for the total number of service personnel serving in the security forces in the Province were 17,287 and 21,465 respectively.

HMS Shropshire

60. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to name one of Her Majesty's ships Shropshire.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has no plans at present to revive the name Shropshire for one of Her Majesty's ships. The name would be considered should a suitable opportunity arise.

Belize

61. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when next he intends to visit Belize.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby).

Defence Spares and Maintenance

62. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to make savings in defence spares and maintenance.

Mr. Neubert: We are pursuing a number of initiatives to achieve savings in defence spares and maintenance costs, through improvements in spares purchasing and repair and overhaul contracts, better resource management supported by investment in information technology, and improved reliability and maintainability of equipment.

Wehrkunde Conference

64. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends attending the Wehrkunde conference.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend attended this year's Wehrkunde conference in Munich on 28 and 29 January.

Stock Levels

65. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total level of stocks held by the Ministry of Defence at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Neubert: In addition to any stocks which may be held to meet specific war reserve or contingency requirements the Ministry of Defence holds working stocks, the levels of which vary according to factors such as shelf life, the rate of consumption, economic order quantity and lead times for replacement. Typically stock levels range from two months for items readily available from commercial sources to eight years for those which are not for example, for support of refurbishment programmes for major specialised equipments.

Naval Procurement

72. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the naval procurement programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979, the Government have ordered a total of 64 vessels at a cost in excess of £6 billion. The acceptance of HMS Trenchant, a Trafalgar class submarine, will bring the number of these vessels subsequently accepted into service to 40. The vessels currently under construction comprise two Trident submarines, two further Trafalgar class submarines and four conventional Upholder class submarines, as well as two type 22 and seven type 23 frigates, five of a new class of single role minehunters and two of a new class of auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels. The Government expect to invite tenders for a further batch of type 23 frigates and to order a third Trident submarine later this year. In addition, although orders are not envisaged for this year, tenders have already been invited for an aviation support ship, and we are in the process of evaluating the results of feasibility studies into the replacement of the capability currently provided by the assault ships Fearless and Intrepid.

Women Pilots

76. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the recruitment and training of women pilots following the comments made by the new Chief of the Air Staff.

Mr. Neubert: Whilst there are no current plans to change our policy preventing women from undertaking directly combatant duties, the Royal Air Force is currently studying the possibility of employing women in some pilot roles.

RAF Officer and Aircrew Selection Centre, Biggin Hill

77. Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to visit the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre at Biggin Hill before the proposed transfer of the centre to RAF Cranwell.

Mr. Neubert: I have no plans to do so.

Efficiency and Savings

78. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what success he has had in persuading the services to implement efficiency and savings.

81. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what success he has had in persuading the services to implement efficiency and savings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 3 February at column 443.

Procurement

82. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

118. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

132. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

95. Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he will take as chairman of the Independent European Programme Group to promote the objective of European collaboration in the supply of defence equipment as set out in the Luxembourg communiqué of 9 November 1988.

116. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's efforts to date to secure Europe wide procurement harmonisation and reciprocity; if he will discuss these matters with his NATO counterparts; and when he next expects to discuss these matters with the secretary-general of NATO.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Luxembourg communiqué contained a wide range of measures designed to increase the effectiveness of European armaments co-operation, most particularly by creating a European market for defence equipment. Our aim during the chairmanship is to make concrete progress towards this by focusing on a number of specific objectives, with milestones for achievement. We shall be seeking our IEPG partners' agreement to these objectives which will include proposals for the opening up of the market to the benefit of all IEPG countries (through, for instance, the publication of bidding opportunities); measures to enhance research co-operation through a European technology programme; and intensified efforts to harmonise requirements and identify viable projects for co-operation. We believe that progress in these areas will strengthen the European contribution to NATO, and therefore benefit the Alliance as a whole.

111. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent developments to ensure value for money in procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 20 June 1988 column 221.

Dog Training (Review)

83. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest position regarding the review of dog training at the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Peat Marwick McLintock report on training arrangements has been received by the Ministry and its contents are being considered. In arriving at a decision, account will be taken on the points previously made by my hon. Friend.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

84. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the decommissioning of Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 9 May 1988 at column 2.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to distribute iodine tablets to residents of a town near a nuclear submarine base in the event of a major containment failure of a pressurised water reactor on a nuclear submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Arrangements are in place at ports where nuclear submarines are permitted to berth to ensure the prompt distribution of stable iodine to those at risk in the very unlikely event of a containment failure leading to the release of radioactive iodine. Formal contact is maintained with the relevant public authorities who, together with their naval counterparts, review these arrangements on a regular basis and thereby keep them fully up-to-date.

Drugs

90. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his campaign to reduce drug taking among service men.

Mr. Neubert: Drug abuse is not a major problem in the armed forces. Nevertheless the services pursue a vigorous programme of education and prevention. Several new drug abuse prevention films have been made recently and the three services' specialist drug detection teams were strengthened following a rise in convictions in the early 1980s. A drop in convictions each year since 1984 gives reasonable grounds to believe that these measures are proving successful. The services are aware of the need for constant vigilance.

European Defence Procurement

91. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the main recent achievements of his Department in furthering European defence procurement.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the main recent achievements of his Department in furthering European defence procurement.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the main recent achievements of his Department in furthering European defence procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There have been a number of recent achievements to add to our successful history of equipment collaboration with our European partners. For example, in the last six months memoranda of understanding (MoUs) have been signed for the development phase of the European fighter aircraft (EFA) and the third generation of anti-tank weapon (TRIGAT).

A further valuable recent achievement has been the Anglo-French reciprocal purchasing initiative, launched in 1987 with the aim of encouraging cross-channel competitive bidding so as to create a more open market in defence equipment between Britain and France. These various measures, and plans to implement greater coherence and co-ordination of research spending, should result in greater value for money in procurement and a stronger European contribution to NATO defence. As holders of the IEPG chair for the next two years, the United Kingdom will be concerned to press ahead with the action plan already agreed in pursuit of these objectives.

Foulness

93. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to visit the defence establishments at Foulness.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence, has no plans at present to visit AWE Foulness.

RAF Molesworth

94. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Royal Air Force Molesworth.

104. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on 3 February at column 444.

Western European Union

100. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the recent British contribution to the Western European Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has held the Presidency of the WEU Council of Ministers since 1 July 1988. Four main priorities were established for our Presidency: these were set out in my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) and for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 29 November 1988 at column 227.

Competitive Tendering

101. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings have been achieved through competition in RAF equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department has achieved significant cost savings on equipment for each of the three services through the adoption of a commercial approach to defence procurement, which includes, of course, a greater emphasis on competition. Eleven examples, where savings totalling some £105 million had been made, were included in the 1988 statement on the Defence Estimates. Four of the examples were of RAF equipment. However, it is not possible to calculate the cumulative total savings, nor the savings achieved for an individual service, since the adoption of the commercial approach in the early 1980s.

Attack Helicopter

103. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to purchase a new attack helicopter.

Mr. Sainsbury: Studies are in progress to investigate possible options for replacing the Army's anti-armour helicopters.

NATO

106. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans his Department has for celebrating the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 22 December 1988 at columns 377-78.

RAF Widows

107. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representatons he has received concerning compensaton payments to the widows of Royal Air Force personnel killed in the Chinook helicopter accident in the Falkland Islands on 27 February 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: A number of representations have been received from hon. Members and from others. Formal claims on behalf of the dependants of five of the Royal Air Force personnel who lost their lives on 27 February 1987 were commenced by solicitors in August 1987. Since then, correspondence has continued between the solicitors and the Department, whose claims branch is awaiting the completion of all necessary inquiries into the incident, including the results of an inquest by Her Majesty's coroner. Once these inquiries have been completed, it is hoped to be able to come to a decision very quickly on any ex-gratia compensation which might be payable.

Nuclear Waste (Storage)

108. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position regarding his proposals to locate a nuclear waste storage facility in the Plymouth area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is still considering the next step following Plymouth city council's objection to the notice of proposed development for this project.

Submarines (Irish Sea)

109. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding incidents involving fishing boats and submarines in the Irish sea; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 14 November 1988 at column 413.

Horseshoe Barracks, Shoeburyness

114. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet made a decision on the future of the Horseshoe barracks in Shoeburyness, Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Horseshoe barracks is surplus to Ministry of Defence requirements and we expect to dispose of it on the open market once existing facilities have been reprovided elsewhere. We are currently reviewing the boundary of the area to be released following the recent visit to Shoeburyness by the historic military buildings committee and will be consulting closely with Southend borough council when drawing up our plans for the disposal of the site.

Weapons

122. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the respective levels of (a) conventional, (b) nuclear and (c) chemical weapons between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In respect of information on conventional and nuclear force levels, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 29 November 1988 at columns 226-27. The broad assessment that I gave then has not changed. No equivalent information is available on chemical weapons, but it is clear that the Soviet Union is the world's largest holder of stock of such weapons, even from the levels of stocks which the Soviet Union has acknowledged possessing, which are, however, significantly below western estimates of the total Soviet stockpile.

INF Treaty (Inspections)

125. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the on-site inspections provided by the intermediate range nuclear forces treaty are working satisfactorily; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, the system of on-site inspections provided for under the terms of the treaty on the elimination of United States and Soviet intermediate range missiles has operated satisfactorily in so far as it affects the United Kingdom. Both the United States and Soviet Governments have also expressed satisfaction with the conduct of the on-site inspections. Soviet inspectors have visited the United Kingdom three times since the treaty took effect on 1 June 1988: on 19-22 July 1988 baseline inspections were conducted at RAF Greenham common and RAF Molesworth; on 31 October to 2 November 1988 a short-notice inspection from their annual quota was conducted at RAF Molesworth; and on 18-20 January 1989 a close-out inspection was conducted at RAF Molesworth, together with a short-notice inspection from their annual quota at RAF Greenham common.

Disaster Relief

137. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the role of the services in disaster relief over the past year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been a number of instances in the past year, both at home and abroad, where the armed forces provided emergency assistance to the civil authorities in disaster relief.

In the United Kingdom, very extensive assistance was provided in the aftermath of the tragic air crash at Lockerbie in December 1988, and help was also provided following the air crash at Kegworth in January 1989.

In addition, RAF fixed and rotary-wing aircraft and Royal Navy ships and rotary-wing aircraft assisted in many rescue and recovery operations, including the Piper Alpha and Ocean Odyssey oil rig disasters.

Abroad, the Royal Navy were first on the scene to provide effective relief in the wake of hurricane Gilbert in Jamaica in September. The RAF flew in much needed supplies, and the Army spent three weeks on the island carrying out repairs to buildings and services.

After the severe earthquake in Nepal in August, the British military hospital at Dharan treated over 700 Nepalese casualties, carrying out over 300 operations; additional medical personnel and medical supplies were also flown in.

Following the damage which Cyclone Uma caused to roads and bridges in Vanuatu in 1987, a team of Royal Engineers has been carrying out a reconstruction programme.

Most recently, after the earthquake in Armenia in December, the Ministry of Defence supplied over 70,000 ration packs as part of Her Majesty's Government's £5 million relief package. Medical supplies were provided to the Red Cross, and the Army provided specialised microphones to detect people under the wreckage.

Sports

139. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the allocation of resources for sports activities as between officers and men.

Mr. Neubert: Resources for sports activities are allocated for the use of all service personnel regardless of rank.

Defence Products (Sales)

140. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special steps he plans to take to promote sales of British defence products.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British defence industry has an excellent record of export achievement. We shall do everything possible within the necessary constraints of our national policies to ensure that this success continues.

YTS

145. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel currently serving in the Royal Air Force joined through the YTS.

Mr. Neubert: As at 1 January 1989, 1,564 serving personnel (960 airmen and 604 airwomen) had been accepted for regular service with the Royal Air Force following training under the armed services youth training scheme.

Anti-ballistic Missiles

146. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of his Department's study of anti-ballistic missile defence systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 January 1989 at column 754.

Glengarry Forest (Transmitter)

147. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is expected that the trial extremely low frequency transmitter station at Glengarry forest will be commissioned.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is anticipated that, subject to local planning permission, the construction of the Glengarry experimental extremely low frequency transmitter should take place in 1991 and 1992, but test transmissions are unlikely to start until the following year.

Atomic Weapons Testing (Compensation)

148. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the compensation claims of the nuclear test veterans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The judgment by the House of Lords last year in the case of Mr. Melvyn Pearce made it possible for those who, like him, participated in the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons test programme in the Pacific, to pursue claims in the courts for damages. The Government cannot accept that the Crown is legally liable for the ill-health suffered by Mr. Pearce and others like him allegedly arising from their participation in the test programme, and proposes to contest the claims. Solicitors acting for both sides in the case of Mr. Pearce are currently discussing the disclosure of relevant documents for the purposes of litigation.

105. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had about compensating those affected by British atomic weapons testing in Australia.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin).

Helicopters

149. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on long-term helicopter procurement policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Procurement policy for helicopters, as for other equipment, is aimed at meeting defence requirements in the most cost-effective way. The strategy adopted in individual cases will be determined against the criteria set out in Open Government, document 83/01, "Value for Money in Defence Procurement", a copy of which is in the Library.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of Royal Air Force Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on 3 February 1989 at column 444.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 8 February 1989

HOME DEPARTMENT

Isle of Man

99. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Manx Government; and what matters relating to the representation abroad of the interests of the Manx Government were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend met members of the Executive Council of the Isle of Man in September1987. No matters relating to the representation abroad of the interests of the Manx Government were discussed on that occasion, but Home Office Ministers and officials are in regular contact with the Isle of Man Government on matters concerning the island.

Services for Deaf People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by police authorities; if he is satisfied with the availability of interpreters for deaf people in contact with the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is an operational matter for the police to obtain the services of a suitably qualified interpreter for the deaf in appropriate cases. The Home Office has no record of the numbers of such interpreters whose services are used by the police. Such information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Guidance to the police on interviewing suspects who are deaf is contained in the codes of practice issued in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and in Home Office circular 88/85, copies of which are in the Library. Code C, for the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers, advises the police that most local authority social services departments can supply a list of suitably qualified interpreters.

The Home Office is currently reviewing the first four codes of practice issued. The views of a wide range of organisations (including those representing the deaf) have been sought and will be taken fully into account.

Economic League

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Economic League is registered under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: The Economic League has a single entry in the data protection register, a copy of which is in the Library, covering its processing of personal data for the administration of the organisation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to enact legislation to ensure that people blacklisted by the Economic League can obtain access to the files that have caused their blacklisting to check that information.

Mr. Renton: No.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight, 20 January, Official Report, column 350, what action is being taken to reduce the time taken to deal with claims for compensation by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have provided extra resources which have enabled the board to open a new office in Glasgow, to increase its staff in post from 220 in 1987 to 320 now, and to finance the resulting increase in the number of awards made. We are also reviewing administrative procedures with the board with the aim of reducing the time taken to resolve claims.

Custody Time Limits

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the further extension of custody time limits.

Mr. Hurd: I intend to lay regulations which will, with effect from 1 June, extend custody time limits to Cambridgeshire, Cumbria, Cleveland, Derbyshire, Durham, Hereford and Worcester, Humberside, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Merseyside, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Northumbria, North Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, South Yorkshire, Suffolk, Warwickshire, and West Yorkshire. In the west midlands, the time limit to committal will be reduced from 84 to 70 days in all petty sessions areas except Birmingham where it will remain 84 days. The regulations will also apply with custody limits to serious fraud cases transferred to the Crown court under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1987.

Probation Officers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form the information he has, using age bands, for each five-year period from 1965 to the most recent year for which figures are available, on the ages of individuals appointed to be senior probation officers;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the information he has, in age bands and in tabular form, on the ages of individuals appointed to be probation officers since 1965 who were (i) under 28 years of age and (ii) between 28 years of age and 65 years of age.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, if it is available at all.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list Rugby League football clubs together with the following information for each of them during the 1987-88 season: (a) the number of matches played at their grounds, (b) the total season's attendance, (c) the total arrests in association with such matches, (d) the average attendance per match, (e) the average number of arrests per match and (f) the arrests as a proportion of the attendance.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 26 January 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

No information is collected centrally about the numbers of arrests at Rugby League matches. Attendance figures and matches played at the grounds of Rugby League clubs in the 1987-88 season were:

Division 1	Number of matches at ground	Total attendance	Average attendance per match
Bradford Northern	14	68,674	4,905

Police Surgeons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review present arrangements for the work of general practitioners who act as part-time police surgeons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 27 January 1989 at column 769.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Borrowing

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown from the latest available data of the major types of borrowers in the public and private sectors of the economy.

Mr. Major: Information on borrowing is given in the CSO's monthly publication "Financial Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House. Section 1 provides a unified set of financial data for all the main sectors of the economy. Subsequent sections give various breakdowns by financial instrument and source appropriate to individual sectors. Also given is an industry analysis of borrowing from the monetary sector.

EC (Indirect Taxation)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will report on his discussions with the European Commissioner for taxation and customs union on 19 January; and how far these discussions advanced the planned approximation of indirect taxes within the Community.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer had a useful discussion with Madame Scrivener which I hope will pave the way for further constructive exchanges in the future. The Government remain of the view that indirect tax approximation is unnecessary for the completion of the single market.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he intends to put to the Council of Ministers on 13 February to advance the planned approximation of indirect taxes within the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has already suggested an alternative, market-based approach to indirect taxation in the single market, which remains on the table for future discussions.

VAT

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on proposed changes to value added tax zero rating of supplies to non-domestic consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I assume that the hon. Gentleman has in mind the changes in VAT zero rating resulting from last June's judgment of the European Court of Justice which were announced in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 6 February. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received, and taken fully into account, a large number of representations about the implementation of this judgment.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what additional revenue would accrue from proposed changes to implement value added tax standard rating of supplies to university halls of residence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: None. No changes are proposed to the VAT zero rating of supplies of new construction services and fuel and power to university halls of residence.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify each donation which the Overseas Development Administration has made in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Chris Patten: The ODA has made three responses to public appeals since 1979, in each case to appeals launched by the disasters emergency committee of major voluntary agencies following disasters overseas. These are:

December 1987, for famine victims in Ethiopia	2,000,000
August 1988, for flood victims in Sudan	1,000,000
August 1988, for flood victims in Bangladesh	1,000,000

These figures exclude the ODA's responses to the many appeals to donor Governments from the United Nations and other international agencies.

Amazonia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of Her Majesty's Government's contribution to development projects in the Amazonian area of Brazil; and what measures are taken to ensure that these projects do not result in the destruction of tropical rain forests.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have jointly funded with non-governmental agencies nine projects assisting the people of the Amazonian region at a cost of about £77,000 and we are providing £80,000 to the Maraca rain forest project which conducts research into forest regeneration. International organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member have supported projects in the region, but we do not have information detailing disbursements under individual loans provided through these channels. Environmental conditions have normally been attached to such loans.

Afghanistan

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to provide aid to meet current humanitarian needs in Kabul.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have provided £60 million of aid for the victims of war in Afghanistan since 1980, including £10 million in the current financial year. In addition, I have just agreed a further contribution of £500,000, particularly to meet current mother and child relief needs; £250,000 of this is being channelled through UNICEF and £250,000 is for the International Committee of the Red Cross relief programmes.

SCOTLAND

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates in the period 1979 to 1988 the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland has visited Lennox Castle hospital; and when the commission first indicated to Greater Glasgow health board its anxieties about conditions there.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the discharge of its functions under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, the Mental Welfare Commission has visited Lennox Castle hospital on the following occasions:

Programmed visits
28 November 1984
23 October 1985
26 November 1986
13 April 1988

Special visits
2 August 1985
7 January 1988
9 December 1988

Prior to 1984, visits were confined to those by individual medical commissioners for the purposes of interviewing patients and such visits continue on an annual basis.

The commission first commented adversely about some aspects of the facilities at Lennox Castle following the visit on 28 November 1984. The Greater Glasgow health board has embarked on a major rebuilding and upgrading programme; two new, purpose-designed intensive care units have been built, and four wards substantially upgraded at a cost of £3·8 million. A recurring increase of £2 million, or 18 per cent. of the mental handicap budget, has been approved by the board in the current year for the recruitment of additional staff and support in the community.

The board has committed itself to making Lennox Castle a centre of excellence and is making the necessary provision to achieve that objective.

Training Schemes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many workers in Scotland are presently employed in Government-sponsored training schemes; what this represents as a proportion of the work force; and what are the figures for each o the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on numbers participating in Government training programmes is available only for YTS and the community programme and from 1984 onwards. Participants in these programmes as a proportion of the civilian work force since 1984 are set out in the table:

Year	(a)[1] Numbers in YTS and community programme	(b)[1] Civilian work force	(a) as a percentage of (b)
1984	44,958	2,083	2·2
1985	50,304	2,109	2·4
1986	59,307	2,100	2·8
1987	68,464	2,089	3·3
1988	77,117	2,108	3·6

[1]At 31 March.

At present some 49,000 young people are participating in YTS and almost 20,000 people in employment training (which from September 1988 replaced the community programme and all other adult training measures).

Housing

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the net spending on housing, in real terms, in 1978-79, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 1987-88 prices Scottish net public housing expenditure in 1978-79 was £1,191 million, almost half on general subsidies to the housing stock; estimated expenditure in 1988-89 is £607 million, and planned expenditure in 1989-90 and 1990-91 £537 million and £557 million respectively. Gross capital expenditure on housing at 1987-88 prices was £691 million in 1978-79 and £833 million in 1988-89, and is planned to be £818 million and £766 million in 1989-90 and 1990-91. None of these figures includes housing benefit expenditure.

Scottish Trades Union Congress (Health Matters)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the date of all communications received by him from the Scottish Trades Union Congress on health matters since September 1988 and the date of his reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Date of communication	Date of reply
7 September 1988	8 February 1989
6 January 1989	26 January 1989
20 January 1989	31 January 1989

A further letter from the Scottish Trades Union Congress dated 3 February was also received by me on 6 February.

Cervical/Cytology

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board for each of the last three years the number of cervical smears carried out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not currently available in the form requested, but arrangements are under way to collect it on a health board basis.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he has any information from Greater Glasgow health board on the starting date for the improvement work to the accident and emergency department of Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The main part of the programme to upgrade accident and emergency services at Glasgow royal infirmary started on site in October 1988 with an expected date of completion of April 1990. However, to allow that work to start, other linked schemes were put in hand in November 1987 so that part of the accident and emergency workload could be dealt with elsewhere.

Pharmacists

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the establishment level of hospital pharmacists for each health board in Scotland, and the actual number of pharmacists employed in each board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following table gives the information as at 31 December 1987:

Health board	Establishment level (Whole time equivalents)	Staff in post (Whole time equivalents)
Argyll and Clyde	26	25
Ayrshire and Arran	25	24·3
Borders	6	7
Dumfries and Galloway	8·3	7·3
Fife	20	19
Forth Valley	17·3	17·3
Grampian[1]	35	32
Greater Glasgow	133·9	122·9
Highland	14·8	14·8
Lanarkshire	30·7	28·7
Lothian	83·7	79·7
Tayside	47·3	46·7
Western Isles	2	2

[1]Grampian health board provides also hospital pharmaceutical services for Orkney and Shetland health boards.

Blood Products

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many units of blood products were supplied to (a) commercial medical establishments and (b) other private hospitals by the Scottish blood transfusion service in each year since 1982, what was the cost of these supplies in each year, and what was the revenue income in each year from such sales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Supplied to the private sector Units of whole blood and platelet depleted blood	Units of red cell concentrates	Revenue received (£)
1983	650	830	Nil
1984	560	1,600	1,915
1985	730	2,300	27,287
1986	494	2,509	34,032
1987	385	2,755	45,380
1988	286	3,384	54,557

Notes:

1. Other blood products are occasionally supplied, in small quantities, to the private sector.
2. Receipts relate to all blood and blood products supplied.
3. Receipts will not necessarily be brought to account in the year of supply.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the review of handling charges for blood, blood products and plasma units to private medical establishments by the blood transfusion service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department received the preliminary results of the review on 31 January 1989. I shall write to the hon. Member once a decision has been taken.

Water Orders

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average length of time taken by his Department to deal with an application for approval of a water order; when the initial draft of the water order for Allt Bail'un Tuim, Bhuidhe in Glenmoriston was submitted to the Scottish Office by Highland regional council; when he expects to be able to give approval; and if he will make a statement on the length of time taken to process this water order.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average time from submission of a preliminary draft to making a water order is about 20 months. The initial draft of the Allt Bail'un Tuim Bhuidhe water order was submitted on 22 July 1987. Engineering appraisal and consultation within the Scottish Office was followed by several rounds of correspondence with the council. Statutory procedures, including an advertising stage which allows for objections to the Secretary of State, have still to be completed and I cannot say when the order will be made. The time taken to deal with this order reflects the degree of consultation and consideration required, and is not unusual. The procedures are designed to safeguard the rights of all parties who may be affected.

Deaf People (Services)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified social workers with specialist training for work with people who are deaf are currently employed in Scotland by (a) social work departments, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) other bodies; how many have completed training in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally. Qualifying training "is designed to import the basic knowledge and skills required for social work generally". There is at present no formal specialist training course for those wishing to work exclusively or primarily with deaf people. However the Open university, with financial support from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health, is developing a course which will be available to social work staff throughout the United Kingdom who wish to specialise in this area.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by public bodies in Scotland; how many have been trained in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive information of the kind requested is not held centrally. I understand that there are 15 interpreters on a register maintained by the Scottish Association of Sign Language Interpreters, which also undertakes their training. The latest information on trainees is as follows:

	Number
1983	2
1984	1
1985	3
1986	—
1987	1

In 1988-89 grant of £18,580 will be paid to the association towards training and running costs generally.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of sessions contributed by the 127 honorary consultants in Greater Glasgow health board hospitals and clinics; on what basis remuneration is calculated; and what the total remuneration is expected to be in the current financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 726 sessions. Honorary consultants remain employees of their parent authority and their honorary contracts with the health board are unpaid appointments. The cost of any distinction awards for which they are eligible is however reimbursed to the parent authority by the National Health Service. Greater Glasgow health board spent £1·5 million on reimbursement between 1 February 1988 and 1 February 1989.

NHS (Market Research)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many market research studies of the National Health Service have been commissioned since 1979; which companies undertook them; what the remit was in each case; and what the budget was in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The only market research study undertaken nationally has been the survey recently carried out by Research Surveys of Great Britain Ltd. at a cost of £105,000 plus VAT. The study was designed to investigate consumers' experience of and attitudes to the National Health Service, and to discover whether, and if so how, the public wish the service to change.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which company or body is conducting the present market research study of the National Health Service in Scotland; and whether the sample size is drawn from the general public or from within the National Health Service itself.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The company which conducted the study is Research Surveys of Great Britain Ltd. The sample was designed to include in-patients, out-patients, GP patients and the general public.

Southern General Hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been received from patients or other members of the public about the accident and emergency unit at the Southern general hospital in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of complaints received by the board is as follows:

Year	Number of complaints
1984	4
1985	5
1986	8
1987	5
1988	5

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of the number of jobs attributable to forestry in each of the regions of the United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in that form.

HEALTH

Irradiated Rodent Corpses

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods have been used for the disposal of irradiated rodent carcases used in radiation experimental work by the Medical Research Council and hospitals involved in medical radiation research.

Mr. Freeman: The disposal of irradiated rodent carcases used in radiation experimental work are subject to authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The disposal routes for such carcases would be

(1) incineration and landfill; or
(2) landfill disposal; or
(3) maceration and sweage disposal.

The route chosen would depend on the level of radioactivity and whether full pathological control is necessary.

National Health Service Costs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what 3 per cent. of the Thames regions' budgets represents in cash terms for the current year.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

3 per cent. of 1988-89 revenue allocations

	£ million
North West Thames	28·0
North East Thames	34·6
South East Thames	30·3
South West Thames	24·5

The figures include cash limit adjustments made up to 6 February 1989. They exclude transfers between revenue and capital.

Leighton Hospital, Crewe

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his undertaking in the Official Report, 17 January, column 316, when he intends to provide a detailed reply to the speech of the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich in her Adjournment debate.

Mr. Freeman: I wrote to the hon. Lady on 8 February.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what considerations he has given to the implications for the ambulance service of the establishment of National Health Service hospital trusts and the creation of a national internal market for health services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The review proposals including the establishment of NHS hospital trusts will not affect the ambulance service's responsibility for transporting free of charge patients whom a clinician has determined are medically unfit to travel by other means.

General Practitioners

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds he proposes to make available to the successor bodies to family practitioner committees to provide for adequate monitoring of the effect on general practitioners working in sole practices of his proposals to relate a higher proportion of general practitioners' income to list sizes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As stated in paragraph 13.3 of "Working for Patients" (Cm 555), the costs of implementing reforms will be considered as part of the annual public expenditure surveys. However, changes to the general practitioners' contract to place more emphasis on capitation will not discriminate between single practices, group practices and partnerships and I see no need for the monitoring proposed.

Services for Deaf People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified workers with specialist training for work with people who are deaf are currently employed in England by (a) social services departments, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) other bodies; how many have completed training in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information centrally on the nature of the work carried out by particular social workers. The two post-qualifying training courses for social workers with deaf people in London and Edinburgh closed in 1984 and there is at present no formal training course. However, the Department is currently providing substantial financial support towards the development of a distance learning course to be run by the Open university from 1991.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by public bodies in England; how many have been trained in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information centrally on the numbers of interpreters for the deaf employed by public bodies or the number trained. However, we continue to give financial support to the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People. The council arranges training courses in communication with deaf people and maintains a register of interpreters. We are also in touch with the panel of four main voluntary organisations in the deafness field about future interpreting needs.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for the latest year for which figures are available, the total number of tranquillisers of all varieties which were prescribed to National Health Service patients and the percentage that these drugs represented of all drugs prescribed to National Health Service patients, together with the total value of these tranquillisers and as a percentage of the total cost of National Health Service drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In England in 1987 the number of prescriptions for tranquillisers, sedatives and hypnotics dispensed by community pharmacists was 24·3 million or 7·4 per cent. of all prescriptions for drugs dispensed by them. The net ingredient cost of tranquillisers, sedatives and hypnotics was £32·5 million or 2·2 per cent. of the net ingredient cost for all drugs dispensed by community pharmacists.

Hospitals (Management)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will outline his proposals for how the procedures by which individual hospitals will become independent management units will be initiated, and by whom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) explains that it will be open to a variety of interests either to initiate an application to establish an NHS hospital trust or to respond to an initiative taken by the Secretary of State. I will shortly issue a working paper giving further information about the plans for NHS hospital trusts.

Regrading

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many, and what proportions of, nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated in new grades as at the latest date for which figures are available in the Worthing health authority and the Chichester health authority; and what comparable figures he has in regional health authorities in England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The only information available relates to the initial regrading on the basis of duties and responsibilities on 1 April 1988. Tables showing the numbers of nursing and midwifery staff assimilated from each of the old grades to each of the new grades, by district and by region, are in the Library. The information requested on the proportions of staff is now ready and has been placed in the Library also.

Aplastic Anaemia

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people were recorded as suffering from aplastic anaemia in 1988 and in each of the last five years;

(2) if he will list by year for the last five years, by district health authority the number of cases of aplastic anaemia that have been reported; how many of these cases were fatal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The available information is given in the tables. Figures by district health authority are not available centrally.

Cook-Chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the production of cook-chill food to be carried out in Wakefield health authority's central production unit will be subject to the requirements of regulation 27 of the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations;

(2) if the various elements of the production of cook-chill food which are to be carried out away from Wakefield health authority's central production unit are subject to regulation 27 of the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Regulation 27 is a legal requirement only where food is for immediate consumption. However, my Department's guidelines for all cook-chill catering in the NHS require temperatures that fall well within those specified under regulation 27 and we expect NHS health authority management to meet these requirements.

DEFENCE

Soviet Union (Defence Cuts)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he proposes to make to the recent defence cutbacks made by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), for Glasgow, Central (Mr. McTaggart), for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies), for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth), for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam), for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron), and for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), and to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 7 February.

NATO

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 29 November 1988 at column 567.

Nevada Test Site

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the financial cost attributed to the annual defence budget and paid to the United States Government to implement environmental clean-up at the Nevada test site following the testing of United Kingdom nuclear warheads at the site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the continuing absence of escapes of radioactivity from these underground tests, no such costs arise.

Potton Island, Essex

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of the clean-up of Potton island in Essex following the nuclear materials testing programme in the 1950s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No firings have been carried out on Potton island at any time which involved radioactive materials. There is an ongoing decontamination exercise on Potton island to ensure that the area is clear of conventional munitions and explosives, and, although the final sum will not be known until the end of the exercise, the cost of the initial decontamination was some £40,000.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many undergraduates from universities and other institutions of higher education are employed during the summer vacation at atomic weapons establishment sites.

Mr. Sainsbury: About 50 such students are employed at AWE, mostly at Aldermaston, during their summer vacation.

COMECON (Travel)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions since 1979 permission for emigration to, or travel within, the Soviet Union or other COMECON countries has been denied to applicants formerly employed at the atomic weapons research establishments;

(2) on how many occasions since 1979 permission for emigration to, or travel within, the Soviet Union or other COMECON eastern bloc countries has been denied to applicants formerly employed at the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 26 January 1989 at column 704.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration he has given to the implications for the defence of the United Kingdom arising out of the construction of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he proposes to take any measures to protect the Channel tunnel against enemy action in time of war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The implications for the defence of the United Kingdom arising from the construction of the Channel fixed link, and the defence of the Channel fixed link itself, are under consideration as part of normal defence planning.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implication for the discharge of the United Kingdom's obligation to NATO arising out of the construction of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 12 January 1989 at columns 724-25.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Deaf People (Court Interpreters)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Attorney-General how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by the court services; if he is satisfied with the availability of interpreters for deaf people in contact with the courts; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In the Crown court and in civil proceedings it is the responsibility of the party to the proceedings requiring the services of an interpreter, either for himself or for a witness, to make the necessary arrangements to secure their attendance at any conference with legal advisers or at court. Some Crown court centres maintain a register of interpreters although they are under no obligation to do so. Such registers are compiled from lists supplied by the police and a court will make the list available if requested to do so. I know of no difficulties arising in the courts for which the Lord Chancellor is administratively responsible as a result of the present arrangements.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Handicapped Children

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to give the parents of handicapped children the same rights as those of able-bodied children to choose to which schools they wish to send their children.

Mr. Butcher: Parents of handicapped children without statements of special educational needs under the Education Act 1981 already have the same choice of school rights as other parents. For those children with statements, local education authorities are required to seek medical, educational and psychological advice, and any other advice considered necessary, including parental views. My right hon. Friend believes that the most suitable school placements for children with statements should continue to be based on that advice.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy in relation to making adjustments to the volume of block grants to universities to reflect any significant changes to the taxation liabilities of universities;

(2) whether the present vote provision for 1989-90 in respect of grants to universities was calculated to take account of changes in value added tax regulations now proposed to take effect in that year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The provision for universities for 1989-90 announced in the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 612) includes a compensating adjustment in respect of the impact on universities of the introduction of VAT on new construction from 1 April 1989. Changes in taxation arrangements do not automatically lead to changes in public funding; they will be taken into account as appropriate in reaching decisions on the level of provision for universities, which are not deficit funded.

VAT

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from individuals or bodies concerned with education on the subject of proposed changes to value added tax zero rating of supplies to non-domestic consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A small number of representations have been received about the changes which are to be introduced from 1 July 1990. School and student boarding accommodation will be regarded as domestic use and will continue to be zero rated for supplies of fuel and power.

Southwark Director of Education

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on which dates since 1 January 1988 he has met the director of education of the Southwark diocese; at which of these meetings city technology colleges in the Southwark diocese have been discussed; at which of these meetings the future of the sites reserved for education by the London Docklands development corporation in Surrey docks, London SE16, has been discussed; and on which of these dates the future of Bacon's school, London SE1 and London SE16, has been discussed.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has had three meetings with the director of education of the Southwark diocese since 1 January 1988. At meetings on 29 September, 6 December and 12 January 1989, there was some discussion of options for the future of Bacon's school, whether on its present site or on a relocated site in the Surrey docks. Should the diocesan board of Education and the governors of the school wish to see the existing school closed to make way for a city technology college, the governors would need the approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under section 14 of the 1944 Education Act.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 3 February 1989, c. 409]: I regret that part of the information given to the hon. Member was incorrect.

This Department's specific contribution to the European University Institute in 1987-88 was £1,232,000.

PRIME MINISTER

Non-ministerial Appointments

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list, and give details of remuneration for, all those non-ministerial appointments which are in her gift as Prime Minister and to which a salary per annum is attached of more than (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £50,000, (f) £60,000, (g) £70,000, (h) £80,000, (i) £90,000, (j) £100,000, (k) £110,000 and (l) £120,000.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the replies that I gave to the right hon. Member on 31 January 1988 at column 149 and 2 February 1989 at column 425.

ENERGY

Research Projects

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the scope and the level of funding for research projects commissioned by his Department from groups led by Messrs. Lawrence Draper and Malcolm Tucker; and what work Messrs. Draper and Tucker are currently doing for his Department.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the period from 1977 to date my Department has commissioned research at the Institute of Oceanographic Sciencies (IOS) involving Messrs. Lawrence Draper and Malcolm Tucker on the measurement and analysis of wave climate in United Kingdom waters and the kinetics of waves. The level of funding for this work is in excess of £2 million.

Mr. Malcolm Tucker, who retired from IOS in 1986, is currently retained as a consultant by my Department to provide expert advice on environmental data. Mr. Lawrence Draper is currently associated with three IOS projects funded by my Department covering wave climate measurements around the United Kingdom, guidance on oceanographic design parameters and provision of expert advice on oceanography.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his assessment of the importance of the data on wave climate collected by Messrs. Lawrence Draper and Malcolm Tucker of the Institute of Oceanographic Sciences to the development of oil and gas reserves in the North Sea;

(2) if he will give an estimate of the value, in terms of lives saved, oil and gas production and economic benefit, of the availability of wave data prior to the exploitation of Britain's offshore oil and gas reserves.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department—advised on safety research and development by technology boards with members from the oil industry, the certifying authorities and the academic world—has identified specific projects relating to wave data which have contributed to the safe and economic design of offshore structures.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many contracts British Nuclear Fuels plc has signed with foreign customers for the storage and reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel since 1973; and if he will seek the permission of the British Nuclear Fuels plc chairman to publish the value of each of these respective contracts in pounds sterling at 1989 values.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that British Nuclear Fuels plc has signed 34 contracts with foreign customers for the storage and reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel since the beginning of 1973. The financial terms of these contracts are commercially confidential.

Wind Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the maximum contribution to be made by wind energy as a percentage of United Kingdom electricity production in the year 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is great uncertainty about projections for developing technologies such as renewable sources of energy. By the year 2025, wind energy might provide up to 30 TWh per year of electricity, which represents about 10 per cent. of current electricity requirements.

We have not made any estimates for the year 2000, but would expect commercial exploitation of wind energy to commence in the mid-1990s if the present assessment phase of our renewable energy programme is successful.

Sizewell

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he plans to announce the opening date and name of the inspector for the Sizewell C public inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board planning application for a new pressurised water reactor at its Sizewell nuclear site;

(2) if it will be the responsibility of National Power to cover the costs of the Sizewell C planning inquiry, including the fee for the inspector and the publication cost of daily transcripts and support documentation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB announced on 31 January its intention to submit an application to my right hon. Friend for his consent to construct a pressurised water reactor nuclear power station at Sizewell in Suffolk. Before the application has been made and advertised and the response to it is known, it is too early to speculate about a public inquiry.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on British Nuclear Fuel's proposals to build new nuclear power stations at Chapelcross, Sellafield and Calder Hall.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels plc has announced that it is to mount a feasibility study to look at several options for the construction of new nuclear power stations which might eventually replace the Magnox stations which it operates at Calder Hall and Chapelcross. BNFL has made no other commitment at present. I understand that the company's study will take about 18 months to complete.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what emergency planning arrangements are in force for the evacuation of members of the public in the event of an accident involving the spent nuclear fuel cooling ponds at Berkeley, Oldbury, and Hinkley nuclear plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Contingency plans, including evacuation plans for members of the public, exist at the Berkeley, Oldbury and Hinkley nuclear plants, in common with all licensed nuclear sites to deal with any accident involving an off-site release of radioactivity.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy, when considering the issue of transport licences for the export of plutonium, on examining the end-use requirements of the country or countries for which the plutonium is intended, to ascertain if there are genuine commercial needs for the material.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to export licences. These are not issued unless the Government are satisfied that among other things the end use will be as stated in the application.

All exports of nuclear materials are made within the guidelines set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, Lord Callaghan, on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-16.

Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all his Department's contracts with (a) Zeus and (b) Securipol Limited since 1979; and if he will give the purpose of each contract.

Mr. Parkinson: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industry Act 1975

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether section 13 of the Industry Act 1975 will require repeal or amendment when the Single European Act takes effect in 1992.

Mr. Maude: No.

Key Guns

Mr. George: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will ban he importation of key guns that can unlock doors and cars and are being used for criminal purposes.

Mr. Alan Clark: It would be very difficult to prohibit the import of key guns without similar restrictions on the domestic manufacture and sale of such devices. Following expressions of concern the Home Office is consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers about the effectiveness and availability of such devices in the United Kingdom and to establish what problems they present. We will consider this issue further in the light of the findings of this report.

Telephone Monitoring

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will call for a report from the Director General of Oftel on how many occasions British Telecom engineers have monitored telephone conversations on domestic telephone lines within the Wakefield district in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Director of Oftel on how many occasions British Telecom engineers have monitored private conversations on domestic telephone lines, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: No, but I shall draw the hon. Member's concern to the attention of the Director General of Telecommunications. He already has powers to look into such matters.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what non-statutory safeguards are available for British Telecom customers, in the event that their private and personal conversations are monitored by employees of British Telecom.

Mr. Atkins: Safeguards in addition to the existing statutory safeguards are a matter for the operator in the first instance. The Director General of Telecommunications already keeps the sufficiency of the safeguards under review.

Supermarkets (Charging Practices)

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of recent court cases, he will seek to amend the law relating to the charging practices of supermarkets and to increase the maximum levels of fines available to the courts.

Mr. Forth: No. The effectiveness of part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 in controlling misleading price indications will need to be assessed as experience of its operation develops after 1 March before consideration can be given to further measures.

North East Shipbuilders

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what expenditure is expected in 1988-89 on the remedial measures announced on 7 December 1988 following the closure of North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Newton: It is estimated that £358,000 will be spent by the end of March this year, primarily on counselling and training; £106,000 will be spent by the Department of Employment on counselling, and a further £251,000 will be spent by British Shipbuilders. Parliamentary approval for the £251,000 will be sought through the introduction of a new subhead on class V vote 4 in a Supplementary Supply Estimate to cover the new service. Pending that approval urgent expenditure estimated at the full £251,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the estimated cost to the balance of payments of the trading methods of the Ford Motor Company whereby most of its vehicles are assembled outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 7 February 1989]: To estimate the impact on the balance of payments of the Ford Motor Company's overall investment and sales policies would be highly complex.

As a long-established multinational, the company imports and exports components as well as assembled vehicles and has major investments in this country. The value of such an estimate would be subject to so many variables as to rob it of any tangible significance.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the EEC Commission about the limit to foreign shareholdings in Rolls-Royce plc; and what parts of the treaty of Rome have been quoted by the Commission in relation to such representations.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 February 1989]: Discussions with the Commission are continuing. The Government consider that the limit on foreign shareholdings is justified by article 223 of the European Community treaty which allows a member state to take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security.

WALES

Higher Education

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many 18-year-old students have progressed into higher education in each of the last three academic years giving figures in numerical and percentage terms and for each standard planning region.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

18-year-old students[1] from Welsh schools intending to proceed into higher education[2]

	Number ('000)	Percentage of all [1]18-year-old leavers
1984-85	3·5	45·0
1985-86	3·7	48·9
1986-87	3·4	45·5

[1] Aged 17 at 31 August i.e. the beginning of the academic year.
[2] Degree courses, teacher training courses and HNC/HND courses.

Consultants

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultants at present hold a contract with the National Health Service in Wales; and in what disciplines the six new appointments during the next three years will be made.

Mr. Grist: The number of consultants who held a contract with the National Health Service in Wales on 30 September 1987 was 864, compared with 696 in 1978.

No decision has yet been taken on where and in which specialties the posts will be created, but they will be targeted to achieve maximum benefit, including the need to reduce waiting lists.

General Practices

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the location of the 30 practices in Wales with more than 11,000 patients.

Mr. Grist: At February 1988 there were 36 practices in Wales with more than 11,000 patients. The location of the main surgery of these practices was as follows:

Location	Number of practices
Rhyl, Clwyd	1
Wrexham, Clwyd	3
Old Colwyn, Clwyd	1
Prestatyn, Clwyd	1
Mold, Clwyd	1
Gresford, Clwyd	1

Water Pollution

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has of leaks of polychlorinated biphenyls from Rechem International (Pontypool) into the sewage system operated by Welsh Water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: None. The Welsh water authority has the responsibility, under the Public Health (Drainage of Trade Premises) Act 1937 for consenting to discharges of trade effluent to public sewers. Furthermore, the authority monitors such discharges and is responsible for ensuring compliance with the quality conditions in each consent.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the Welsh water authority the number of pollution incidents and the number of sewage works which breached their discharge consents in 1987-88.

Mr. Grist: Welsh water authority area figures are available for calendar years. In 1987 (the latest year for which figures are available) recorded pollution incidents totalled 2,489 and 108 sewage treatment works breached their consent conditions.

Services for Deaf People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified social workers with specialist training for work with people who are deaf are currently employed in Wales by (a) social service departments, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) other bodies; how many have completed training in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by public bodies in Wales; how many have been trained in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally. The Department is, however, currently funding a Wales Council for the Deaf project to increase the number of people with advanced qualifications in sign language. The training involved conforms to nationally accepted Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People standards.

Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the estimated national domestic rate for Wales had the system to be introduced in 1990 been in operation in the current financial year, together with the current business in each Welsh district.

Mr. Grist: In 1990, domestic rates will be replaced by the community charge and there will be no national domestic rate. 1988-89, non-domestic rate poundages in each Welsh district are listed in the following table:

	Non-domestic rate poundage 1988-89 Pence
Alyn and Deeside	245·4

Winvest

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inquiries Winvest has received regarding Clwyd for each of the last six months.

Mr. Peter Walker: Winvest receives many inquiries from companies interested in investing in Wales, only some of which are related to particular areas of Wales.

All of these inquiries are acted upon and many of them have been appropriate to Clwyd. There is therefore no need to keep a statistical record on a county basis.

TRANSPORT

Motorists (Eyesight)

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations he has had with, or what representations he has received from, organisations concerned with the eyesight standards of motorists; and if he will institute discussions with professional bodies and with the British Insurance Association to encourage drivers to have regular eyesight tests and to remind drivers of their legal obligations;

(2) what information he has about semi-official surveys, including surveys undertaken by police authorities, into the question of eyesight standards of motorists;

(3) what investigations have been undertaken by his Department into the question of eyesight tests for motorists and with particular reference to injury or damage accidents to which poor eyesight might have contributed; and what is his estimate of the cost of undertaking such a survey.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received strong support for the present eyesight test and standard from the College of Ophthalmologists (formerly the Faculty of Ophthalmologists at the Royal College of Surgeons).

Research by the transport and road research laboratory, reported in 1986 as "A Re-analysis of California Driver Vision Data", found that once age and other variables had been taken into account, there was no detectable relationship between the propensity to have accidents and any of the large number of visual tests employed. This confirmed earlier work at TRRL and other work carried out overseas over a period of some decades which has in no case found any important relationship between accidents and any measure of visual acuity.

The cost of repeating the work would be in excess of £200,000. We are considering whether other work is now required to provide additional information about drivers over the age of 70.

I have placed a copy of the report in the Library of the House. I have also placed there a copy of a paper entitled "Vision and Driving" prepared by the Department's medical adviser, together with another piece of work—"A Survey of Visual Acuity of Drivers"—carried out by the Motor Industry Research Association for the TRRL.

There have been calls from various organisations, including the police, calling for higher standards of eyesight for drivers and for compulsory regular testing.

We have periodic discussions with the Association of British Insurers about medical factors affecting fitness to drive, including eyesight standards and the need to encourage regular checks.

We are aware of one or two police forces carrying out eyesight surveys using binocular screening devices.

Barnstaple Downstream Bridge

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any representations asking him to approve the financial implications of the Devon county council plans for the construction of the Barnstaple down-stream bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations urging reconsideration of the county council's capital allocation for roads in 1989-90. Most of these representations express concern over the future of the Barnstaple down-stream bridge. This bridge is included in Devon's transport policies and programme for a start of construction in 1995.

Central London Rail Study

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the response of the business community to the options advanced in the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: I have not yet had a reaction from business interests: the report was published less than a fortnight ago.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he plans to have with user groups and local transport groups about the options put forward in the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: I intend to consider the written representations received before arranging discussions with interested parties.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the main components required by the major upgrading programme of Network SouthEast and London Underground Ltd., proposed by the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: It is for the operators to appraise the individual components of the proposed major upgrading programme and bring forward proposals accordingly.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The expected cost of subscriptions for international organisations on which the Department is represented for the financial year 1988-89 is as follows:

	£ thousands
International Civil Aviation Organisation	1,075
International Maritime Organisation	420
Organisation for Economic Co-operation Development
European Conference of Ministers of Transport	224
Road Research	36
Central Rhine Commission	102
International Railway Convention	80
International Railway Congress Association	1
Permanent International Association of Navigational Congress	3
International Drivers' Behaviour Research Association	3
Permanent International Association of Road Congress	3
International Union of Public Transport	1
European Concrete Committee	3
	1,951

Ministers' and officials' travelling and subsistence expenses cost a further £43,000.

The organisation Eurocontrol has not been included as it is self-financing. During 1988-89 the subscription was £7·1 million and the receipts received £10 million. There is an income equalisation provision designed to ensure that any shortfall or excess in receipts is recovered or refunded over a period of two years.

King's Cross (Fire)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of the public have written to him on the subject of the fire at King's Cross; and how many letters he has replied to directly.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has received just over 200 letters from members of the public about the King's Cross fire and related matters which have received replies on his behalf from officials as is customary.

Roads (Construction and Maintenance)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the difference in the anticipated expenditure on new road construction and structural maintenance in 1988-89, as set out in table 8:14 of chapter 8 of Cm. 608, and the figures set out in table 1 of national roads expenditure of the Department of Transport's evidence to the Select Committee on Transport on 7 December 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures set out in table 1, national roads expenditure, of the Department of Transport's evidence to the Select Committee on Transport show the expenditure originally planned for 1988-89 after allowing for receipts from the EC, £20 million made available from the Reserve and announced in the Autumn Statement and a reduction of £1·6 million in respect of the overspend on the national roads vote in 1987-88. The expenditure shown in table 8:14 of chapter 8 of Cm. 608 is the estimate of the outturn for the year made at end September 1988. The final outturn may differ somewhat.

Bridge Heights

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwood given on 25 January, Official Report, column 571, why bridge heights are not shown in imperial and metric measures when the facility to do so is available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport provides metric height signs on trunk roads which are used extensively by foreign lorries and where the bridge height is less than 4 m. Local highway authorities are advised to do the same on their roads.

We shall be encouraging the general use of metric signs in addition to imperial units as part of a series of measures we are introducing to reduce the incidence of bridge bashing.

M2 and A2 (Traffic Counts)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the last detailed counts of traffic were taken on the M2 and A2 roads between London and Dover; what were the results of such counts; and whether he will undertake new counts in the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed counts were taken in 1988 at one location on the M2 and at four on the A2. The results are being assembled and I will send a summary to my hon. Friend.

Further counts are planned for 1989.

London to Dover Journey Times

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department is currently considering to improve journey times to the port of Dover from central London; and how much money he will make available to improve the road and rail routes to the port of Dover over the next 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The national trunk road programme includes the following schemes, valued at about £150 million (November 1985 prices):

M2 Widening between Junctions 1 to 3
M20 Widening between Junctions 5 to 8 (Maidstone bypass)
M20 Maidstone to Ashford (under construction)
A20 Folkestone to Court Wood
A20 Court Wood to Dover

The programme is currently under review.

It is for British Rail to bring forward proposals for rail investment.

Dial-a-Ride

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards providing each member of dial-a-ride with at least one trip a week.

Mr. Portillo: I have just announced a £1 million increase in grant to London dial-a-rides for 1989-90. That is the fourth successive annual increase, amounting to over 70 per cent. since responsibility for funding was taken over from the Greater London council. The additional funds will enable the provision of more vehicles, more drivers and other improvements aimed at providing more trips and a better service for users. Precisely how many trips are generated depends on how efficiently the dial-a-ride local management committees use the resources which have been made available.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new dial-a-ride buses, excluding replacements, have been provided during the last year; and how many extra trips they have completed.

Mr. Portillo: London dial-a-ride services are run by local voluntary management committees, funded by grant which is allocated by London Regional Transport. Details of vehicles provided, and the use to which they are put, are matters for them and London Regional Transport.

London Regional Transport (Assaults)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many physical assaults have taken place on bus drivers and bus conductors working for London Regional Transport in the last 12 months, and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Portillo: There were 823 reported assaults on drivers and conductors of London Buses Ltd. in 1988 compared with 1,358 in 1985, 1,109 in 1986 and 880 in 1987.

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the manufacturers of bleeping pelican crossings to ensure that any malfunction is eliminated; and if he will now consider approving the speaking pelican crossing as a suitable replacement for defective existing equipment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has discussed the safety requirements for audible signals at pelican crossings with the appropriate manufacturers. These requirements include that the failure of all safety interlocks should not cause the audible signal to sound except when a red signal is displayed to traffic.

The method of actuating both a "speaking" pelican crossing and the audible devices on existing pelican crossings is the same. In this respect neither is safer than the other. We have decided against approving "speaking" pelican crossings for other reasons.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what tests were carried out prior to his Department approving bleeping pelican crossings; and what was the rate of malfunctions detected during such tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Comprehensive functional tests were carried out on the equipment prior both to its approval and to its initial introduction in 1977. No malfunctions were observed.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to alert the public to the risks of malfunction of bleeping pelican crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local authorities have been advised to switch off the audible facility at those crossings with suspect equipment. This action will eliminate any risk from a malfunction.

A press notice has been issued describing the action taken and the reason for it.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of (a) deaths, (b) serious injuries and (c) injuries which have resulted from the malfunctioning of bleeping pelican crossings in each of the past 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total of 37 casualties should be compared with total pedestrian casualties in 1987 of 57,453. Of these 2,170 occurred on pelican crossings, and a further 2,470 occurred within 50 m of such a crossing. More than 7,000 pelican crossings were in operation during 1987.

There are very few recorded cases of pedestrian casualties at malfunctioning pelican crossings. In these cases, we do not know if any of the accidents were caused by the defective crossing, as we do not collect the causes of road accidents.

The following table shows number of pedestrian casualties, by severity and by month, at pelican crossings that were out of order or defective, in 1987, the latest year for which complete figures are available.

Pedestrian casualties on pelican crossings that are out of order/defective: Great Britain: 1987

Month	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
January	0	0	1	1
February	0	1	1	2
March	0	1	0	1
April	0	0	1	1
May	0	0	4	4
June	0	0	1	1
July	0	3	6	9
August	0	2	2	4
September	0	2	3	5
October	0	3	2	5
November	0	0	2	2
December	0	0	2	2
Total	0	12	25	37

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of bleeping pelican crossings which have been disconnected in each of the past 12 months as a result of a serious malfunction; and if he will express this as a proportion of the total in service.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is not recorded centrally in the form requested. The Department has been notified of one such case in Great Britain in the last 12 months. This represents less than 0·013 per cent. of all pelican crossings currently in service in Great Britain.

About 1,000 (approximately 10 per cent.) of the pelican crossings fitted with similar audible signals have been switched off as a precautionary measure while checks are made and a modification incorporated.

Road Traffic Law

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the review of road traffic law conducted by the North committee.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The North report was published in April 1988.

My right hon. Friend yesterday announced publication of a White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (Cm. 576), which sets out the Government's proposals to reform road traffic law in the light of the North committee's recommendations.

Channel Tunnel

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define what is encompassed in the phrase "Channel tunnel rail services" in his answer to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) 25 January, Official Report, column 571.

Mr. Portillo: My answer referred to section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987, which encompasses all services for the carriage of passengers or goods by way of the Channel tunnel system.

Bus Fares (Merseyside)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has on the level of bus fares on Merseyside since deregulation.

Mr. Portillo: The PTE estimated that the average increase in commercial bus fares occurring after deregulation and following from the introduction of precept control was 55 per cent., as the previous massive subsidies were removed. At the end of 1987 there was a further average increase of 10 per cent.

Traffic Speed in Cities

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he expects to bring forward proposals to increase the average speed of road traffic in major cities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic management and road construction in major cities are largely the responsibility of local highway authorities. They have duties to secure the expeditious, convenient and safe movement of vehicular and other traffic, including pedestrians.

Available measures to increase the average speed of vehicular traffic must be considered within this framework and the scope for additional road capacity.

The effectiveness of the measures depends on good enforcement of traffic and parking regulations by the police and traffic wardens.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in light of the recent Settle-Carlisle railway business development plan, he will now lift the closure order on the line.

Mr. Portillo: We are still considering all the evidence on British Rail's closure proposal including the business development plan.

British Rail (North West)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the north-west regional managers of British Rail; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend holds regular meetings with the chairman of British Rail on a wide range of matters. He does not hold separate meetings with British Rail's regional managers.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many automatic exit barriers are currently in operation at London Underground stations; and how many are proposed to be installed during the period of London Regional Transport's consultants' study into the safety aspects of these barriers.

Mr. Portillo: I understand from London Underground that as at 2 February 1989, there were 533 gates in use at 49 stations. By the end of April, when the consultants' study is due to be complete, London Underground estimates that a further 118 gates will have been commissioned at a further 12 stations.

Motor Taxation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total revenue from motor taxation in 1987-88; and what is the estimated revenue in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

	Yield (£ billion)
	1987-88	1988-89
Vehicle Excise Duty	2·6	2·8
Fuel Duty	7·8	8·6

Safety Plans

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to encourage and help local authorities to implement low-cost safety engineering schemes and to develop areawide safety plans.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are working closely with the local authority associations to identify problems over implementing low-cost safety engineering schemes and ways of stepping up this important safety work.

We are already developing jointly with the Institution of Highways and Transportation practical guidelines for implementing areawide urban safety projects. Last autumn we increased the economic valuation for fatal road casualties and this will improve the economic rate of return on accident investigation and prevention schemes. The transport and road research laboratory has now completed a full survey of local authorities' arrangements, procedures, and levels of activity on road safety engineering, and a report will be published shortly.

AIP and urban safety schemes are among the most important methods of reducing road casualties. Much expertise already exists at local level and much can be achieved at low cost. It is for local authorities, within their statutory responsibility for road safety, to determine priorities and tackle this work. The Department will continue to give full support and guidance.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Whales

98. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations have been made by him to the Japanese Government about the killing of whales by Japanese fishermen.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Recently we have expressed our serious concerns to the Japanese Government about their current feasibility programme of whaling for scientific purposes both directly and through the relevant forum of the International Whaling Commission (IWC). In December the United Kingdom commissioner to the IWC expressed our views to the chairman of the IWC in a letter circulated to all member Governments including Japan. This made clear our firm view that Japan should not implement her plans until the major concerns about these identified by the scientific committee to the IWC had been addressed and resolved. The letter was passed personally by the United Kingdom commissioner to the Japanese embassy in London with a clear explanation of the United Kingdom Government's concern.

Further, once the period for consideration of the scientific committee's views by commissioners was complete and learning that the programme was to go ahead, I authorised our commissioner to propose a resolution for consideration by the IWC. This was seconded by Australia and New Zealand. If adopted it will put on a formal and international basis the call to Japan to cease its current programme. Our embassy in Tokyo is also in close touch with the Japanese Government. Also, similar concerns expressed by the Falkland Islands Executive Council have been passed to the Japanese embassy.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Those international organisations on which Ministers or officials of my Department are represented are as follows:

The total estimated cost of my Department's commitment to international organisations in 1988 was £283,000.

United Nations (UN)
Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO)
World Health Organisation (WHO)
Commission of the European Communities
Council of the European Communities
Office Internationale des Epizooties (OIE)
European and Mediterranean Plant Protection Organisation (EPPO)
Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)
Office Internationale de la Vigne et du Vin (OIV)
Council of Europe (COE)

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO)
Intergovernmental Commission for the Channel Tunnel
International Coffee Organisation
International Cocoa Organisation

International Standards Organisation
Association of Analytical Chemists
International Wheat Council
International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry

Goats Milk

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward proposals for the regulation of the production of goats milk and goats milk products.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The wording of the Food Act 1984 means that the regulations which apply to cows milk cannot be extended to cover goats milk. However, goats milk and goats milk products are subject to the general provisions of the Act whereby all food (including drink) must be of the nature, substance and quality demanded by the purchaser and must be fit for human consumption. It is also an offence to label goats milk (or goats milk products) in a false or misleading way.

The Ministry issued a code of practice on the hygienic production of goats milk in March 1988.

Beef and Veal

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the original saving of the measures set out in European Economic Community document 8903/88 on beef and veal; with what the saving was compared; and what alterations were made to this proposed saving in consequence of the changes agreed at the Council meeting on 23 January.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The European Commission's estimate of the savings over the 1989 preliminary draft budget which would have been brought about by the adoption of its proposals for the reform of the beef regime (set out in document 8903/88 (COM(88)529), as amended) were 51 mecu (£33 million) in 1989 and 55 mecu (£35·5 million) in a full year. The 1989 budget as adopted was consistent with these proposals. The Commission has revised its forecasts to take account of the decisions of the 23-24 January Council of Ministers and the present prospects for the market and predicts a further saving of 11 mecu (£7 million) in 1989. The Commission estimates that the full year effect of the measures as adopted will be a cost of 23 mecu (£15 million).

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the exceptional circumstance clause was included in the final text of the measures on beef and veal agreed by the European Economic Community Council on 23 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The Council of Ministers decided that in various circumstances buying into intervention could take place outside the limit of 220,000 tonnes a year. These would include the exceptional circumstances envisaged in the Commission's original proposals and also if there were market weakness defined in either of two ways. The first is if the average market price in at least three member states or regions which together account for at least 55 per cent. of the Community production of the category concerned falls below 80 per cent. of the institutional intervention price; and the second, if the Community price falls below 78 per cent. of the institutional intervention price. Legal texts have yet to be adopted implementing these provisions.

These concessions on beef intervention were one of the reasons why we voted against the package.

Milk

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional milk production can be permitted in consequence of the additional quotas agreed at the Council meeting on 23 January; and what estimate he has made of the additional cost to the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The Council has agreed to allocate up to 600,000 tonnes of additional milk quota. I understand that the Commission now estimates the resultant cost to the Community budget in a full year to be 99 mecu (£64 million). Other elements in the package agreed by the Council should result in savings of 64 mecu (£41 million) giving a net cost in the milk sector of 35 mecu (£23 million).

Variable Premium

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what increase in the retail price of beef he anticipates in terms of pence per pound in the United Kingdom in consequence of the abolition of the variable premium; and if there will be any consequent increase in consumer prices in the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The abolition of the variable premium in the United Kingdom was decided by the Council in the context of other decisions to limit intervention and to reduce buying-in prices; to apply in the United Kingdom the Community special premium for beef; and to improve the terms of the suckler cow subsidy. Taken together these measures are unlikely to have any significant effect on retail prices in the United Kingdom and they place the United Kingdom beef market on the same footing as the rest of the Community.

Beef

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of beef exported by the European Economic Community in 1988; and what were the comparable totals for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989]: During the period January-August 1988 (the latest for which figures are available) 357,503 tonnes of beef were exported from the European Community. This excludes exports from Greece for which 1988 figures are not yet available. The calendar year figures for the previous five years are as follows:

	tonnes
1983	[1]427,786
1984	[1]566,151
1985	[1]591,907
1986	[2]935,887
1987	[2]691,912

[1] EC 10.
[2] EC 12.

Leukaemia

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether research is currently being undertaken or is planned, to examine the possibility of links between bovine leukaemia virus and the incidence of leukaemia in children whose fathers are engaged in the meat trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 February 1989] Various studies have been carried out into this subject but I am not aware of any research currently being undertaken or planned.

Abattoirs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many man-years of his Department's staff time were engaged in the supervision of abattoirs in 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82 and 1982-83.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In my reply to the hon. Member on 18 January I provided information for all years for which figures are available. Staff engaged on this work have other responsibilities and time allocated to specific duties is not recorded for the years prior to 1983-84. However, resources allocated in earlier years were similar to those employed in 1983-84.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has been lost in each year since 1979 because of social security fraud; and how many prosecutions have resulted (a) nationally and (b) in the social security area covering Nottingham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 31 January at column 192.

Insulation Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total value in current and standard prices of grants for (a) draughtproofing and (b) loft insulation to claimants of supplementary benefit and income support for the last five years;

(2) what is the maximum grant for (a) draughtproofing and (b) loft insulation payable to claimants of supplementary benefit and income support in each of the last five years; and what is the value of this maximum in standard prices;

(3) what is the number of grants made for (a) draughtproofing and (b) loft insulation to claimants of supplementary benefit and income support since 1983.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Help with the cost of simple draughtproofing (but not loft insulation) was available to recipients of supplementary benefit under the old single payments scheme. Details of the number of single payments for draughtproofing since 1983 and their cost are recorded in table 19.2 of the "Annual Statistical Enquiry", copies of which are in the Library.

There was no maximum amount for a single payment for draughtproofing. The regulations provided for a payment of an amount equal to the cost of necessary materials.

The discretionary social fund replaced single payments on 11 April 1988. Community care grants and budgeting loans are available from the fund for people receiving income support. Crisis loans are available to anyone, whether receiving income support or not, in an emergency. Payments for draughtproofing and loft insulation are not excluded from the social fund, but a social fund officer, who determines applications to the fund, would not normally make an award for these items if help with the materials and work is available from another source, such as a community insulation project or the homes insulation scheme.

Information about the number and type of awards form the social fund for draughtproofing and loft insulation is not collected.

Loans and Grants

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out for each office in Wales and the cumulative total, the percentage of the allocations not spent at the latest available date on (a) the loans budget and (b) the grants budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available from the details held in the Library.

Disabled Claimants

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will be responsible for meeting the case costs after April of those disabled people in supported lodgings who are new claimants, as distinct from existing claimants.

Mr. Scott: As under present social security arrangements, the care costs of supported lodgers will be met in a variety of ways after April 1989. Some will be able to meet these costs from their own resources, including social security benefits. Others will have these costs met in whole or in part by bodies such as local authorities. Those supported lodgers entitled to income support will receive housing benefit to help with their accommodation costs and normal income support (including any appropriate premiums) for other expenses. This change will mean that many disabled people in supported lodgings will be better off, after meeting charges for accommodation and the provision of care, than they would have been under existing benefit arrangements. The overall effect of the change will be to provide an estimated £1 million extra for supported lodgers as a whole.

Income Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent estimates for take-up of income support; and what are the comparable figures for supplementary benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my right hon. Friend to paragraphs 21 to 25 and table 15.17 on pages 272 and 273 of Cm. 288 (the 1988 public expenditure White Paper) for details of the latest available take-up estimates for the main income-related benefits. Take-up estimates for 1985 should be available shortly. In 1991, analyses from the 1989 family expenditure survey will provide comprehensive information on the reformed benefits introduced in April 1988.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there are any circumstances in which a family with children where the father works irregularly may find themselves ineligible for either income support or family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. To obtain family credit one parent must be normally engaged in work for at least 24 hours a week. If the employed parent works on average for less than 24 hours a week there would be no entitlement to family credit, but there might be entitlement to income support.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the time scale of his Department's proposed consideration of the future of disability benefits following the results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' disability surveys; when he hopes to report progress in extending the eligibility for attendance allowance to the under-twos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 19 December at columns 114-15.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he is able to break down the extra number of people who will become dependent on means-tested benefits due to the freeze in child benefit into (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) housing benefit;

(2) how many extra people will become dependent on means-tested benefits as a result of the increase in children's personal allowances by an extra 50p broken down into income support, family credit and housing benefits.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how many more (a) families and (b) children will be dependent on income-related benefits as a result of the extra increase in personal allowances of 50p per child, and broken down into income support, family credit and housing benefit, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Estimates are available only on the caseload assumptions used in the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits". They are based on the 1985 family expenditure survey data uprated to reflect the position in 1989-90. Estimates of this kind are particularly uncertain because of small sample size and large sampling error. Bearing these factors in mind, the estimated increases arising from the non-uprating of child benefit are:

- Income Support—1,000-2,000 families (around 5,000 people)
- Housing Benefit—2,000-3,000 families (around 10,000 people)
- Family Credit—20,000-25,000 families (just under 80,000 people)

The estimated increases arising from the extra 50p on children's allowances are:

- Income Support—2,000 families (including about 5,000 children)
- Housing Benefit—3,000 families (including around 5,000 children)
- Family Credit—25,000 families (including about 50,000 children)

Single Payments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the total of all single payments paid by local offices in London, (b) the equivalent figure for only those single payments encompassing items now covered by the social fund, for 1986-87 and 1987-88, (c) the total number of budgeting loans, crisis loans, community care grants paid out in the same catchment area so far for the year 1988-89 and (d) the expenditure represented by (a) to (c).

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1989, c. 709]: I regret that part of the information given was incorrect. The reply should be as follows.

Details of the total number of all single payments paid by local offices in the London postal area for the periods 1986-87 and 1987-88 by office are in the Library.

There are two expenses for which single payments could be made but which are specifically excluded from the social fund: returnable deposits on accommodation and work-related expenses. The £30 limit for budgeting loans and most community care grants will also operate in some cases to prevent payment for items that would otherwise have been available as single payments. Figures are not available for items covered by the social fund that were available previously as single payments.

Information on the numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is also in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer, 11 January, Official Report, column 698, on what date in August 1988 the Royal Ulster Constabulary communicated with Mr. Fred Holroyd.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The communication referred to in the answer of 11 January took place on 27 August 1985.

Schools

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available, from and including 1985, to indicate the primary and secondary schools which have had tenders for major capital works approved and the amount involved in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

[1] Including Grammar schools.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure that voluntary grammar schools are in future funded on an equitable per capita basis; what criteria he has used in the past for such funding; and if he will take steps to provide additional funds to those schools which have received less than the per capita norm in past years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 February 1989]: In the past, voluntary grammar schools funding has been mainly based on historic patterns of expenditure but in recent years resources have been skewed in favour of the relatively low-spending schools. This reallocation of funds will continue until the introduction, as part of the education reform measures, of a formula-based funding arrangement for all secondary schools (including voluntary grammar schools). While being related to pupil numbers, formula-based funding will also have regard to other factors.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Creation

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in the north-west region.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses.

In the year to September 1988, the civilian work force in employment increased by 5,000 in the north-west region. This includes net increases of 4,000 in female full-time employees in employment, 7,000 in female part-time employees in employment and 1,000 in participants in work-related Government training programmes (who are counted as part time). These increases were offset by a decrease in male employment; however comparable estimates of full and part-time employment are not available for male employees in employment or the self-employed.

American Tourists

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many American tourists visited the United Kingdom in the last 12 months; what contribution to the balance of payments was made by them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Estimates show that the number of visits to the United Kingdom by North American residents in the 11 months to November 1988 was 3·2 million. Estimates of expenditure for that period are not yet available as they are produced on a quarterly basis.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the unadjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in the south-east.

Mr. Lee: Employment estimates for regions are not seasonally adjusted. Regional estimates of part-time male employees are not available. In September 1988 there were 1,416,000 female part-time employees in employment in the south-east region, this figure represents 40 per cent. of female employees and 19 per cent. of all employees in employment in the region.

Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee last met; and what was discussed.

Mr. Lee: The committee last met on 17 January, to discuss the effect of the abolition of domestic rates on the construction of the retail prices index. A report is expected on this shortly.

Discrimination in Employment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for his decision not to introduce legislation to ratify International Labour Organisation convention No. 111 on "Discrimination in Employment and Occupation (1958)".

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that their commitment to the elimination of unfair discrimination between one worker and another in employment is already clearly demonstrated by existing legislation, mainly the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, and consider that the amendments to this legislation that would be required to give further effect to the provisions of convention 111 are unnecessary and undesirable.

Child-minding Allowance

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the level of take-up of child-minding allowance for people attending Government training schemes; and if he will make a statement on the continuation of the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Child care payments are made only on employment training. Comprehensive information on take-up is not yet available. Information on the number of employment training participants for whom child care payments are made will be regularly collected from March and the first results will be available at the end of April 1989. Early indications suggest that over 2,000 lone parents have joined employment training and many of these people will have received help with child care costs.

Inflation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the average annual inflation rate in 1978 and 1988 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lee: The annual average rate of increases in the retail prices index for the United Kingdom was 8·3 per cent. in 1978 and 4·9 per cent. in 1988. The corresponding figures for the 12 countries of the Community were 8·3 per cent. for 1978 and 3·3 per cent. for 1988.

Regional Tourist Boards

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that regional enterprise units do not compete with or shadow the functions of regional tourist boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The terms of reference of the Department's regional enterprise units include developing links with tourist bodies, identifying obstacles to the growth of tourism, and supporting any co-ordinating machinery established for discussing tourism at the regional level. There are no plans for them to duplicate or shadow the functions of the regional tourist boards.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will ensure that the tripartite structure in funding and control of regional tourist boards is maintained; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will ensure that the levels of subsidies to the regional tourist boards keep pace with inflation; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will provide additional funds to the regional tourist boards to undertake research into (a) domestic and international tourist trends, (b) occupancy work and (c) visitor surveys.

Mr. Lee: The organisational structure of the English regional tourist boards (RTBs) is not a matter for Government to decide. The role and level of funding of RTBs is currently being considered as part of the review of tourism policy announced last July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Radiation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) staff and (b) patients were affected by radiation overdose incidents reported to the Health and Safety Executive within the National Health Service in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: No staff were affected.

Information on how many patients were affected is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances, as specified in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, radiation over exposures of (a) staff and (b) patients within the National Health Service are required to be reported to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 require that patient exposures suspected to be greater than intended which arise from faulty equipment and suspected overexposures of staff from any cause are immediately investigated by the employer. Unless it can be shown beyond reasonable doubt that no excessive exposure occurred, the employer is required to notify the Health and Safety Executive forthwith.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed by the Health and Safety Executive to carry out its responsibilities within the National Health Service under the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Inspectors in Her Majesty's factories inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive have a range of inspection responsibilities. Inspectors are not employed solely on work in connection with the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 within the National Health Service.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the responsibilities of the Health and Safety Executive to staff and patients of the National Health Service under the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive enforces the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 in the National Health Service as in all other places where work with ionising radiations is carried out. The regulations control the exposure of employees or other people affected by work with ionising radiations principally by requiring all doses to be kept as low as reasonably practicable and in any case below dose limits. The regulations also cover the equipment used for medical exposures and exposures of patients that were much greater than intended because of faulty equipment.

Economic League

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations about people blacklisted by the Economic League.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on Tuesday 7 February 1989.

Chief Inspector of Mines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chief inspector of mines; and what subjects were discussed;

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend has not met the chief inspector of mines. The chief inspector, as a senior official of the Health and Safety Executive, has frequent contact with the director general, and opportunity for contact with the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission.

Small Firms

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what services will be provided to small firms by the Government business shop opened in Manchester; and what plans there are to open further such shops in England and Wales.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The Manchester Government business shop, which is based in the small firms centre, will help business people carry out some of the basic transactions required by Government and obtain information and assistance in a single place. It will deal with:

VAT registration and information information on business tax
PAYE and national insurance information on employment protection and health and safety requirements

Government business shops are part of a pilot exercise and Manchester is one of six locations. The others are in Glasgow, Newcastle, Doncaster, Merthyr Tydfil and Aberdare and Reading. The pilot schemes will run for six months and from the experience of these shops we shall decide whether and how we should proceed to a more extensive network, in the light of the reaction of business clients, costs and benefits and effects on existing services.

ENVIRONMENT

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land in the United Kingdom is currently being used for the opencast extraction of coal, clay or other minerals; how much has been used and is currently unrestored to its former condition; and whether he will make a statement on Government policy in respect of unrestored land.

Mr. Chope: Surveys of mineral workings carried out by local authorities on behalf of the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office in 1982 indicated that 115,000 hectares of land in England and Wales had permissions for surface mineral workings. Within this, 61,500 hectares were or had been in use as mineral working sites. Fifty-six per cent. of these workings had satisfactory reclamation conditions and 44 per cent. had either no conditions or unsatisfactory conditions. There are no comparable figures available for Scotland. Local authorities carried out further surveys in England and Wales during 1988, and the Department will be publishing the results of these for England later this year.

The Government policy in respect of unrestored land associated with minerals being worked under planning control is to ensure that land taken for mineral operations is restored after working has come to an end. The 1981 Minerals Act imposes a duty on mineral planning authorities to undertake a periodic review of mineral sites and empowers them to make orders to restore and improve the environment of sites which do not have adequate conditions. Derelict workings can also be eligible for derelict land grant to achieve reclamation.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the housing investment programme allocations proposed to each local authority for 1989 indicating the respective bid and showing the allocation as a percentage of the bid, together with the appropriate figures for 1978-79 on a constant value basis.

Mr. Trippier: The information for 1989-90 and 1978-79 has been placed in the Library. Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to supplement their allocations by expenditure financed from capital receipts. Nationally, two thirds of local authorities' spending power on housing in 1989-90 is expected to come from capital receipts.

Water Meter Trial Schemes

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where the water meter trial schemes are taking place; when each one started; and what criteria were used to determine the places selected.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has approved 11 water metering trials under section 4 of the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act 1988:

Isle of Wight (Southern Water)
Chandlers Ford (Southern Water)
Bristol (Bristol Waterworks Company)
Haling Park (Thames Water)
Chorleywood (Rickmansworth Water Company)
Bromsgrove (East Worcestershire Waterworks Company)
Brookmans Park (Lee Valley Water Company)
Turlin Moor (Wessex Water)
Broadstone (Wessex Water)
Camberley (Mid Southern Water Company)
Hutton Rudby (Northumbrian Water)

Charging by measure in the Bromsgrove trial started on 9 January. All of the other trials are due to start from 1 April 1989, except for the Haling park trial where charging by measure is to begin from 1 October 1989. My right hon. Friend has yet to consider a proposal by Yorkshire Water about a proposed metering trial in south Normanton, Yorkshire.

The trial sites were selected by the water industry so as to include a wide range of different property types and climatic conditions.

Water Authorities (Footpaths and Bridleways)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of (a) statutory public footpaths, (b) statutory public bridleways and (c) permissive footpaths lie within British water authorities' land holdings; and if he will list the mileage for each water authority in each category.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held centrally by my Department or by individual water authorities.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been expended, where and on what, through derelict land grant in the north-west for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Derelict land grant expenditure by local authorities in the north west totalled £24·28 million in 1987-88; a further £5·2 million grant was paid to non-local authority applicants. Details are given in the following table.

A wide variety of reclamation schemes meeting the Department's criteria for grant were supported in 1987-88. A total of 142 schemes were completed in the course of the year producing 563 hectares of reclaimed land. One hundred and six hectares were reclaimed for industrial and commercial development, 24 hectares for housing and 109 hectares for mixed development. The remaining 324 hectares were reclaimed for public open space or other soft end uses.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80

Mr. Ridley: In the financial year 1985-86 my Department made a contribution of £250,000 to the Lord Mayor of Bradford's appeal fund set up to help victims of the stadium fire disaster. There have been no other donations since 1979-80. In general my Department responds to particular emergencies or similar situations through established public expenditure programmes rather then by contributing to private appeal funds.

Water Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider increasing the penalties for offences of pollution of water courses and the discharge of effluents containing illegal levels of polychlorinated biphenyls and pollutants.

Mr. Moynihan: Under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the maximum penalties which can be imposed by magistrates for water pollution offences, including any illegal discharges of polychlorinated biphenyls or other pollutants, are fines not exceeding £2,000 and terms of imprisonment of up to three months. However, on indictment there is no limit on the fine that may be imposed and the term of imprisonment can be up to two years. Penalties for pollution offences are kept under regular review, but I understand that there are no immediate plans for increasing them.

Pollution

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each water authority the number of pollution incidents and the number of sewage works which breached their discharge consents in 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: The number of water pollution incidents reported by English water authorities in 1987 were:

	Number
Anglian	1,605
Northumbrian	671
North West	2,961
Severn Trent	4,435
Southern	1,795
South West	2,251

Document Clearing Group

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the membership and terms of reference of the document clearing group supervised by his Department's advisers Schroder Wragg in respect of information made available to the general public by water authorities.

Mr. Ridley: The document clearance group comprises members from Clifford Chance and Herbert Smith, legal advisers to the Government and to the Water Authorities' Association on the privatisation of the water industry, J. Henry Schroder Wragg, the Government's merchant bank advisers and Dewe Rogerson, financial public relations advisers to the association and the Government. The group's role is to review information relating to the businesses of the 10 water authorities in England and Wales which is to be made publicly available by Government, the WAA or the water authorities, to ensure that such information complies with the legal requirements relating to offers for sale.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the standards to be set for discharges of radioactive waste from pressurised water reactors and those set for comparable reactors abroad.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The technology of the new generation of PWRs will make it possible to operate them so that the levels of radioactivity in the discharges are very low. In granting authorisation for such discharges the authorising Departments will continue to require the operators to meet specified discharge limits and in addition to use best practicable means to limit discharges of radioactivity so as to ensure that exposures are kept as low as reasonably achievable. These controls will ensure that radiation doses to the critical group of people most affected by the discharges will remain well within the limits recommended by the International Commission for Radiation Protection and endorsed by the National Radiological Protection Board. Due regard will be had to the balance between costs of pollution abatement, including the exposure of on-site personnel, and the effects of the discharges on the environment. Each case will be considered on its merits, but in general the effect is likely to be that levels of radioactivity in discharges from PWRs in the United Kingdom will not differ significantly from those from reactors of a compatible size and environmental situations such as those in France.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further provision is being made for low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Trippier: We have announced new targets for low-cost housing in rural areas and proposals for enabling shared ownership dwellings in villages to be retained to meet low-cost housing needs.

Last July the Government announced the rural housing initiative which set specific targets for low-cost housing in smaller villages. The Housing Corporation established a special rural programme aimed at expanding the role of housing associations in villages with a population of under 1,000. The corporation agreed to earmark sufficient funds to permit some 300 approvals for rented housing in 1989-90 and 600 in 1990-91. In December 1988 the Housing Corporation announced that the target of 600 approvals had been brought forward to 1989-90. We are pleased to announce today that the new targets for 1990-91 will be 900 approvals and for 1991-92 1,100 approvals. These targets effectively mean that the number of approvals given under the special rural programme will have nearly quadrupled over a four-year period.

There is concern that subsidised shared ownership houses in villages should be kept as low-cost homes and not lost through people becoming full owners and selling in the open market. In those rural areas where replacement of a shared ownership dwelling may be difficult, or where a private landowner has contributed a site on condition that it be retained for low-cost housing, we have in mind giving housing associations a pre-emptive right to buy back the dwelling at full market value when an occupier moves on. We will of course need to establish a funding arrangement which ensures that the association has the funds to exercise its right to repurchase. The arrangement proposed will maintain the right of the tenant to become the full owner of his home, but will provide a means of retaining the dwelling for low-cost housing when the occupier moves. It will provide a means therefore of sustaining the supply of low-cost housing in the villages and will reassure those landowners who contribute sites for that purpose. The details of the scheme are being discussed with the Housing Corporation.

Taken together with the proposals announced last Friday by the Secretary of State to improve the supply of sites for low-cost housing in rural areas, these measures will make a further significant contribution to augmenting the supply of low-cost housing in villages.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list in the Official Report, and according to the latest information available, the number of authorised permanent gipsy sites within each district of the counties of Somerset, Wiltshire, Dorset and Devon.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Authorised permanent gipsy sites can be either private or local authority operated. The Department does not hold information on the numbers of authorised private sites. Information on the location of private sites is held by local authorities. Information provided by the district councils for the Department's biannual count exercise reveals that at July 1988 there were 49 caravans on private sites in Somerset; 52 in Wiltshire; three in Dorset and 17 in Devon.

Information on authorised local authority sites is held by the Department and updated each January. In respect of the counties requested the latest information is as follows:

Somerset
Mendip (Berkeley)
Sedgemoor (Westonzoyland)
South Somerset (Chubbards Cross, Ilton)
(Marsh Lane, Tintinhull)
Taunton Deane (Otterford)
West Somerset (Farringdon Hill Lane, Stogursey)

Wiltshire
North Wiltshire (Thingley Junction, Chippenham)
Salisbury (Dairyhouse Bridge, Salisbury)
(Oak Tree Field, Odstock, Salisbury)
(Lode Hill, Downton)
Thamesdown (Chiseldon Camp, Swindon)
(Hay Lane, Wroughton)
West Wiltshire (Fairwood, Dilton Marsh)

Dorset
East Dorset (Mannington Park, Wimborne)
North Dorset (Thornicombe, Blandford)
Poole (Mannings Heath)
Purbeck (Coldharbour, Wareham)
West Dorset (Piddlehinton, Dorchester)

Devon
East Devon (Broadclyst near Exeter)
(Sowton near Exeter)

Football League Grounds (Women)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women have been (a) arrested and (b) found guilty of offences committed at Football League grounds during each of the last three seasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply. The information requested is not recorded centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Zambia

6. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the matters that were discussed in recent meetings with President Kaunda of Zambia.

88. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed during the recent ministerial visit to Zambia.

Mrs. Chalker: I discussed bilateral and regional matters with President Kaunda of Zambia when I met him during my visit to Zambia on 24 to 25 January.

Conventional Stability Talks

7. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the conventional stability talks to begin.

Mr. Waldegrave; These talks, now known as the negotiation on conventional armed forces in Europe, and the negotiations on confidence and security building measures, will be opened in Vienna by Foreign Ministers of the CSCE countries on 6 to 8 March.

Central America

9. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the next central American presidential summit; and if he has discussed this subject with the new Government of the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: Our latest information is that the next central American summit will take place in San Salvador on 13 to 14 February. We are in regular touch with the United States Administration about a wide range of issues, including central America.

72. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any discussions with the United States Administration with regard to their policies on central America.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions with the United States Administration on a wide range of topics, including central America.

40. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the next central American presidential summit; and if he has discussed this subject with the new Government in the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: Our latest information is that the next central American summit will take place in San Salvador on 13 and 14 February. We are in regular touch with the United States Administration about a wide range of issues, including central America.

78. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit central America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit central America. I shall be visiting Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala later this month, when I attend the San Jose V Conference being held at San Pedro Sula, Honduras.

Israel

12. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Israeli ambassador; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I last met the Israeli ambassador on 26 January.

60. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised with the Israeli Government Israel's responsibilities under the Geneva convention.

81. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Israeli ambassador concerning Israel's treatment of Palestinians suspected of participating in the Intifada.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to take all appropriate opportunities to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligation to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law and human rights standards.

83. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government concerning west bank and Gaza detainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to take appropriate opportunities to remind the Israeli authorities of our opposition to the practice of administrative detention.

93. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards Mr. Elias Freij's suggestion to end the Palestinian uprising on the west bank and Gaza, for the purpose of encouraging talks with the Israelis; and whether he will make a statement on the implications for the peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that Mr. Freij withdrew his suggestion after the Israeli decision to deport 13 Palestinians from the occupied territories.

Cuba

13. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about United Kingdom relations with Cuba.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain diplomatic relations with Cuba. Our new ambassador took up his appointment in January.

United States Secretary of State

15. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United States Secretary of State; and what was discussed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I last met the United States Secretary of State at the CSCE meeting in Vienna on 17 January. We discussed a wide range of issues.

42. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will use the opportunity of his next meeting with the United States Secretary of State to reiterate the United Kingdom's commitment to international free trade.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. We share with the United States Administration a commitment to free trade. With our Community partners we must work with the United States to resist protectionism, and to sustain and extend the open multilateral trading system, in particular through the current GATT round.

58. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he proposes to discuss when he next meets the United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend proposes to discuss a wide range of issues when he next meets Mr. Baker on Sunday next.

84. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the United States Secretary of State; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to meet Mr. Baker on Sunday next and will wish to exchange views with him on a wide range of issues.

35. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he proposes to discuss when he next meets the United States Secretary of State.

71. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he proposes to discuss when he next meets the United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend looks forward to exchanging views on a wide range of issues when he meets Mr. Baker on Sunday next.

36. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Secretary of State of the United States of America; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend will see Mr. Baker on Sunday next and looks forward to exchanging views with him on a wide range of issues.

Middle East

16. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the prospects for a peace settlement in the middle east have improved since the visit of the Minister of State the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in Tunis.

17. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

48. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the search for peace in the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Mr. Waldegrave: Recent developments, including the PLO's recognition of the right of Israel to exist, and its renunciation of terrorism, have substantially improved the prospects for progress towards a negotiated settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute.

27. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent moves he has made to further the calling of an international peace conference on the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy and that of the Twelve remains to support the calling of an international conference.

We are continuing our efforts to identify the necessary common ground for such a conference to be convened.

63. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to visit the west bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to visit the occupied territories, but I aim to do so in early March.

Chile

19. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have been making to the Government of Chile concerning human rights in that country.

49. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have been making to the Government of Chile concerning human rights in that country.

Mr. Eggar: We have in the past few weeks made representations at a high level about a wide range of human rights issues in Chile. In addition, the Twelve have publicly affirmed their support for the work of the Catholic Church's human rights organisation, the Vicaria de la Solidaridad, and their appreciation for the important role played by the Vicaria since its creation.

Iraq

21. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about Iraq's ability to develop biological warfare agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to him on 18 January at column 194.

Hong Kong

22. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

34. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of China concerning the drafting of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

64. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

77. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of China concerning the drafting of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

86. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The second draft of the Basic Law will be published in the spring after consideration by the standing committee of the National People's Congress. We welcome the assurances of senior Chinese officials that the draft will be subject to further consultation in Hong Kong. We have had a fruitful dialogue with the Chinese authorities responsible for the drafting of the Basic Law and expect this to continue. We shall wish to satisfy ourselves that the provisions of the final text accurately reflect the terms of the joint declaration.

Czechoslovakia

23. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Czechoslovakia about human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend raised these matters in his speech last month at the conclusion of the CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna. In addition I raised human rights issues with the Czechoslovak ambassador on 31 January.

46. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made about recent human rights violations in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend raised Czechoslovakia's handling of human rights in my speech last month at the conclusion of the CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna. I also expressed our concern to the Czechoslovak ambassador on 31 January.

51. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of international agreements on human rights in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are many shortcomings in Czechoslovakia's implementation of its human rights commitments, especially in the field of freedom of speech and assembly.

54. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to have discussions with the Czech ambassador concerning human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans for discussion with the Czechoslovak ambassador. I saw him on 31 January, and expressed our concern over their handling of human rights.

87. Mr. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Czech ambassador; and what matters he will raise.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to meet the Czechoslovak ambassador. I saw him on 31 January to thank him for his authorities' co-operation over Semtex. I also expressed our concern over their current handling of human rights.

United States of America

24. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: The American Secretary of State, Mr. Baker, will be visiting the United Kingdom on Sunday next. My right hon. and learned Friend plans to visit the United States shortly thereafter.

52. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the future of the special relationship with the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: We look forward to a continuation of the excellent and close relations that have long existed between our two countries.

President Gorbachev

25. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects President Gorbachev to visit Britain.

28. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any information on whether President Gorbachev intends to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether a new date has been arranged for the visit to Britain of President Gorbachev.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Gorbachev will visit the United Kingdom from 5 to 7 April.

South Africa

26. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will protest to the South African authorities against the new legislation to restrict foreign funding of anti-apartheid organisations.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) on 1 February at column 246.

33. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with the South African Government.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain regular contact with the South African authorities on a wide range of issues, both here and via Her Majesty's ambassador.

55. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to announce a new package of British measures against South Africa during the Prime Minister's visit to Zimbabwe in March.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress in measures he is taking to encourage reform in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We take every opportunity to encourage peaceful change in South Africa towards the replacement of apartheid by a non-racial, representative system of government.

Emperor Hirohito

29. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his decision to attend Emperor Hirohito's funeral.

Mr. Eggar: No. I set out the reasons for my right hon. and learned Friend's decision to attend the late Emperor of Japan's funeral in my written answer to the hon. Member on 16 January at column 12.

EC Foreign Ministers

30. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his fellow European Community Foreign Ministers within the framework of European political co-operation.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met EC colleagues in the framework of European political co-operation in Brussels on 21 November 1988. He will meet them again in Madrid on 14 February.

Political co-operation matters were also discussed at the European Council in Rhodes on 2 and 3 December 1988 which the Secretary of State attended with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and at meetings of the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 19 December 1988, which he and I attended, and on 23 January 1989, which I attended.

Francisco Mendes

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the Brazilian Government concerning the murder of Francisco Mendes.

Mr. Eggar: I was able to discuss with the Brazillian Government our concern at killings of rural organisers when I visited that country in November last year. The death of Francisco Mendes is being investigated by the Brazilian police and arrests have been made.

Libya

32. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweath Affairs if he has any plans to discuss the construction of the Libyan chemical factory at Rablin with the other members of the Western European Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: The issue was discussed at official level in the WEU permanent council on 11 January. The agenda has not yet been set for the next WEU ministerial council meeting, which will take place in April.

39. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding relations with Libya.

Mr. Waldegrave: There can be no question of returning to normal relations with the Libyan Government as long as they maintain their support for international terrorism including the IRA.

75. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further evidence Her Majesty's Government have of an intention by Libya to develop a chemical weapons capability.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary on 13 January at column 773 to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler). We have no doubt that the Rabta plant is intended to produce CW in large quantities and that it could become operational in the near future.

Security Firms

37. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy as to the use of private security firms by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: Where appropriate, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and our posts overseas employ private security firms to protect buildings and personnel.

Human Rights Conference (Moscow)

38. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the United Kingdom's participation in the proposed human rights conference in Moscow in 1991.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received a number of representations from members of the public and hon. Members, both for and against our participation in the proposed Moscow conference in 1991. We have made clear that we are prepared to attend the Moscow conference only if our conditions about further progress in Soviet implementation of human rights commitments are met.

West German Foreign Minister

41. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his West German counterpart; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Herr Genscher on 27 January in Bonn and discussed a range of issues including East-West relations, Eastern Europe, arms control and the middle east.

Angola

43. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the timetable for the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome the recent agreement between Angola and Cuba which provides for total Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola within 27 months from 1 April 1989.

59. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that all foreign troops are withdrawn from Angola; and what action he is prepared to take to seek to bring the Angolan MPLA Government and Unita to the negotiating table.

Mrs. Chalker: We are giving our full support to the implementation of the agreement signed in New York on 22 December 1988 which provides for total Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola.

We would welcome any move to establish internal peace in Angola which had the support of both sides. We continue to be in touch with African leaders in the region who are best placed to mediate.

Namibia

44. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Namibia.

79. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We look forward to implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, which is due to begin on 1 April. The plan provides for free and fair elections in which Namibians will decide their own future.

70. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the quatrapartite agreement on South African withdrawal from Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: Implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia is due to begin on 1 April.

91. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to send observers to oversee the elections in Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: Implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence is a matter for the United Nations Secretary General. We have agreed to provide the signals unit for UNTAG and would consider sympathetically any requests for us to send observers.

France

45. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to attend an Anglo-French summit meeting.

Mrs. Chalker: Plans for the next Anglo-French summit are under consideration and an announcement will be made soon.

Nelson Mandela

50. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations to the South African authorities over the continuing imprisonment of Nelson Mandela and his colleagues sentenced at the Rivonia trial.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to urge the South African Government to release, immediately and unconditionally, Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

53. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will report on the outcome of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Vienna meeting ended on 19 January with the adoption of substantial new measures in the field of human rights as well as co-operation in other fields. It also opened the way for new negotiations on arms control and confidence and security building measures.

Gibraltar

56. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Gibraltar.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Gibraltar on 30 and 31 January 1989. He has no plans to do so again in the immediate future.

Soviet Union

57. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Soviet relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Anglo-Soviet relations are much improved. Mr. Gorbachev will be visiting Britain from 5 to 7 April. Fundamental differences between us remain. But we now have an increasingly wide-ranging dialogue and an expanding programme of co-operation and exchanges with the Russians.

68. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has received concerning the state of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: There has been progress on human rights in the Soviet Union over the past few months. But much remains to be done. We pressed the Russians for more progress most recently at the UK/USSR bilateral talks on human rights on 26 January.

97. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the bilateral human rights talks held in London recently with the Soviets.

Mr. Waldegrave: These talks were useful and wide ranging. The Soviet delegation explained their plans for fundamental legislative reform: we underlined the importance of providing full guarantees that basic human freedoms will be respected. We also pressed the Russians on a number of individual cases of particular concern. They agreed to re-examine our lists of refuseniks and prisoners of conscience.

NATO (Burden Sharing)

61. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to their European partners on the need for greater burden sharing within the Atlantic Alliance.

Mr. Waldegrave: We play an active part in discussion of burden-sharing within the Alliance. For example, we contributed fully to the work on the report on enhancing collective security agreed by Defence Ministers last December.

El Salvador

62. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will visit El Salvador before March to discuss the conduct of its elections.

67. Mr. Boyes To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will visit El Salvador before March to discuss the conduct of its elections.

Mr. Eggar: There are no present plans for a ministerial visit to El Salvador.

Mozambique

66. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Mozambique Government; and what matters he discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met President Chissano and members of his Government during his visit to Mozambique from 17 to 19 September last year. They discussed a range of bilateral and international issues.

Romania

73. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new representations he plans to make to the Government of Romania about systemisation and other infringements of human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave We will continue to protest strongly about Romanian policies which run counter to their CSCE commitments in the field of human rights at every suitable opportunity. I summoned the ambassador of Romania on 30 January to protest about the treatment both of Her Majesty's ambassador in Romania and of the Romanian citizen, Mrs. Doina Cornea.

Third World Debt

74. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet other Foreign Ministers to discuss Third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As the hon. Member is aware, my right hon. and learned Friend has regular discussion with Foreign Ministers from other countries on a wide range of subjects. Debt is an extremely important issue, and is frequently raised in contacts with debtor and creditor countries alike.

Venezuela

76. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Venezuela.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present but I have just returned from a visit to Venezuela where I represented Her Majesty's Government at the inauguration of President Carlos Andres Perez. Whilst there I held useful discussions with a number of Venezuelan Ministers and senior officials, as well as senior members of other delegations.

Southern Africa

80. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on peace developments affecting the front-line states.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome the signature on 22 December 1988 of agreements providing for total Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola and implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence, as contributing to peace and stability in the region. We also welcome the recent resumption of co-operation between South Africa and Mozambique.

Cambodia

82. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are undertaking to prevent the return of the Khmer Rouge to power in Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: We are supporting efforts to promote a political settlement in which the Cambodian people are free to choose their own Government. We make clear our view that world opinion would not tolerate the return to power of those responsible for the atrocities of the period of Khmer Rouge rule.

Spain

85. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet his Spanish counterpart to discuss matters of mutual interest in connection with the Spanish presidency of the EEC Council of Ministers.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend met the Spanish Foreign Minister bilaterally on 6 and 7 February. They will be meeting again on 14 February at the European political co-operation ministerial meeting and on 20 and 21 February at the Foreign Affairs Council.

Kurdish People

89. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of Iraq, Iran and Turkey concerning the plight of Kurdish people.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are aware of the widely felt concern at the treatment of Kurdish minorities. On representations to Iraq, I refer the hon. Member to the written reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 11 January at column 712. We have regularly co-sponsored resolutions on human rights in Iran at both the United Nations General Assembly and the United Nations Commission for Human Rights. We urge that all in Turkey should enjoy the significant improvements in human rights in recent years and that Turkey abide by its international human rights obligations.

Israeli Foreign Minister

90. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet his Israeli counterpart.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Arens has accepted our invitation to visit London on 14 and 15 February.

Cyprus

92. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of the discussions concerning the future of Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers that I gave to earlier questions on this subject on 11 and 19 January at columns 721 and 255. The talks between President Vassiliou and Mr. Denktash are continuing. They are due to review progress with the United Nations Secretary-General again in March.

Foreign Affairs Council

94. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when is the next meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council, and what issues are due to be discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 31 January at column 113.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

95. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), during his recent meeting with the Palestine

Liberation Organisation leader, sought clarification of the status of the Palestine Liberation Organisation covenant in the light of the Algiers Palestine National Council statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Bassam Abu Sharif, a senior adviser to Mr. Yasser Arafat, has said in terms that "the Charter of the Palestine Liberation Organisation . . . has been superseded by the decisions of the PNC, the author of the Charter".

We take every opportunity to welcome this sort of moderate statement and to urge the PLO to continue to fulfil the commitments made by Yasser Arafat in Geneva.

Leonid Lubman

96. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made following representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of Leonid Lubman.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. We last pressed the Soviet authorities about Leonid Lubman at the United Kingdom/USSR bilateral talks on human rights on 26 January and they promised to give us a response. We will be following this up with the Soviet embassy.

Philippines (Political Prisoners)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the recent report from Amnesty International highlighting the increase in torture of political prisoners, he will make representations thereon to the Philippines Government.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans at present to do so. President Aquino is committed to democracy and the protection of human rights. Our policy is to support her efforts to fulfil these commitments.

Spain (British Residents)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has as to the number of British nationals currently residing in Spain.

Mr. Eggar: The most recent estimate provided by Her Majesty's embassy in Madrid in January, 1988, was 160,000 British citizens permanently resident in Spain. There are many more who live in Spain for only part of the year. I am asking our embassy in Madrid for more precise figures and I will write to my hon. Friend when these are received.

Soviet Unions (Exit Visas)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will impress on the Soviet authorities the urgency of the case of George Samoilovich of Moscow who is seeking an exit visa for medical treatment in the West.

Mr. Waldegrave: We press the Soviet authorities about George Samoilovich at every possible opportunity. Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow has made repeated representations to the Soviet authorities highlighting the urgency of this case. During the recent United Kingdom/USSR bilateral talks on human rights, we underlined to Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Adamishin the need for Mr. Samoilovich to be given immediate permission to leave. He promised to re-examine the case and give us a quick response. We will continue to press hard until there is a satisfactory outcome.

Baby Seal Products

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had discussions with the European Commission on breaches of the ban on importation into the European Community of baby seal products.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) on 31 January at column 112.

Iran

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United Nations Secretary-General about the situation in Iran.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. However, we co-sponsored and worked to secure the adoption of resolution 43/1.37 on human rights in Iran which was passed by the UN General Assembly on 8 December 1988.

East Timor

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about the human rights of those living in East Timor.

Mr. Eggar: With our European partners, we have regularly conveyed to the Indonesian Government our views on the importance of respecting human rights and expressed our concern, on humanitarian grounds, in individual cases. There is evidence that respect for human rights in East Timor has improved in recent years.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 9 February 1989

TRANSPORT

Airlines (Licences)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many United Kingdom airlines held licenses containing rights unused for five years on 1 January; and what was the total number of rights thus unused;

(2) how many United Kingdom airlines held route licences containing rights unused for three years on 1 January; and what was the total number of rights thus unused;

(3) what proportion of route licence rights deleted in the Civil Aviation Authority's 10/86 decision had been unused for five years or more;

(4) how many route licence rights unused for at least three years remained in the hands of United Kingdom airlines immediately following the Civil Aviation Authority's 10/86 decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomeley: This is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority. I understand that the information is not readily available in the form requested. I shall draw this to the attention of the chairman of the authority so that he can let my hon. Friend have such information as can be provided.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he will be using to determine whether British Rail's proposals for the construction of a new railway line in Kent establish a commercial case for the new line; whether his Department will be taking independent economic and financial advice on such proposals; and whether he will publish any reports prepared by his Department or by independent financial advisers.

Mr. Portillo: As with all British Rail's major commercial investment, if and when British Rail submits proposals for the construction of a new line in Kent, the Department will expect that investment to earn the required rate of return and will need to satisfy itself that the proposals are financially sound. Such Departmental appraisals are not published since they inevitably contain commercially sensitive information.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discount rate he proposes to use in establishing whether British Rail's proposals for a new Kent railway line offer a commercial return; and whether he will revise the discount rate formula for this project to one requiring a rate of return equivalent to commercial rates of return for new private sector capital projects.

Mr. Portillo: I refer to my answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 30 Janauary, Official Report, column 53.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the level of investment by British Rail for each year from 1978 to 1988; what percentage was invested in the east coast line during each of those years; and what percentage of the east coast investment in each year was spent on (a) electrification and (b) existing stock and system improvement.

Mr. Portillo: The level of investment by British Rail for each year from 1978 to 1988 is as follows:

Year	£ million[1]
1978	421
1979	433
1980	449
1981	373
1982	311
1983	302
1984-85	[2]448
1985-86	427
1986-87	414
1987-88	517

[1] £ million at 1988-89 prices.
[2] 15-month accounting period.

It is not possible to provide percentages for the level of investment in the east coast main line during each of those years. Examples of major investment projects on that line approved in recent years include:

	£ million[1]
Electrification infrastructure	238·9
New traction and rolling stock	168·8
York area resignalling	20·9
Newcastle area resignalling	35·1

[1] £ million (Q1 1989 prices).

There have also been numerous small schemes.

Roads (Construction and Maintenance)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of trunk road will be renewed in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The mileages of motorways and trunk roads renewed this year are likely to be about 52 and 106, respectively. These are lower than planned as a result of the rescheduling of capital maintenance announced on 20 June at column 455.

I am looking to competition between contractors to contain future price increases, so far as possible.

Subject to that, we shall aim to increase the mileages to be renewed each year over the next three years to averages of 84 miles of motorway and 233 miles of trunk road. The maintenance programme for 1988-90 has not been finalised. It will be announced in March as usual.

Carossino Report

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the findings of the Carossino report regarding fair competition between European Community ports.

Mr. Portillo: The Carossino report was adopted by the European Parliament on 16 November 1988 under cover of a resolution which instructed its president to forward it to the European Commission and Council. It is for the Commission to take any further action on the recommendations.

A380

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will designate the A380 as a trunk road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to do so.

London Regional Transport (Assaults)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 45 and 65 years on London Regional Transport buses in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(2) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 65 and 80 years on London Regional Transport buses in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(3) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 25 and 45 years on London Regional Transport buses in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(4) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 16 and 25 years on London Regional Transport buses in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(5) how many children below the age of 14 years have been physically assaulted on London Regional Transport buses in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Portillo: Assaults on passengers on buses in London are dealt with by the Metropolitan police. London regional transport does not maintain a central statistical record of such assaults.

London Underground (Assaults)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many children below the age of 14 years have been physically assaulted on the London underground in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(2) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 16 and 25 years on the London underground in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(3) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 25 and 45 years on the London underground in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987;

(4) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 45 and 65 years on the London underground in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987;

(5) how many physical assaults have taken place on (a) women and (b) men between the ages of 65 and 80 years on the London underground in the last 12 months; and what were the figures for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987.

Mr. Portillo: Available statistics distinguish the age of victims of crime on the London Underground only as between adults and juveniles (under 16). Assaults recorded on the years mentioned were as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Violence against the person	837	878	929	1,048
Per cent. Female (all ages)	14	16	16	20
Per cent. Juvenile (both sexes)	4	4	3	5

Illegal Parking

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action in collaboration with the appropriate authorities to introduce a scheme to remove promptly vehicles parked illegally on major traffic routes in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Enforcement of parking controls in London rests primarily with the Metropolitan police who have powers to remove illegally parked vehicles throughout the Metropolitan police area.

A key objective is to keep traffic flowing on main routes.

Officials maintain regular contact with the police and London borough councils over a range of parking and related matters.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the effectiveness of the law relating to the illegal parking of vehicles on public footways, and publish such statistics as are available concerning the actions taken to implement the law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are currently reviewing the need for changes to the law and shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Statistics on the issue of fixed penalty notices and successful prosecutions for illegal parking on footways are not collected separately.

Fares

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler), Official Report, 26 January, columns 738-39, if he has any plans to introduce differential pricing based on passenger contribution to new investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. It is for the operators to determine the level and distribution of fares.

Clamping

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of clamping on traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Journey times in the wheel-clamping area improve considerably.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what has been the cost to date of the four London assessment studies on roads; and what is his estimate of the total cost of the studies by the time they are completed;

(2) what has been the cost to date of the east London assessment study on roads; and what is his estimate of the total cost of the study by the time it is completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total cost of stage 1 of the studies was about £3 million. It is estimated that stage 2, which began in December 1987, will cost £4 million to complete. The east London assessment study costs are estimated at being one quarter of the total.

In comparison, personal injury accidents on roads in the east London assessment study area alone cost in the region of £50 million each year.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what he estimates will be the cost to the Government of road building and road repairs in London for 1988-89; and what estimate he has for the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost to the taxpayer of national road building and road repairs in London in 1988-89 is expected to amount to some £200 million. This includes expenditure on construction and maintenance by the Department of Transport and the London Docklands Development Corporation, and transport supplementary grant by the Department towards capital expenditure by London local authorities on their road schemes.

It does not include any element of the block grant allocations to the London local authorities. There is no specific grant for roads maintenance.

Comparable forecasts over the next five years are not possible. Over this period work is expected to begin on 21 trunk road schemes costing approximately £600 million.

Anticipated central Government spending on road building and roads maintenance in London in 1988-89 comprises:

	£ million
DTp expenditure on trunk road construction and maintenance	88
DTp transport supplementary grant to London local authorities	42
LDDC expenditure supported by DOE on road construction and maintenance in Docklands	87
Total	217

London Regional Transport

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the allocated grant to London Regional Transport and its subsidiaries for 1988-89; and what estimates have been made for the next five years.

Mr. Portillo: The grant to London Regional Transport for 1988-89 will be £190 million. The estimated grant requirement for 1989-90 is £286·6 million. Estimates have not been made for later years.

British Transport Police

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Transport police were allocated to Liverpool street, Fenchurch street, King's Cross, Euston, Waterloo, Victoria and Paddington stations at the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 February 1989]: BTP figures for uniformed patrol sergeants and constables based at these British Rail termini are in the table:

	Number
Liverpool Street	21
Fenchurch Street	Nil
King's Cross	25
Euston	35
Waterloo	25
Victoria	38
Paddington	16

These officers also patrol the rail network within the police divisions concerned. There is also a small complement of plain-clothes CID officers at each terminus.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Tigray

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to verify allegations that the Ethiopian armed forces have been using napalm against the civilian population of Tigray; whether the concern already expressed to him about the continued violation of basic human rights in Tigray has yet been raised with the United Nations Commission on Human Rights; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We take very seriously allegations of the use of napalm against civilians in the conflict in Tigray but conclusive evidence is not available. We shall raise our concerns about such reports at the current meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

European Youth Foundation

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government makes to the European Youth Foundation, established by the Council of Europe, to enable youth organisations to undertake multilateral international youth activities.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1988 we contributed FF 1,802,478 to the European Youth Foundation. The figure for 1989 is FF 1,861,910.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Adult Education (London)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the future of adult education in inner London following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Jackson: Inner London councils have been asked to set out their intentions with regard to adult education in their development plans for education in their areas after 1 April 1990. We shall be giving careful consideration to these plans which are required to be published by the end of February 1989.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of resignations of adult education lecturers in inner London.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has no data on the level of resignations of adult education lecturers in inner London. The inner London boroughs have made clear in their draft development plans their intention to provide an adult education service which is responsive to local needs, and are considering various approaches to staffing, principally through statutory transfer or block recruitment, in order to secure this provision.

Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the average university lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings;

(2) what is the average polytechnic lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings;

(3) what is the average college of further education lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not readily available. The figures requested are being compiled and I will reply to the hon. Member shortly.

Lecturers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what projections have been made of demand for lecturers for each of the next five years in (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and (c) colleges of further education.

Mr. Jackson: There is no central projection of lecturer numbers in either universities or polytechnics: these are determined by the aggregate decisions of institutions within the resources at their disposal. The public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 612) projects lecturer numbers in further education in 1989-90 at 58,700, implying a staff:student ratio of 9·4:1. This is consistent with progress towards implementing the recommendation of the joint government and local authority association study of efficiency in FE, published in the report "Managing Colleges efficiently", that by 1991-92 the national staff:student ratio for FE should be over 10 per cent. tighter than it was in 1985-86. Cm. 612 does not contain any projection of FE lecturer numbers beyond 1989-90.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what specific proposals there are in view of the long-term commitment to double participation in higher education, to (a) recruit more lecturers and (b) increase in real terms the resources allocated to higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The desirability of substantially widening access to higher education raises fundamental questions about its future pattern, planning and funding. These are now properly the subject of wide-ranging debate which has yet to mature. The Government will continue to review the public funding of higher education annually in the light of developing policies. Institutions will similarly review their staffing and other arrangements.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what monitoring has been undertaken of the numbers of lecturers in the following disciplines in further and higher education, who are leaving the United Kingdom to take up positions abroad, in (a) medicine and dentistry, (b) engineering and technology, (c) veterinary science, (d) mathematical science, (e) physics, (f) chemistry, (g) biology, (h) social sciences, (i) economics, (j) business studies, (k) accountancy, (l) law, (m) languages and literature and (n) arts; what numbers are recorded as having left in each of those disciplines for each of the last 10 years; and how many lecturers are under the age of 30 years in each of those disciplines.

Mr. Jackson: The available information, for universities only, is as follows:

	Non-clinical	Clinical	Total
1980	183	37	220
1981	154	29	183
1982	166	26	192
1983	100	36	136
1984	111	17	128
1985	100	18	118
1986	140	20	160

Donaldson Collection

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to prevent the break-up and sale of the Donaldson collection of musical instruments at the Royal College of Music; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Royal College of Music that it has no intention of selling, either wholly or in part, its collection of musical instruments. The director made this clear publicly in a letter to the editor of The Daily Telegraph published on 30 January. The college is, however, exploring alternative sources of funding for the collection. No decisions have been reached yet.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the impact on the retail price index of raising £500-million in revenue in a full year from each of (a) tobacco products, (b) beer, (c) wine and spirits, (d) petrol, (e) value added tax and (f) vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that the impact on the retail price index of raising £500 million in a full year from the different excise duties and value added tax is as follows:

Raising £500 million in a full year from	Impact effect on the retail price index Per cent.
(a) Tobacco products	0·29
(b) Beer	0·24
(c) Wine and Spirits	0·39
(d) Petrol	0·13
(e) Value added tax	0·12
(f) Vehicle excise duty	0·13

Relocation

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Departments have made under the Government's relocation policy.

Mr. Peter Brooke: I informed the House on 31 March 1988 (columns 610-11) that following the virtual completion of the Civil Service dispersal programme announced in 1979 the Government would set no further central targets for relocation but Departments would be reviewing their location of work with a view in suitable cases to finding locations offering advantages in terms of recruitment and retention of staff, value-for-money and other considerations relevant to service delivery and management. I placed a copy of the guidelines for these reviews in the Library of the House.

In an Adjournment debate on 9 May 1988 I explained at column 128 that these guidelines link departmental reviews of location to the scrutiny of running costs in the annual public expenditure survey so that Departments can report each year to the Treasury on their review plans and progress.

Departmental reports to the Treasury during the 1988 public expenditure survey confirm that most large Departments now have serious and substantial reviews in hand and that the remainder are making the necessary preparations. Over 34,000 Civil Service posts are being reviewed for location or relocation away from London and the south-east, representing more than 15 per cent. of all posts in that region. Many of these reviews are still at the earliest stage and no overall estimates of the future scale of movement can be given. Successful relocations need careful planning and preparation, and I should emphasise that not all the posts now under review will move. Departmental Ministers will announce their decisions once the essential processes of assessment, consultation and decision for each review have been completed.

Ministers are firm in their intention to ensure that the locations of their Departments' activities are thoroughly reviewed and appreciate the potential advantages to departmental management as well as the benefits for regional and urban policy of relocating work outside London and the south-east in all suitable cases. No further central targets for relocation or dispersal are being set, but the Government are confident that the present review process will in the coming years add very significantly to the 12,000 posts located or relocated outside London and the south-east between 1979 and 1987. Since 1987 departmental Ministers have announced new relocation decisions totalling some 3,000 posts, including over 1,000 DSS posts to Glasgow, Belfast and Wigan, and 850 Patent Office posts to Newport. Further announcements can be expected in due course as individual reviews are completed and departmental Ministers take their decisions.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Lawson: I have considered whether the Central Office of Information should become a next steps agency, and have concluded that it should. The aim will be to give it agency status by April 1990.

NatWest Bank

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to increase the powers of the Bank of England to investigate the responsibility of the National Westminster Bank for its subsidiary the County NatWest Bank.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 8 February 1989]: The powers of the Bank of England are fully adequate to enable it to carry out its supervisory responsibilities.

VAT

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy not to implement value added tax standard rating of supplies to university halls of residence until balancing increases can be made in public expenditure plans on either student financial support or grants to universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 February 1989]: The publication of draft clauses implementing the European Court of Justice ruling on VAT zero rates was announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 6 February, Official Report, columns 548-50. Zero rating is to be retained for supplies of construction services and fuel and power to university halls of residence.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer where the special payment made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community of £670,000,000 in respect of overspending by the Community appears in the table indicating the outturn of Community payments in page 1 of Cm. 603, published in January 1988.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The 1988 intergovernmental agreement (IGA) between member states of the European Community made provisions about supplementary finance for the 1988 Community budget. As I informed the House on 23 November 1988, Official Report, columns 1-2, the United Kingdom has paid a contribution of some £613 million (929 mecu) under the IGA. This contribution (£619 million at the exchange rate used for the projection published in Cm. 603 in January 1989) is included in the gross payment of £5,213 million shown on page 1 of Cm. 603: table 3.1, 1988-89 estimated outturn column. As explained in paragraph 6 of Cm. 603 the IGA also provided for a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu (some £670 million) to which all member states would have contributed, but this was not activated in 1988. Therefore no payment was made by the United Kingdom in respect of this reserve.

THE ARTS

Volunteers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what developments there have been on the use of volunteers in museums and heritage organisations.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to announce that my Department is funding a research project to be undertaken to prepare guidelines for the constructive use and management of volunteers in museums and heritage organisations.

The project will be divided into four phases:

(i) Review of the literature, existing guidelines and directives;
(ii) Current practice in the management of volunteers;
(iii) Practicalities: the practical issues in managing volunteer effort;
(iv) The preparation, piloting and publication of guidelines for management.

When the guidelines are produced they should include practical advice on a number of aspects of the use of volunteers, such as recruitment, training, responsibilities, statutory obligations and rewards. The results of the study should encourage museums' and galleries' managements to consider employing volunteers or, where they already do, to make better use of these arrangements.

The project which should be completed by March 1990, will be overseen by a steering committee which will include representatives from national, local authority and independent museums, the Ironbridge Institute, the Museums and Galleries Commission, the British Association of Friends of Museums, the National Association of Decorative and Fine Arts Societies (voluntary conservation corporations), and the National Trust.

This project to examine the use and management of volunteers in museums and heritage organisations is timely in the context of my initiatives on museums training and on improving access to collections. I look forward to seeing its conclusions in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

VAT Registrations

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new businesses have registered on Merseyside for value added tax in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maude: The latest available figures for Merseyside provided by the Department of Employment are for 1986, when 2,918 new businesses registered for VAT compared with 2,905 in 1985 and 3,262 in 1984.

Pirate Radio

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to combat pirate radio interference.

Mr. Atkins: It is because of the interference caused to authorised radio users by unlicensed broadcasters that last year my Department's radio investigation service (RIS) carried out a record number (444) of raids against them. The RIS will continue to pursue unlicensed radio stations with vigour and with a view to identifying and prosecuting those responsible for the running of such stations. Furthermore in the forthcoming Broadcasting Bill the Government will be seeking additional powers to make it an offence to supply goods and services for the operation of an unlicensed station, to advertise on an unlicensed station or to solicit others to do so and to be engaged in the operation of the unlicensed station.

EC (Trade Deficit)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which European Economic Community countries are running a smaller trade deficit with the rest of the Community, expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product, than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: On the basis of the latest information available all other Community countries except Portugal and Greece are running either surpluses or smaller deficits as a percentage of GDP.

Companies Bill [Lords]

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received regarding the terms of the Companies Bill [Lords].

Mr. Maude: I have received a number of detailed commentaries on the Bill, in particular from some of the major accountancy bodies, from the Law Society, and from the Law Society of Scotland.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met officials of the Society of British Aerospace Companies; and what was discussed.

Mr. Atkins: I last met representatives of the Society of British Aerospace Companies on 14 December 1988. We discussed export opportunities for the industry.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement about the payment of regional development grant.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have decided that the current four-month moratorium on payments of grant under the original regional development grant scheme will be lifted tomorrow. Payments which are at present held up by the moratorium will be made as soon as practicable. This will be of immediate benefit to those companies which remain eligible for grant under the scheme's transitional provisions.

Footwear

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the British Footwear Manufacturers Association to discuss imports of footwear from south-east Asia.

Mr. Alan Clark: As I said in reply to the hon. Member's priority written question of 18 January (Official Report, columns 237-38), I met the hon. Members for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) and for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) and representatives of the footwear industry, including the British Footwear Manufacturers Federation, in February 1988 to discuss footwear imports from the far east. Imports from south-east Asia were also discussed.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bernard Ingham

Q23. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects Mr. Bernard Ingham to return to a Government Department from service in 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: In due course.

Dunchurch and Rugby

Q172. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Dunchurch and Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Select Committees (Members' Evidence)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what advice she has given to hon. Members who have served in the Government about giving evidence if requested to do so by a Select Committee regarding the activities or views expressed by them while a member of the Government.

The Prime Minister: None, but I hope that such hon. Members would continue to observe the established conventions relating to the disclosure of advice given by officials to Ministers.

ENERGY

Wind Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the impediments, in the order of importance, to the full-scale exploitation of wind energy in the United Kingdom; and what measures he is taking to resolve these impediments.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware of any impediments to the full-scale exploitation of wind energy in the United Kingdom other than the need to obtain the necessary planning consents and its need to be commercially viable and environmentally acceptable.

My Department's programme of research, development and demonstration in the field of wind energy is intended to provide information to the wind energy industry and other concerned bodies. The programme is examining such areas as wind turbine design and performance in the broadest sense, through the construction and monitoring of a range of experimental and prototype wind turbine generators; this is supported by a generic programme covering, for example, materials of construction, aerodynamic behaviour, noise reduction and control methodology. It is hoped that the programme will provide a basis for the commercial exploitation of wind energy as well as giving an assessment of the acceptability of the technology to the general public.

The primary objective of the proposed experimental wind farms at Capel Cynon, Landon Common and Cold Northcott is to examine environmental impact and public acceptability.

Energy Conservation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to assess the arguments advanced for energy conservation and energy efficiency by the chairman-designate of PowerGen on 26 January in a speech made in London.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I very much welcome Mr. Malpas' interest in energy efficiency.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 26 January, Official Report, columns 994-5, when the separated plutonium store at Sellafield became party to full physical safeguards by Euratom inspectors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Stored civil plutonium has been open to inspection since 1973.

Magnox

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 26 January, column 695, if he will make a statement on the period 4 June 1986 to 31 December 1986 to which his reply of 4 June 1986, Official Report, columns 594-5 does not refer.

Mr. Michael Spicer: During the period 4 June 1986 to 15 December 1986, co-processing of safeguarded and non-safeguarded Magnox fuel took place with safeguards inspectors having full access to the reprocessing plant. After 15 December 1986 the plant was washed out and since then safeguarded and non-safeguarded fuel has been reprocessed in separate campaigns.

Sellafield (Euratom Inspectors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many Euratom inspectors have had a permanent presence at Sellafield since March 1986; how often they have reported data to Euratom headquarters; to what data they have had access; and how physical checks and assays on civil spend magnox fuels were conducted between March 1986 and 1 January 1987, when co-processing of civil and non-civil unsafeguardable spent magnox fuel was being conducted.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how Euratom inspectors verified the flows and inventories of civil nuclear materials at the Magnox reprocessing plant at Sellafield in the transitional co-processing period to 31 December 1986, to which he referred in his answer of 4 June 1986, Official Report, columns 594-5.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the European Commission.

Hinkley Point (Shutdown)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the safety implications of the shutdown of the Hinkley Point reactors at the end of January.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that Hinkley Point A reactor 1 was shut down on 23 January following difficulties during routine refuelling. Investigations revealed that two pieces of a fuel element had fallen back into the reactor. They have been recovered and work to check for, and recover, any further debris is under way. There was no hazard to the public or staff. It is hoped to resume operation of the reactor in a few days subject to the agreement of the Health and Safety Executive.

Reactor II at Hinkley Point A was shut down on 20 January for its statutory biennial inspection, having completed 700 days' continuous operation.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessments he has made of the impact of privatisation of the national electricity grid with particular reference to the technical challenge posed by the concept of a unified electricity policy by 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Bill places a statutory duty on the National Grid Company to facilitate competition in the supply and generation of electricity. Under the draft licence to be issued to the National Grid Company, authorised generators wil be able to use the grid to convey their electricity. This is in line with the objectives underlying the completion of the internal energy market in 1992.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting Act 1981

41. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ak the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the Broadcasting Act 1981 as amended by the Broadcasting Act 1987 as it relates to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Renton: It is not part of the Government's role in relation to broadcasting to undertake such assessments. The Independent Broadcasting Authority has a responsibility under the Broadcasting Act 1981 to ensure that the commercial television companies meet the needs of the communities they serve.

Safe Deposit Centres

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an inquiry as to the lessons derived from the Knightsbridge safe deposit centre robbery, with its terms of reference to include pursuing the request of Mr. Justice Robert Lymbery that the authorities should consider licensing such premises and their owners.

Mr. John Patten: We have made it clear that we look to the private security industry itself to provide self-regulation. We propose to discuss with the private security industry ways in which safe deposit centres might be brought into the self-regulatory framework.

Refugees

131. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees are currently residing in Britain; and what is their country of origin.

Mr. Renton: Information is not available on the total numbers of those who have been granted refugee status in the United Kingdom and are still living here. Available information on grant of refugee status, by nationality, is set out in an annual Home Office statistical bulletin (most recently "Refugeee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1987", issue 16/88); while information on acceptances for settlement as refugees is published in the annual Command paper (most recently "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1987" Cm 415, Table 18), and in a quarterly statistical bulletin (most recently "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter 1988", issue 38/88, table 3).

Key Guns

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ban the sale of key guns that unlock doors and cars and are being used for criminal purposes.

Mr. John Patten: There is no existing legislation prohibiting the sale of key guns, but it is an offence to carry such an article for use in the course of or in connection with theft. There are legitimate uses of key guns, eg. by locksmiths, and any proposals for controls on sales would need to take this into account. We are consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers about the effectiveness and availability of key guns and other similar devices, and have asked what problems they have caused police forces.

Courts (Bradford)

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the application by Bradford metropolitan council for new court accommodation for the Keighley petty sessional division.

Mr. John Patten: Before a final decision can be made, it will be necessary to assess the relative merits of all the 22 bids for approval of new accommodation which have been received in the Department. This assessment will be carried out as quickly as possible and authorities informed of the outcome before the end of March.

COMECON (Travel)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions permission for emigration to, or travel within, the Soviet Union or other COMECON eastern bloc countries has been denied to applicants formerly employed at MI5.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 26 January at column 704.

Human Organ Sales

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take about the letter dated 1 July 1988 sent by the kidney transplant centre to the immigration service to facilitate the entry to the United Kingdom of a Turkish man whose kidney was sold for a transplant at the Wellington Humana hospital.

Mr. Renton: On the information so far available it does not appear that there has been any contravention of the immigration legislation.

Police Cells

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently being held in police cells; and which police stations are holding the prisoners outside the Metropolitan police area for the latest date available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At unlocking on Tuesday 7 February, 272 prisoners were held in police cells in England and Wales. Of these, 80 were held at the following police stations outside the Metropolitan police area:

Cheshire
Chester

Essex
Basildon
Chelmsford
Colchester
Clacton
Grays
Southend

Hertfordshire
Welwyn Garden City
Letchworth

Kent
Ashford
Canterbury
Margate
Rochester

Merseyside
Liverpool (Main Bridewell)

Surrey
Guildford

Sussex
Horsham

Drugs

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments have implemented the Home Office circular issued on the 25 September 1987 entitled "Through Care of Drug Misusers in the Prison System"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A police statement and guidelines prepared in discussion between the prison department and probation service for the introduction at all establishments of a more co-ordinated and positive response to drug misusers were issued on 25 September 1987. This policy, which also advocates increased involvement by prisons of counselling facilities in the community, was welcomed by the advisory council on the misuse of drugs.

Pressures on the prison system militate against immediate and wholesale implementation, but there is no lack of evidence that efforts are being made to secure improvement. I shall look for further signs of progress at the end of the year.

Military and Police Training

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any guidelines are issued to immigration officers on whether to allow entry to people coming in to attend private military or police training courses.

Mr. Renton: The general position is that any overseas national who can satisfy the immigration officer that he is genuinely seeking entry for only a limited period, and that he can maintain and accommodate himself during his stay, may be admitted for a temporary period unless in a particular case there are specific grounds for his exclusion. Certain overseas military personnel may be exempt from immigration control under the provisions of the Immigration Act, 1971 relating to members of visiting forces.

Prisons (Facilities)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking in respect of recommendations by the chief inspector of prisons that all prison cells should have in-cell toilet facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons report on prison sanitation will be published on 21 February. We will respond to the recommendations in the report when it is published.

Police Powers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department if he will set out in the Official Report the current powers of a police officer to stop and require a member of the public to give his name and address.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Unless the police have reasonable grounds to suspect that a person is committing or has committed a criminal offence they can stop him and require him to give his name and address only if he is the driver of a motor vehicle (under the Road Traffic Act 1972) or arriving at a port (under the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplementary Temporary Provisions) Order 1984 and its Northern Ireland equivalent).

Crime Statistics

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of homicides recorded by the police in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Hurd: The numbers of recorded homicides in the Metropolitan police district during the last 10 years are as follows:

	Number
1978	118
1979	179
1980	204
1981	131
1982	192
1983	149
1984	164
1985	187
1986	210
1987	193
1988	[1]148

AIDS

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to testing for AIDS and the HIV virus persons convicted of soliciting for immoral purposes.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 6 February 1989]: At present we do not see a balance of argument in favour of compulsory HIV testing for prostitutes, or others convicted of soliciting offences. Available tests cannot be relied upon to detect infection acquired less than three months before the test. In any case a person who is free from infection when tested may become infected soon thereafter. Identifying a number of infected individuals would be likely to have no more than a marginal effect on the general risk of infection through intercourse with prostitutes.

WALES

Housing Plans

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish tables on the plans for Welsh housing in a similar form to that of table 9.1, table 9.3, table 9.4, table 9.5, table 9.8, table 9.9 and table 9.12 in Cm. 609.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 31 January by my right hon. Friend and to Cm. 617 which was laid before the House on 30 January. Information on local authority lettings is set out in the table and more detailed information will be provided in "Public Expenditure in Wales 1989-90—1990-91—A Commentary by the Welsh Office", which is to be published shortly.

Local authority lettings

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Baglan-Lonlas Road

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he now expects work to commence on the Baglan to Lonlas road; if he will consider letting the contract in two stages so that a bridge has the first priority; and when he expects the road to be completed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work on the Earlswood to Lonlas section is expected to start towards the end of 1989-90 and be completed in 1992. The crossing of the river Neath will be part of the second phase, which is expected to take three years and is planned for completion simultaneously with the final phase. This phasing minimises the disruption to traffic using the A48 and is the most cost effective.

Public Libraries

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for the public library service in Wales in the light of the response to the Green Paper on the library service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The powers we propose in the Local Government and Housing Bill will preserve the core of the public library service—the borrowing of books and other written materials and the use for reference and consultation purposes of all such materials, microfilm materials or any catalogue of the authority's own holdings. The free service will cover Welsh as well as English language materials in these categories. It is my intention that public library authorities in Wales should have discretionary charging powers comparable to those proposed for introduction in England which were announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts in his statement yesterday.

Many of the 70 individuals and organisations in Wales who commented on the Green Paper supported the proposals for joint ventures with the private sector. I would encourage both the private and public sectors to pursue their interest in such ventures. I shall continue to observe the progress of the incentive funding scheme introduced in England by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts under which pump-priming funds are to be provided for such ventures there. I shall then consider whether it would be desirable to introduce such a scheme in Wales.

Mr. Alan Bellwood

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to bring a prosecution under the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, or any other regulations against Alan Belwood, formerly of Isfryn, Aber, near Cwrfnewydd, who, until recently, operated an unlicensed mink farm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 6 February 1989]: I have considered the circumstances of the case very carefully and have concluded that no useful purpose would be served in undertaking a prosecution.

ReChem Plant (Discharges)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instigate an inquiry into the incidents of alleged pollution and alleged illegal discharges of polychlorinated biphenyls and heavy metal pollutants at the ReChem plant, Pontypool

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 February 1989]: No. I am content for the WWA to continue to give consent to, and monitor, discharges to public sewers in line with their responsibilities.

DEFENCE

Front-line Units (Women)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends deploying women in front-line units of the three services.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Members for York (Mr. Gregory) and for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 7 February 1989.

Royal Naval Dockyards (Radioactivity)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of environmental clean-up of (a) Rosyth dockyard, (b) Devonport dockyard, (c) Faslane dockyard and (d) the former Chatham dockyard from radioactivity arising from the use of these ports by nuclear-powered Royal Navy ships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 2 February 1989 at columns 405-6.

Radioactivity (Holy Loch)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific arrangements exist with the United States Government to cover the cost of the environmental clean-up of the Holy Loch military naval complex in the event of an accident involving the release of significant quantities of radioactive material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The memorandum of understanding which governs the use of the Holy Loch by United States missile-carrying nuclear-powered submarines is classified. Her Majesty's Government are satisfied with the provisions of this agreement, including those which relate to financial liability.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has estimated the financial cost of environmental clean-up and environmental protection from the processing and reprocessing of nuclear materials prepared at Springfields, Capenhurst, Sellafield, Aldermaston, Burghfield and Caerwent for the United Kingdom nuclear warhead programme since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: British Nuclear Fuels plc has, I understand, made provison in its long-term costings for the costs of clean-up and other decommissioning expenses related to the processing and reprocessing of materials for the United Kingdom nuclear warhead programme at all sites at which relevant work takes place. Likewise, MOD has made provision for its own sites.

Nuclear Weapons (Environmental Monitoring)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring of the aquatic, aerial and land environment surrounding bases; (a) storing nuclear warheads, (b) manufacturing nuclear warheads and (c) handling nuclear-powered ships or submarines is conducted by his Department or on behalf of his Department; at what annual cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Environmental monitoring is performed at all MOD sites as appropriate. It has, however, been the policy of successive Governments for reasons of national security neither to confirm nor to deny the presence of nuclear weapons at any place. The costs of the monitoring operations could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons Test Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to date for the environmental clean-up of radioactive contamination on (a) Christmas Island, (b) Monte Bello and (c) Maralinga nuclear weapons test sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: On completion of the United Kingdom atmospheric testing and related programmes and as part of the whole operation, the United Kingdom undertook extensive radiation surveys and rehabilitation work in areas which may have been affected. The costs of these operations to the United Kingdom cannot be separated from the overall expenditure on the whole test series which cannot be published for reasons of national security.

Nuclear Accidents (Sellafield)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been to date the total cost of the environmental clean-up arising from nuclear accidents in 1973, 1976, 1979, 1983 and 1986 at Sellafield during the processing of nuclear materials for the nuclear warheads programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cost of cleaning up after incidents that have occurred at Sellafield is the responsibility of BNFL. I can neither confirm nor deny the involvement of nuclear materials for the warhead programme in any particular incident.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport West, Official Report, 25 January, column 653, on the holding of chemical warfare agents by his Department, he will list the location of each of the chemical agents held.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not MOD policy to disclose such detail.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many information exchange agreements the Atomic Weapons Establishment has with United Kingdom universities or other institutions of higher education.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Atomic Weapons Establishment does not have any information exchange agreements with United Kingdom universities or other institutions of higher education.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts or agreements the Atomic Weapons Establishment has placed with universities and other institutions of higher education in each financial year since 1979-80; and what was their total worth in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Sainsbury: The numbers of research contracts and agreements let by the Atomic Weapons Establishment over the last five years, together with the amount expended in each year, is as follows:

Financial Year	Number of contracts/ Agreements operative	£'000
1984-85	32	223
1985-86	30	261
1986-87	37	344
1987-88	41	355
[1]1988-89	39	330

[1] Estimated

Comparable information for the years 1979-80 to 1983-84 is not available.

Nuclear Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any recent communication from the new Canadian Defence Minister on the prospective purchase of British Trafalgar class nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role his Department is playing in the feasibility study for the construction of new nuclear power stations which might replace existing ones at Calder Hall and Chapelcross; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. The feasibility study has been launched as a commercial initiative by British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether the health and safety standards for workers at uranium mines, uranium milling plants, and uranium tailing waste disposal facilities from which the United Kingdom has obtained its unsafeguarded uranium for defence uses remain comparable in safety terms with those standards applied to the armed services and British Nuclear Fuels plc work force in the United Kingdom who process military nuclear materials.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. The last delivery of uranium ore concentrate to the United Kingdom for defence purposes was in 1973.

Military Aircraft (Accidents)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich on 25 January, Official Report, column 651, if he will give the numbers of military aircraft destroyed or severely damaged by accident during each of the years 1980 to 1985 in the form given in the annual statements on the Defence Estimates for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Neubert: This information is available in the relevant statements on the Defence Estimates (SDE) as follows:

Common Service Discipline Act

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to there being a common service discipline Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Consideration has been given to this from time to time. Given the need, for operational reasons, to preserve differences in the statutory provisions for the different services, and that provision for these differences would continue to have to be made even within a common service discipline Act, our judgment, weighing the considerable effort and upheaval that such a change would involve against the benefits to be gained, is that there is not a sufficient case for changing the present statutory framework of service discipline.

Nuclear Shells

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what future plans he has to scrap obsolete nuclear shells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All the nuclear shells deployed with NATO forces are the property of the United States Government, and it is a United States, not a United Kingdom, responsibility to make plans for disposing of any which become obsolete.

Small Arms

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the disposal of surplus small arms.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been decided that in order to rectify an anomaly in the present rules the special restriction which currently applies to the sale of small arms surplus to service requirements will be lifted. Consequently the export of such weapons will in future be handled in exactly the same way as new weapons, and the same stringent export control measures will apply.

Transmitters (Nuclear Explosions)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Droitwich BBC low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply. The transmitter has not been hardened, and there are no plans to do so.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees (Membership)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give details of the members of (a) the Treasury and Civil Service and (b) Education, Science and Arts Select Committees from 1979 with membership dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Membership of Select Committees for Sessions 1979-80 to 1986-87 inclusive is given in the Select Committee sessional returns for those years. The information sought for the period since the beginning of the 1987-88 Session is as follows:

Treasury and Civil Service Committee
Higgins, Mr. Terence L. (Chairman)
Beaumont-Dark, Mr. Anthony
Beith, Mr. A. J.
Budgen, Mr. Nicholas
Hamilton, Mr. Neil
Quin, Ms. Joyce
Radice, Mr. Giles

Raison, Mr. Timothy (Chairman)
Armstrong, Hilary (added 8 March 1988; discharged 18 January 1989)
Evennett, Mr. David
Flannery, Mr. Martin
Greenway, Mr. Harry
Griffiths, Mr. Win
Hicks, Mrs. Maureen
McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
Steinberg, Mr. Gerry
Thompson, Mr. Jack (discharged 8 March 1988)
Thornton, Mr. Malcolm
Turner, Mr. Dennis (added 18 January 1989)
Vaughan, Sir Gerald

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all nuclear waste currently excluded from the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 under the exemption Order 1986.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Radioactive Substances (Substances of Low Activity) Exemption Order 1986 exempts all very low level solid wastes, less than 0·4 bq/g, and organic solvent wastes containing only carbon-14 or tritium at total concentrations of less than 0·4 bq/ml, from consideration under the Act. It also exempts gaseous wastes which have a half-life of less than 100 seconds.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remedial action has been taken at the low level radioactive waste disposal sites at (a) Drigg, (b) Dounreay, (c) Harwell and (d) Amersham to ensure the presence of chelating agents assisting the migration of radionuclides off site is minimised; and what has been the cost to date in 1989 pound sterling to implement this policy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The presence of chelating agents in wastes disposed of at the British Nuclear Fuels low-level radioactive waste disposal site at Drigg are excluded, as far as practicable, by means of the authorisation issued by the joint authorising Departments and the BNF "conditions of acceptance". No chelating agents have been disposed of at the Harwell and Amersham sites. Questions relating to Dounreay are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate and his Department's radioactive waste division seek to ensure that generators of nuclear waste separate aggregated waste into streams by half-lives of the radionuclide or transuranic.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Radioactive waste is disposed of in accordance with authorisations issued under section 6 of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 which stipulate disposal routes, activity limits and other conditions designed to ensure that any dose to the general public is below the maximum permissible as recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. In setting limits etc, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution takes account of the half-lives of radionuclides in the wastes but does not require their separation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by volume, curie content and location all known amounts of the radioactive waste products of (a) nickel 59, (b) nickel 63, (c) niobium 94, (d) cobalt 60, (e) americium 241, (f) caesium 137, (g) molybdenum 99, and (h) technetium 99.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Except for molybdenum 99 which has a half-life too short to be of significance, and is therefore not recorded, information as requested on the other radionuclides listed is contained in the 1987 United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory a copy of which will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in receipt of Nirex's recommendations concerning suitable sites for the disposal of low and intermediate-level nuclear waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive Nirex's proposals for a radioactive waste disposal facility shortly.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing (a) the proportion by volume of low level radioactive waste produced annually arising from nuclear power plants, reprocessing spent fuel, industrial radioisotope production and medical radioisotope use and (b) the proportion by curie content of the low level wastes produced in the categories set out under (a).

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures are contained in the latest edition of the waste inventory, a copy of which is being placed in the House Library.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the disposal of United Kingdom-generated toxic wastes in west and central African countries; and if he will make it his policy at the next council of European Economic Community Environment Ministers to raise the matter of the illegal export of European Economic Community origin toxic wastes to the countries of west and central Africa.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No United Kingdom generated toxic waste has been sent to African countries for disposal, as far as the Government are aware. Proposals to do so would be subject to the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988.

The Government oppose the export of toxic waste to countries which do not possess suitable facilities for its safe disposal. The matter has been discussed several times at the Environment Council. The Government have no plans to raise the issue at the next meeting.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts, in terms of volumes and curie content, of radioactive waste from the Medical Research Council's radon source materials exist at Barton-le-Clay, Bedfordshire; and what are the present plans to dispose of this radioactive waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the Radioactive Substances Act of 1960 has been in force there has been no authorisation to store radioactive waste from the Medical Research Council's radon source materials at Barton-le-Clay. I understand that radioactive materials were used there between 1939 and 1948. I am seeking confirmation from the council that no such materials remain.

Rats

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what figures are available as to the present number of rats and the numbers in the most recent two years;

(2) what arrangements are being made to monitor the changes in the number of rats.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally on rat numbers. The Prevention of Damage by Pests Act 1949, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, places a general duty on local authorities to ensure that their districts are kept free from rats and mice so far as practicable.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek a report from water authorities on the action they are taking to repair sewers as a means of controlling the public health nuisance from rats.

Mr. Howard: In 1987-88, water authorities spent some £308 million on maintaining and extending their sewers and sewage treatment facilities—an increase of 30 per cent. in real terms on 1981-82. The extent to which sewer condition affects the size of the rat population is not, however, clear. Water authorities also carry out rodent control exercises in sewers and along river banks.

Council Houses (Rochester-on-Medway)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has received from the Rochester-on-Medway council about the proposed management buy-out of council housing stock; and what steps he will take to ensure that an independent expression of views by tenants is made before considering any consent to transfer under the Housing and Planning Act 1986.

Mr. Trippier: The council has informed us that it has resolved to sell its entire housing stock and has given us a preliminary indication of its plans. If it decides at a later date, having consulted its tenants, to apply for the Secretary of State's consent to dispose of the stock, my right hon. Friend will of course consider the application on its merits.

Schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985 (as inserted by schedule 1 to the Housing and Planning Act 1986) requires the council to consult its tenants before applying to the Secretary of State for consent. My right hon. Friend is obliged by the terms of the schedule not to entertain an application from Rochester-on-Medway council until it has consulted tenants in accordance with the schedule.

Water Supplies

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what forecasts he has received from water authorities in England and Wales about the adequacy of water supplies in their area during the coming nine months; and what steps are being taken to limit abstraction from areas and ground water sources in anticipation of a drought.

Mr. Howard: I have received no forecasts from water authorities about the adequacy of water supplies for the coming nine months. However, a review of water resources early in January showed that in most areas water storage levels were satisfactory, but that in some of the drier southern areas levels were below normal. Since the exceptionally dry winter weather has continued, I am watching the situation closely by way of arrangements made with the organisations that represent the water undertakers. Two applications under the provisions of the Drought Act 1976 have been received from water undertakers.

Devon Structure Plan

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has made to the Devon county council to cater in its structure plan for a large immigration of population into Devon during the period up to 2001; and if he will make a statement as to the part currently played by his Department in suggesting what should be included in county structure plans.

Mr. Chope: The Department was consulted by Devon county council on its document "Devon in 2001" but made no representations about the level of population growth. It is for county councils to decide what alteration they propose to their structure plans. General advice on the content of structure plans is to be found in the memorandum accompanying circular 22/84. The new series of planning policy guidance notes and minerals policy guidance notes introduced last year provide national guidance on planning policy. My right hon. Friend has also published regional planning guidance for some regions in response to proposals from conferences or groupings of local planning authorities.

Landfill

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify the landfill sites in the South-East known to have dangerous or potentially dangerous concentrations of methane gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution wrote to all waste disposal authorities in England and Wales on 15 August 1988 requesting them to carry out detailed surveys of both closed and operational landfill sites in connection with landfill gas.

They were asked to establish information on the amount and composition of gas, the geology of the site and its surroundings, the location of any sewers or other services through which gas might migrate, the location and proximity of any housing or other developments, the extent, nature and efficacy of any existing gas control measures and to establish what extra measures may be required.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is analysing the results. We expect to receive its report shortly.

Radionuclides

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what radionuclides have been measured off-site at Drigg, Dounreay, Harwell and Amersham International, formerly the radio-chemical centre, traceable to the low-level nuclear waste disposal sites; at what distances and in what quantities these migrating radionuclides have been discovered; and whether any site licence regulations have ever been breached by off-site migration.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information required for the British Nuclear Fuels low-level radioactive waste disposal site at Drigg can be found in the recent report by British Nuclear Fuels on "Radioactivity and Monitoring of the Environment 1987", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. No radionuclides traceable to low-level nuclear waste disposal have been measured off the Harwell and Amersham sites. No conditions in the authorisations issued by the joint authorising Departments have been breached by off-site migration. Questions relating to Dounreay are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce details of the guaranteed standards scheme for domestic customers of the privatised water industry.

Mr. Howard: The Government's proposed guaranteed standards scheme which I am setting out today is a no-nonsense, no-quibble scheme providing a spur to management to ensure the best commercial practices. Customers who suffer inconvenience will receive an automatic entitlement to a payment or credit of £5 for every day, or each occasion, that a breach of one of the standards or service occurs. This will avoid the frustration customers at present experience because they cannot obtain any compensation in such cases. The scheme covers delays beyond the period notified by the company for restoring water supplies following a planned interruption of supply; delays of more than 24 hours in restoring water supplies following an unplanned interruption which has been notified to the company; appointments which are not kept on the day specified by the company to the customer; failure to answer all reasonable written inquiries about bills or requests for alternative method of payment which take more than 10 to 20 working days depending on the need for further investigation; failure to answer reasonable written complaints about water supply or sewerage services within a specified period.

I am discussing detailed targets with the industry before we lay the draft regulations.

I also welcome today's announcement by the Water Authorities Association and the Water Companies Association of their three draft codes of practice.

The outline model general code of practice for customers, on which the new companies will base their codes of practice for customers, will clarify the services to be provided and their terms and conditions. It also contains useful advice on enquiries and complaints procedures.

The code of practice on leakages sets the terms under which metered domestic customers will be entitled to a one-off discount against a higher than expected bills as a result of an undetected leak from a supply pipe. The discount is conditional on the customer repairing the leak within a specified period.

The revised code of practice on disconnection provides valuable advice and new safeguards for customers who have difficulty paying their bills. It sets out procedures to be followed before disconnection. I welcome the water industry's continued efforts to ensure that the occasions on which disconnection occurs should be kept to the absolute minimum of those customers who can pay but refuse to do so.

These new rights for water customers are in addition to the new framework of individual statutory rights for customers and the companies' duties to provide service. They add to the protection provided by the director general who ensures that customers are not over charged or suffer loss of service quality, and also to our proposals for customer representation and investigation of complaints.

I will be making copies available in the House Library of the guaranteed standards scheme and, with the agreement of the industry, copies of the three draft customer codes of practice.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: My Department shares in the work of representing the Government on a number of international bodies, in particular the European Community, the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Commonwealth, and the Council of Europe. Among its other international commitments, my Department also subscribes to or is represented on the following international organisations:

International Association on Water Pollution and Control;
International New Towns Association;
International Solar Energy Society;
International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources;
Paris Commission on Prevention of Marine Pollution from Land Based Sources.

In addition, it is represented on a number of other international organisations in the field of building research.

Vote X, 2 of the Department's Supply Estimates 1988-89 gives details of subscriptions paid by the Department to international organisations. Figures on the total cost of participation in these bodies, which would include staff time and travelling expenses, are not held separately and are not available other than at disproportionate cost.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde of 1 February, Official Report, columns 217-8, whether he has received a letter from Millwall football club regarding the list of incidents of hooliganism annexed to his letter of 21 December 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman of Millwall football club wrote to me on 5 January about the arrest and ejection figures included in the list of incidents of football hooliganism in 1988-89, annexed to my letter of 21 December to parliamentary colleagues. The figures for the Millwall v Newcastle match on 19 November 1988 were as reported by the police soon after the game. These were subsequently revised by the police and a revised version of the illustrative incidents list was made available on publication of the Football Spectators Bill. I have exchanged letters with the chairman of Millwall on the point.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1989-90 his estimate of the number of male and female employees in respect of whom employers are expected to pay national insurance contributions at the 9 per cent. and 10·45 per cent. rates, together with the forecast amount of the employers' contributions at each rate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates for 1989-90 have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department and are as follows:

National insurance contribution rates (secondary class 1)	Number of employees (in millions)			Estimated yield £ billion
	Male	Female	All
9 per cent
Contracted in	1·0	1·2	2·2	1·6
Contracted out	0·5	0·9	1·4	0·6
Total	1·5	2·1	3·6	2·2
10·45 per cent
Contracted in	3·0	0·7	3·7	4·9
Contracted out	5·9	1·9	7·8	9·6
Total	8·9	2·6	11·5	14·5

The figures include employers' contributions in respect of married women and widows who pay contributions at the reduced rate, whether contracted in or contracted out.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1989-90 his estimate of the numbers of male and female employees expected to pay national insurance contributions at the 5 per cent., 7 per cent., and 9 per cent. rates, together with the forecast amount of the employees' contributions at each rate; and if he will divide the figures between those contracted in and those contracted out.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates for 1989-90 have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department and are as follows:

National Insurance Contribution Rates (Class 1)	Number of employees (in millions)			Estimated yield (£ billion)
	Male	Female	All
5 per cent.
Contracted in	0·4	1·3	1·7	0·3
Contracted out	—	0·1	0·1	—
Total	0·4	1·4	1·8	0·3
7 per cent.
Contracted in	0·4	1·4	1·8	0·6
Contracted out	0·1	0·2	0·3	0·1
Total	0·5	1·6	2·1	0·7
9 per cent.
Contracted in	4·0	1·7	5·7	5·0
Contracted out[1]	6·4	2·6	9·0	8·8
Total	10·4	4·3	14·7	13·8

[1] The figures shown for contracted out employees include employees contributing to personal pension schemes.

Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which aspects of the benefits system introduced in 1988 are being monitored by means of (a) special research programmes, (b) special inquiries of local authorities and (c) voluntary agencies.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on Friday 27 January at columns 802-03.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving sickness benefit who are currently residing in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Currently, 50 claimants in the Republic of Ireland are being paid sickness benefit from the Department's overseas branch at Newcastle upon Tyne. There could be a small number of claimants being paid by the Department's local offices but the numbers involved, if any, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if low-income families with children who apply for housing benefit are assumed to be receiving family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The housing benefit regulations allow a source of income that would be available to a claimant if he or she were to apply for it to be taken into account as a notional source of income. Family credit will be assumed to be in payment to a housing benefit claimant from a date that allows time for a claim to be determined but only where the claimant appears to meet all the conditions for family credit yet has not claimed it. The applicant will be informed accordingly. In cases where family credit has already been claimed it will not be taken into account until actually received.

Benefits (Uprating)

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of social security benefits will receive less than the full amount of April's benefit upratings because they are receiving transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available. It is estimated, however, that around 770,000 income support recipients who are in receipt of other social security benefits may receive less than the full amount of April's benefit uprating because of transitional protection.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his answer of 6 February to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, Official Report, column 624, he will publish in the Official Report the detailed information about benefits for disabled people which the right hon. Member requested from him.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows.

All the benefits provided specifically for disabled people more than retained their value between November 1979 and April 1988 with real increases ranging from 0·6 per cent. to 9·4 per cent.

I regret that information about the number of disabled people who lost free prescriptions and free school meals is not available.

It is estimated that about 30,000 income support recipients getting the disability and higher pensioner premiums will still require transitional protection after the uprating in April 1989; the vast majority of disabled people will get an increase.

Most disabled people on housing benefit gained or saw no change in their benefit as a result of the April 1988 reforms. About 50,000 are estimated to have lost some or all of their benefit.

Transitional protection was introduced for vulnerable groups of claimants to restrict their losses as a result of the 1988 reforms to £2·50 per week. This included disabled people who qualify for the disability premium or who qualified for the handicapped needs allowance in the old housing benefit scheme. Those dependent on social security benefits will still see an overall increase in their benefit income after the transitional payments have been reduced by £2 per week in April 1989. Special arrangements have been made for those who would not otherwise do so.

Water Charges

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the figure referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North on 21 January, Official Report, column 848, as being used for the calculation of the element of income support levels for April 1988 in consideration of water charges.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As explained in paragraph 5 of the explanatory notes to "The Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", the calculations were based on the actual water charges paid by claimants (suitably uprated) where these were recorded in the annual statistical inquiry, and on an uprated average value of £1·65 per week for other cases in the sample.

RPI Error

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there are any further disbursements planned to charities following the error in the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: Further to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 3 May 1988 at columns 422-24, I am pleased to announce a further disbursement to charities of £2·8 million. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland will be making their own arrangements.

I have placed a list of those organisations that are to receive payments in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Quality

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of his Department's officials are engaged in matters relating to the maintenance of the quality of foods sold by retailers.

Mr. Ryder: Many officials throughout my Department are engaged to some extent in work that is directly or indirectly related to the maintenance of the quality of food. The inquiries that would be necessary to assess the percentage of time spent on such activities would be disproportionately costly and cannot be justified.

RSPB

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend and I met the chairman of the RSPB council on 17 November last year. We discussed the RSPB's consultation paper on the reform of the common agricultural policy. I also had an introductory meeting with the chairman on 3 November, and discussed a wide range of matters with him.

Third World

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the research being done by his Department or commissioned by his Department on the development and testing of seeds and the development and testing of agro-chemicals, intended for use in Third world countries.

Mr. Ryder: My Department is neither conducting nor commissioning research specifically on the development and testing of seeds or agro-chemicals intended for use in Third world countries.

Fisheries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the fishing industry regarding Government funding of fisheries and research and development.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have recently held discusions about the Government's policy on funding of fisheries research and development with the Sea Fish Industry Authority and representatives of the fish industry sector and I await their response.

Pesticides

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the type and name of pesticides, which are banned in (a) France, (b) West Germany and (c) the Netherlands, but permitted in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Council directive 79/117/EEC, prohibiting the placing on the market and use of plant protection products containing certain active substances, and its amending directives (183/131, 85/298, 86/214, 86/355, 87/181 and 87/477) list those pesticides that are prohibited throughout the European Community. A copy of this directive is available in the Library of the House.

Member states may also approve or prohibit other pesticides nationally, but there is no central register of such actions. The United Kingdom Government approve only pesticides that are submitted for specific uses within its territory and are supported by appropriate safety and efficacy data. Advice on these matters is given by an independent expert committee, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, to the six authorising departments, the Department of Health, the agricultural Departments and the Health and Safety Executive. Lists of approved pesticides are likely to differ between member states due to differing climatic and environmental conditions, the types of crops grown and differing agricultural practises.

Salmon Poaching

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics he has received from water authorities in England and Wales about the incidence of salmon poaching in 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given on 11 January 1989 concerning the number of prosecutions brought by water authorities. It is not possible to quantify the incidence of poaching which takes place.

"Planning Permission and the Farmer"

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the cost to his Ministry of producing the recent HMSO publication "Planning Permission and the Farmer" and of producing and distributing to all farmers the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food leaflet promoting the publication.

Mr. Ryder: The time spent by Ministry, Department of the Environment and Welsh Office officials in preparing the guide "Planning Permission and the Farmer" and the leaflet giving the key points in the guide cannot be identified separately from their other work and so no estimate of the overall cost is possible. Those elements of the production and distribution costs, falling to this Ministry, which can be identified amount to some £16,000, or some 7p per farmer in England and Wales. Because the guide is an HMSO publication, the printing and publication costs are not borne by this Ministry: such costs should be recovered by HMSO through revenue from sales.

Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications have been received for the farm woodland scheme to date in England and Wales; and what is the area involved.

Mr. MacGregor: By 31 January 1989, almost 500 applications for the farm woodland scheme had been received by agriculture departments in England and Wales. These applications covered an area of more than 3,000 hectares.

Beef

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 6 February, concerning production and intervention buying of beef, if he will now give the relevant figures for Great Britain, excluding Northern Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The beef production figure provided in the earlier answer for the United Kingdom and EC total are Commission estimates. No separate estimates are made for Great Britain. Northern Ireland production accounted for about 15 per cent. of United Kingdom production in 1988 and if we take account of this, production in Great Britain would be 820,250 tonnes (10·7 per cent. of EC production). Intervention purchases in 1988 were 7,000 tonnes (1·8 per cent. of total Community production).

Food Industry

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the standing of the British food industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The British food industry is one of the most efficient in the world providing the consumer with an extensive variety of high quality foodstuffs at reasonable prices. My Department works closely with the industry and consumers to encourage improvements in the production and marketing of food, and to ensure high standards of food safety and quality. The Department carries out an extensive scientific programme to monitor the most important fundamental aspects of the food industry's performance, and in particular operates a thorough and comprehensive system of surveillance to check on the safety and quantity of foods. The work has been described in detail in my Department's food surveillance reports including the latest one on the food chain, "Food Surveillance 1985-88".

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any advice or recommendations from his veterinary products committee following appeals by any of the companies involved in the experimental farm trials into the use of bovine somatotropin in cows.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The veterinary products committee provides advice in confidence to my Department at any stage of a product licence application, if appropriate.

River Esk (Pollution)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what data his Department has on radioactive contamination of the River Esk near Ravenglass, Cumbria, including by isotopes of Americium and caesium; how and by whom the monitoring is carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Data obtained from my Department's monitoring work on radioactivity, including from isotopes of Americium and caesium, around the River Esk are published in aquatic environment monitoring reports which are available in the Library of the House. My Department also collects such data in respect of soils, grass and milk from the Ravenglass area, the results of which were summarised in a paper "The Science of the Total Environment" volume 35, pages 267-283 in 1984. Further data are published as the results of my Department's terrestrial environment monitoring programme which are available in the Library of the House. My Department also receives such data from British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) summaries of which are published by BNFL in reports entitled "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment" which are also available in the Library of the House.

I am satisfied, on the basis of this substantial monitoring work, that doses of radiation to members of the public in this area are well within the internationally required limits. My Ministry's monitoring shows that the dose to those few members of the public receiving the highest external exposure in 1987 in West Cumbria, allowing for the addition of dose from other pathways, was 0·11mSv as compared with the National Radiological Protection Board level of 0·5mSv per year.

Listeria

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research projects he is funding into listeria monocytogenes and the research establishments where these projects are undertaken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1989, c. 319]: The research projects my Department is funding on listeria monocytogenes and the research establishments where these are being carried out are set out in the table. These projects form part of the extensive ongoing research programme on food safety which my Department undertakes.

Projects Funded by MAFF on Listeria Monocytogenes

A. Projects specifically on L.monocytogenes

1. Effect of heat and irradiation on survival of Listeria in chicken (Leicester University).
2. Effect of microwave cooking on the survival of L.monocytogenes in cooked and chilled foods. (Campden Food and Drink Research Association—CFDRA).
3. The thermal death characteristics of L.monocytogenes in foods (CFDRA).
4. Survey of Listeria in foods (MAFF, Food Science Laboratory).

B. Projects including L.monocytogenes

1. Growth characteristics of food poisoning organisms at sub-lethal temperatures (CFDRA).
2. Investigate combinations of sub-lethal temperatures to preserve processed foods (CFDRA).
3. Recovery and detection of sub-lethally injured pathogens (CFDRA).
4. Microbial antagonism to increase the safety and stability of chilled foods (CFDRA).
5. Influence of food components and preservative factors on food borne pathogens (Institute of Food Research—Norwich).
6. Microbiological hazards in domestic and institutional handling of food (IFR—Norwich).
7. Influence of food components and preservative factors on food borne pathogens (IFR—Norwich).
8. Safety and quality of poultry products in relation to processing (IFR—Bristol).
9. Define factors controlling microbial growth and develop predicture models (IFR—Bristol).
10. Heat induced tolerance of microorganisms (IFR—Bristol).
11. Bacteria and hygiene in abattoirs (IFR—Bristol).
12. Improve classification and identification of food microorganisms and maintain the National Collection of Food Bacteria (IFR—Reading).
13. Low socium chloride foods/microbiological safety and technological characteristics (British Food Manufacturing Industry Research Association—BFMIRA).
14. Shelf-life prediction of chilled foods—food spoilage and poisoning (BFMIRA).
15. Rapid methods to assess the microbiological quality of foods (BFMIRA).

Mineral Hydrocarbons (Food)

Mr. Neale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Food Advisory Committee on the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food.

Mr. Ryder: Following a review of new toxicological data by the Department of Health's Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, the Food Advisory Committee has advised that mineral hydrocarbons are no longer acceptable for food and should be removed from direct food use and from food processing as quickly as practicable.

I propose to introduce regulations as soon as possible under the Food Act 1984 to implement the advice of the Food Advisory Committee to ban the use of these substances as food additives and in food processing. I should stress, however, that there is no evidence that these substances have to date produced adverse effects in humans.

Mineral hydrocarbons are permitted by regulation for use on dried fruit such as prunes and currants to stop them sticking together, on citrus fruit to replace the natural wax coating lost in washing, on the protective rind of some cheeses, as a glazing agent on some sugar confectionery, and may occur as residues from the processing of foods such as confectionery, jellies, bread and sausages.

One further use, in chewing gum bases, is being separately reviewed and the FAC has also been asked to review their use in the manufacture of food packaging materials.

I will make a further announcement about their use in chewing gum and food packaging materials when the Committee's further advice is received.

SCOTLAND

Football Grounds (Arrests)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many arrests there were for offences committed inside Scottish football grounds in each of the past five seasons.

Mr. Rifkind: Figures for the period prior to the 1987-88 season are not held centrally and chief constables have indicated that it would be very difficult to compile the information at this stage. During the 1987-88 season 845 arrests were made.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance has been given by his Department or the Scottish Development Agency to (a) Standard Fireworks Ltd. and (b) Scottish Heritable Trust.

Mr. Lang: None.

Rating Reform

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a complete list of subsections of sections and paragraphs of schedules to the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 which have been, or are proposed to be in legislative proposals before Parliament, amended, substituted or inserted by later legislation, including those themselves the subject of further alteration; and if he will provide the derivation and the date of the coming into force of each alteration listed.

Mr. Lang: The amendments and repeals which have been made to the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 are detailed in schedule 12 part II, paragraphs 15-38 and schedule 13 to the Local Government Finance Act 1987. The dates from which these provisions take effect are laid down in the Local Government Finance Act 1988 Commencement (Scotland) Order 1988 (SI 1988/1456).

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all orders made under the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, including any subsequently revoked;

(2) if he will list all paragraphs of orders made under the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, including any subsequently revoked, which have been the subject of later amendment, substitution or insertion; and if he will provide the derivation and the date of the coming into force of each alteration listed.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

Investment Projects

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of inward investment projects brought to (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole by Locate in Scotland in each year since 1982, giving the number of jobs involved and the volume of expenditure.

Mr. Lang: (a) There have been 10 decisions to locate or expand inward investment projects in Greenock and Port Glasgow since 1982. Details of planned investment remain commercial in confidence.

(b) The following table shows the number of decisions to locate or expand inward investment projects in Strathclyde in the years 1982-83 to 1987-88.

	Number of projects	Planned jobs	Planned investment (millions)
1982-83	15	2,608	98
1983-84	26	2,279	82
1984-85	38	5,801	432
1985-86	33	3,304	315
1986-87	26	2,957	345
1987-88	62	6,302	226

(c) The following table shows the number of decisions to locate or expand inward investment projects in Scotland as announced in the years 1982-83 to 1987-88.

	Number of projects	Planned jobs	Planned investment (millions)
1982-83	46	5,400	186
1983-84	54	6,900	166
1984-85	69	9,443	689
1985-86	58	8,217	562
1986-87	50	5,084	427
1987-88	88	11,852	337

Community Care

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the Griffiths report concerning community care and the needs of carers and what extra resources he intends to make available to achieve these objectives.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Griffiths report made a number of potentially far reaching recommendations which require careful consideration. My right hon. and learned Friend and I are currently studying the report carefully.

Teachers (Dismissal)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the number of cases considered by education authorities in each year since 1983 under section 88 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 which (a) resulted in dismissal and (b) did not result in dismissal.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) on 17 January 1989 at columns 163-64.

Birds (Shetland)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has of the level of breeding success for the red-throated diver, Arctic skua, great skua, puffin and kittiwake in Shetland in 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total population size of Arctic terns in Shetland in 1980; and what proportion this represents of the British and EEC populations, respectively;

(3) what information he has on research conducted or commissioned to identify the key factors that have influenced the breeding success of Arctic terns in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list the estimated number of young that the Shetland Arctic tern population has successfully reared in each of the last five years; and what the breeding success of this bird has been in other areas in the United Kingdom over the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am seeking up-to-date information from the Nature Conservancy Council and I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for amendments to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 with particular reference to any steps to overcome the nuisance of persons consuming alcohol in inappropriate public areas to the detriment of local amenity; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The recent review of the 1976 Act has revealed a large measure of support for a number of the reforms canvassed in the consultation paper issued in 1986 and I hope to be in a position to state the Government's intentions in that regard shortly. Meantime, however, I have to say that there is much disquiet about the easy availability of alcohol to young people, including under-age purchasers, through some supermarkets and other off-licences; and we propose tighter controls on these outlets. We have also received many representations about the proliferation of regular late night extensions; and we propose a much tighter control in that regard, for example, by requiring that applicants shall show good reason why the particular locality needs or would benefit from such extension. We shall also consider a stricter regime for residential areas; and we propose to ban repeated applications within two years of any unsuccessful application.

So far as the consumption of alcohol in public places is concerned, our consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) show a strong preference for an experiment in the use of precisely targeted local bye-laws; and we shall now embark on detailed discussions with these bodies as to how this may best be taken forward. This would not, however, require legislation since local authorities' existing powers would suffice to cover the making of such instruments.

A1 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest available figures for traffic flows at peak times on the A1 road between (a) Edinburgh and Tranent, (b) Tranent and Haddington, (c) Haddington and Dunbar and (d) Dunbar and the English border, and if he will make a statement on the growth trend of traffic on the A1 over the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1989]: Information on traffic flows is contained in the following table:

1987 Average Daily Peak Flows[1]
(vehicles per hour)

	AM	PM
Edinburgh-Tranent	1,450	1,700
Tranent-Haddington	1,050	1,300
Haddington-Dunbar	750	850
Dunbar-National Boundary	450	500

[1] For Haddington-Dunbar single day count.

Information on traffic growth is not available for the last ten years but the statistics held show annual growth rates of 4·9 per cent. between Tranent and Haddington in the period 1980-86; 5·3 per cent. between Haddington and Dunbar in the period 1981-87; and 3·3 per cent. between Dunbar and the national boundary in the period 1978-88. With the opening of the Musselburgh bypass in December 1986 a comparison between traffic flows prior to and since that date, on the section from Edinburgh to Tranent, is inappropriate.

These figures compare with the nationally recorded growth of 3·4 per cent. per annum over the period 1976-87.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, when he last met the Chairman of Harland and Wolff to discuss the proposed management/employee buy-out bid; and if he will make a statement.

30. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Tom King: I last met the chairman of Harland and Wolff on Monday to discuss his proposal for a management-led buy-out. Other discussions with possible acquirers are also continuing. It is clear that under public ownership there can be no future for the yard and it is therefore a matter of urgency to try and achieve a private sector solution to Harland and Wolff's problems.

Human Rights

12. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if it is the policy of his Department to consult the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights before introducing new legislation which affects human rights in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Yes.

Shorts plc

13. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Shorts plc.

Mr. Tom King: The Government believe that the best prospects for Shorts are in the private sector. An information memorandum was issued on 10 January to a number of prospective purchasers inviting them to submit preliminary proposals. From these a short list of potential buyers will be drawn up and detailed negotiations will start as soon as possible.

At the request of a number of interested parties, the date for receipt of preliminary proposals has been extended from 10 February to 17 February.

Political Reform

14. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made towards the establishment of a cross-community devolved assembly in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Clearly, there needs to be agreement between the political representatives of the two communities before such an assembly can be convened. Over the past year, the leaders of all the main constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland have told my hon. Friend that they support the objective of devolved institutions involving both communities. We hope that ways can be found to enable the parties to make progress in discussions between them.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

15. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the review of the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement to be completed.

Mr. Tom King: Work is continuing on the review of the working of the intergovernmental conference under article 11 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. It is not possible, at this stage, to say when it will be completed.

22. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete the review of the workings of the inter-governmental conference set up under the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

23. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the completion of the review of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

33. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I have had discussions with Irish Ministers about the review of the workings of the intergovernmental conference under article 11 the Anglo-Irish Agreement at the meetings of the conference on 2 November, 14 December and 8 February.

36. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the review of the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I have received a number of contributions from members of the public, political parties and other interested bodies in response to my invitation to them to submit views on the working of the intergovernmental conference under article 11 of the agreement. Contributions are still coming in. They will all be carefully considered.

Proscribed Organisations

16. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes he has recently considered making to the list of paramilitary and associated organisations presently proscribed under the Emergency Provisions (Northern Ireland) Act.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The status of a number of organisations in Northern Ireland is kept under close review.

Students (Age Participation)

17. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the age participation rate for students from Northern Ireland in higher education in 1979, the latest such figure and his projection for the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The age participation rate in Northern Ireland in 1979-80 was 16·3, and in 1986-87 was 20·6. No projection has yet been made for the year 2000.

These figures incorporate both a continuing improvement in the academic standards achieved by school leavers in Northern Ireland and an increased willingness to enter higher education.

Criminal Justice (Pressure Groups)

19. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met a pressure group in the criminal justice field; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Secretary of State regularly meets representative groups in Northern Ireland to discuss a wide range of issues. If the hon. Member has a specific group in mind, I will endeavour to provide the particulars requested.

Century Newspapers (Transfer)

20. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the proposed transfer of ownership of Century Newspapers to Thomson Regional Newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend has received two representations about the proposed transfer of ownership which has been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Watercourses (South Antrim)

21. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the designated watercourses within the South Antrim constituency.

Mr. Viggers: The list of designated main, minor and urban watercourses within the South Antrim constituency is lengthy, and I will write to the hon. Gentleman with the requested information.

Education Pressure Groups

24. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received from education pressure groups.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received a large number of representations, written and oral, on a wide range of educational topics. These include representations on the proposals on education reform, school development proposals, the consultative paper on the public library service, the introduction of a student loans scheme, the transfer procedure and funding for the provision of sport, recreation, arts, museums, libraries, youth and community services. I have had meetings with representatives from interested groups on many of these subjects.

28. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received from education pressure groups.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received a large number of representations, written and oral, on a wide range of educational topics. These include representations on the proposals on education reform, school development proposals, the consultative paper on the public library service, the introduction of a student loans scheme, the transfer procedure and funding for the provision of sport, recreation, arts, museums, libraries, youth and community services. I have had meetings with representatives from interested groups on many of these subjects.

29. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent meetings he has held with education pressure groups.

Dr. Mawhinney: During the past three months I have met various representatives from education pressure groups. These have included the Association of Head Teachers in Secondary Schools, the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers, the National Association of Head Teachers (NI), the Association of Governing Bodies of Grammar Schools in Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Youth Forum, the Northern Bishops and a delegation from Ballymena boys and girls high schools.

Criminal Justice

25. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the judiciary in Northern Ireland to discuss criminal justice in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Secretary of State has not met the judiciary for this purpose.

Prison Reform

26. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met a pressure group campaigning for a reform of the prison system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I meet various statutory and other bodies with an interest in prison matters from time to time. The last such occasion when prison matters were raised was not by a pressure group but during a meeting between my right hon. Friend and the statutory Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on 16 January 1989.

Terrorism Legislation

27. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the judiciary in Northern Ireland concerning the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 and the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Bill 1988.

Mr. Tom King: Any representation which I might receive from judges in Northern Ireland would be confidential.

Fibre-Optic Links (EC)

31. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the provision and modernisation of fibre-optic links in Northern Ireland to improve links with the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have not received any such representations. Under the STAR programme we have agreed with the European Community that funding will be available from the European regional development fund for:

(i) an optical fibre ring within Northern Ireland;
(ii) an optical fibre link from Northern Ireland to Great Britain; and
(iii) an optical fibre link between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Security

32. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation.

34. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security position in Northern Ireland.

40. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross).

Privatisation

35. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing Her Majesty's Government's policy on privatisation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Negotiations are continuing with parties interested in acquiring Harland and Wolff. An information memorandum was issued on 10 January to a selected number of possible acquirers of Shorts and more detailed discussions will take place with them. The Government are at present considering a report by consultants on the options available for privatising Northern Ireland Electricity, and it will make its proposals known in due course.

Police-Military Co-operation

37. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is taking steps to improve the level of co-operation between police and military in Northern Ireland; and what assessment he has made of whether there are sufficient joint headquarters.

Mr. Tom King: Close co-operation between the police and Army is essential if anti-terrorist operations in Northern Ireland are to be fully effective. This matter is kept under careful review and is regularly discussed at security meetings under my chairmanship. The Chief Constable of the RUC and the General Officer Commanding Northern Ireland have recently established a number of joint operations rooms in order to enhance the present high level of co-operation. Others will be in operation shortly.

Republic of Ireland (Ministerial Meetings)

38. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will next have meetings with Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I met Irish Ministers at the meeting of the intergovernmental conference in London yesterday; a copy of the joint statement issued after the meeting, which also lists the subjects discussed, has been placed in the Library.

Terrorism

39. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking within the Province to combat the ability of terrorist groups to act outside the Province.

Mr. Tom King: The Royal Ulster Constabulary and Garda Siochana maintain close liaison to combat terrorism. In particular the Chief Constable of the RUC, the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana and senior members of both forces have regular discussions on security matters under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference. There is also regular contact between the RUC and other law enforcement agencies in Britain, United States of America and Europe.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about Libya's sponsorship of IRA terrorism.

Mr. Tom King: We have firm evidence that Libya has been responsible in the past for supplying substantial quantities of weapons and explosives to the Provisional IRA. This connection has been well illustrated during the last three years by recoveries of arms both in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland which can clearly be traced back to Libyan origins.

Both this Government and the Irish Government are committed to working together unremittingly to deny the terrorists and their weapons a hiding place anywhere in Ireland. It is also vital to maintain and increase international co-operation in the fight against state-sponsored terrorism in our efforts to prevent further weapons of death and destruction reaching their destination in Ireland, or elsewhere.

It is a credit to the security forces on both sides of the border that a significant quantity of Libyan supplied arms and explosives have been recovered in recent years.

Conway Mill

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the Government's policy on public funding of projects in Conway Mill with particular regard to applications for assistance from the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Government policy on the payment of public funds to community groups, where there is evidence that such payments could directly or indirectly further the aims of a paramilitary organisation, is set out in the parliamentary statement of 27 June 1985 by the then Secretary of State. The nature and extent of paramilitary influence within Conway Mill is such that this policy has been applied to groups operating in or out of the Mill. Whilst I have reviewed the situation I am satisfied from the information available to me that influence remains such as to justify the continued withholding of funds to such groups in accordance with the terms of the parliamentary statement.

Article 3 of the bilateral agreement of 18 September 1986 between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Ireland on the International Fund for Ireland provides that disbursements from the Fund shall be consistent with the economic and social policies and priorities of the respective Governments. I have accordingly indicated to the board of the fund that it would be inconsistent with the social and economic policies of this Government if the fund were to provide assistance to any body operating in or out of Conway Mill.

It is, on the other hand a most important aspect of our policies to stimulate development and activity in the more deprived areas of Belfast, including, of course, west Belfast. In this context, we welcome the initiatives taken by the International Fund for Ireland, within its programmes, to provide extra help for disadvantaged areas, including west Belfast. I understand that they have further proposals to that end under consideration.

Public Housing

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the public authority housing built in Northern Ireland since 1960 which has been demolished, or is scheduled for demolition, by district council area.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, and the chief executive has advised me that the information requested is as follows:

Deaf People (Services)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many qualified social workers with specialist training for work with people who are deaf are currently employed in Northern Ireland by (a) health and social services boards, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) other bodies; how many have completed training in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 February 1989]: The numbers of qualified social workers with training for work with deaf people currently employed in health and social services boards are shown in the table:

	Number
Eastern	12
Southern	3
Western	1
Northern	4

Information is not held centrally on the numbers employed in voluntary organisations and other bodies.

In each of the years 1984 and 1985, one member of staff completed a post qualifying course. No post qualifying training has been available since the closure of the course at Moray house, Edinburgh, in 1985, but the Department of Health will be providing financial assistance for the development of a course at the Open university, which is expected to start in 1991. Considerable interest is already being expressed in Northern Ireland in an Open university course.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many interpreters for the deaf are employed by public bodies in Northern Ireland; how many have been trained in each of the last five years; what action he is taking to increase their number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 February 1989]: There are no interpreters for the deaf employed on a full-time basis by public bodies in Northern Ireland. There are, however, four qualified interpreters who provide a service to the deaf in addition to their normal employment or duties. Two other people (not employed by public bodies) have passed stage III examinations in communication skills set by the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People, and it is expected they will go on to undertake specialist interpreters training. A local branch of the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People was set up in Northern Ireland in 1987 with the help of a £35,000 seeding grant from the Department of Health and Social Services. It is working in partnership with health and social services boards to improve the communication skills of staff and there are now over 20 classes providing courses for a range of interests including social workers, nurses, day centre staff, other professionals and interested members of the public. British sign language courses have increased in number, and the first lip reading course was held last September.

Police and Criminal Evidence Order

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete his deliberations on the proposed draft Police and Criminal Evidence Order 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since some responses to the proposal for a draft Police and Criminal Evidence Order published last July were not received until towards the end of the year, I am still in the process of considering them. I expect to complete the task within the next few weeks.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to lay the Police and Criminal Evidence Order before the House.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen.)

After consideration of responses is completed, some time will be needed for checking and printing the text, but I hope the whole process will not take more than two or three months in all.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training Scheme (Cheshire)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Cheshire are now participating in the Government's employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: At 27 January 1989 there were 2,340 trainees on employment training in Cheshire.

Retired People (Re-employment)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider initiatives to encourage people at or over the conventional age of retirement to seek re-employment on a part-time or full-time basis.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have no current plans to introduce initiatives of this nature.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of women's unemployment for 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Lee: The annual average rates of unemployment, consistent with the current coverage, among women in the United Kingdom for the years 1979 and 1988 were 4 per cent. and 8·1 per cent. respectively.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of unemployment on Merseyside.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the unemployment rate for Merseyside was 15·9 per cent.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of employees in employment who were receiving training in the appropriate survey period from the labour force survey and as a percentage of all employees for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 7 February 1989]: Estimates from the 1983 labour force survey of employees receiving training are not available on a comparable basis with later years. Estimates from labour force surveys for the years 1984 to 1987 inclusive, as requested, are shown in the table:

Employees of Working Age Receiving Job-Related Training—Great Britain, Spring Estimates

Employment Training

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the part being played by the employment training programme in training the unemployed for jobs in the tourism industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is playing a valuable part in training unemployed people for jobs in tourism. Several training managers in tourist areas have identified placements with employers in the tourism industry, and are already helping trainees to get training in hotels and catering and related leisure activities. I am pleased with the progress so far.

Safety (Agriculture)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to amend the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act to allow for the appointment of safety representatives within the agriculture industry.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 already allow for the appointment of safety representatives within the agriculture industry.

Horse Racing

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions for breaches of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act have been brought against companies involved in the equestrian and horse racing industry in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Nicholls: During the period 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1988 there were two prosecutions—one in 1986, and one in 1987—brought against companies involved in the equestrian and horse racing industry.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits have been made to horse racing and equestrian establishments by the health and safety inspectorate, in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not separately recorded and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers from the equestrian and horse racing industry have been permanently disabled as a result of accidents at work, in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to strengthen the quota system for the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Lee: The quota scheme is among the matters being considered in the internal review of services to people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many Health and Safety Executive inspectors are permanently dedicated to all aspects of work on the Channel tunnel;

(2) how many health and Safety Executive inspectors are based at the Channel tunnel complex of works.

Mr. Nicholls: Health and Safety Executive inspectors who have inspection responsibility for the Channel tunnel complex are based in the executive's south-east area local office at Ashford, Kent.

Three inspectors are engaged mainly on Channel tunnel work. They have site inspection responsibilities and also, together with specialists from the executive's technology division based at East Grinstead, advise the Translink Joint Venture consortium on health and safety standards during construction of the tunnel.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the industrial accidents which have occurred during work on the construction of the Channel tunnel giving, respectively, the dates, details of the accidents, the names of people injured and the results of any investigations carried out.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to receive the Health and Safety Executive report on the accident which led to the death of Andrew McKenna in January on a Channel tunnel construction site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are still investigating the circumstances which led to the death of Andrew McKenna on 23 January 1989. The investigation will continue until all available evidence has been considered.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he proposes to take to reduce the dangers facing construction workers on the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Nicholls: The responsibility to provide safe working conditions at the Channel tunnel rests with the contracting companies. The Health and Safety Executive will continue to pursue its inquiries to the highest levels and any enforcement action with determination where safety measures do not achieve the standards required.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ask the Health and Safety Executive to publish an interim report within two weeks on the inquiry they announced into the accident which killed John Symes, a construction worker on the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement on the result of the existing inquiry.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are carrying out an investigation into the circumstances of the accident in the Channel tunnel on 6 February 1989. Information from the investigation will be made available to the employer, employees' representatives and to the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the death of John Symes as a result of a recent accident on a Channel tunnel construction site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: John Symes was crushed between an overhead travelling crane and the fixed steelwork of the tunnel boring machine frame on 6 February 1989. Inspectors from the Heath and Safety Executive have begun an investigation into the incident.

Working Conditions

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives have been undertaken by the Government to comply with the European Commission programme of action to (a) study rules on working conditions in the United Kingdom, (b) establish a standard form of contract, (c) improve procedures on informing and consulting workers and (d) improve contracts of employment and employment relationships not relating to full-time employment of indefinite duration.

Mr. Lee: The Commission of the European Community is undertaking a comparative study on working conditions and labour relations in the Member states. On the other issues, there are no proposals currently being considered by the Council of Ministers.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

42. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices currently employ practice managers; and what his estimate is of the number of general practitioner practices which would employ practice managers to administer budgets as proposed in the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect centrally figures relating to the employment of practice managers by general practitioners. However, a survey in 1986 indicated that in Great Britain there were about 3,000 practice managers working approximately 30 hours a week. Over a quarter of all practices employed practice managers: this ranged from 10 per cent. of single-handed practices to almost 60 per cent. of practices with five or more doctors. We would expect these figures to have increased in the intervening period.

It will be for general practitioners themselves to decide on the level of support required to administer their practice budgets and whom to employ.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the future changes in general practitioners' list sizes if the proportion of income attributable to capitation fees is increased from 46 per cent. to 60 per cent., as proposed in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We expect GPs' list sizes to settle at levels which enable GPs to provide good quality care to their patients. Patients will be able to judge that care and the service they receive for themselves and will be free to transfer between practices as they choose.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there will be a maximum number of patients a general practitioner can have on his/her list under the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At present, the maximum number of patients an individual general practitioner can have on his/her list is 3,500 or, if he/she is in partnership, 4,500 subject to an average of 3,500 for each of the partners in the practice.

The current arrangements are being considered within the context of the primary care White Paper "Promoting Better Health".

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether patients of a budget-holding general practitioner practice as proposed under the White Paper, "Working for Health", will be able to top up the budget (a) individually or (b) collectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper, "Working for Patients", makes clear that general practitioner practices participating in the practice budget scheme will be allocated NHS resources for the treatment of patients. I have no plans to allow patients individually or collectively to make a personal contribution to the NHS practice budget.

National Association of Health Authorities

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has considered the recommendations made to his Department in the National Association of Health Authorities' report entitled "Action not Words"; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received a copy of "Action Not Words: A Strategy to Improve Health Services for Black and Minority Ethnic Groups", published by the National Association of Health Authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: When I spoke at its launch last November I welcomed the report and its constructive criticism. In responding to the recommendations addressed specifically to the Department, I said that we

1. had already begun to integrate ethnic minority health into the review process and that henceforth it would be a standard feature;
2. saw the value of ethnic monitoring of service delivery and were exploring how it could be developed;
3. had demonstrated the importance we attached to training;
4. had taken positive steps to ensure that black and minority ethnic groups were represented on health authorities and FPCs;
5. acknowledged that the proposed central resource unit had some attractions but needed to consider whether establishing a separate unit was the best way forward.

In these and other ways we shall continue to seek to improve health services for people from ethnic minorities.

Social Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers approved in connection with the Mental Health Act 1983 have been appointed in each social services authority (a) under transitional assessment arrangements, (b) by examination between 1983 and 1987 and (c) since the examination was discontinued.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not collected centrally. It is for individual social services authorities to determine how many approved social workers they need to appoint in the light of local circumstances.

Mental Illness

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors determined the reduction in the proportion of funds allocated by his Department for directly commissioned research relevant to mental illness from 9·3 per cent. in 1987-88 to 8·2 per cent. in 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: The relative scale of research relevant to mental illness commissioned by the Department varies from year to year in the light of existing and emerging research knowledge, the development of relevant services, and changes in the need for research on other subjects. In 1988-89 £1,307,900 has been made available for directly commissioned research relevant to mental health. In 1987-88 the comparable sum was £1,267,000. Because the total health and personal social services budget has grown, the sum set aside for 1988-89 is a lower percentage of total funds than in 1987-88.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to the reply of 1 December 1988, Official Report, column 383, to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle), if he will make it his policy to ensure that staff of community care hostels receiving discharged psychiatric patients receive information about the illness from which they previously suffered, or continue to suffer, regardless of the constraints of medical confidence or the wishes of the patient.

Mr. Mellor: When a patient is discharged to a hostel in the community, there should be a continuing care plan agreed by hospital staff and those who will be caring for him in the community, and this will usually include information about the patient's illness. The basis of successful care is, however, mutual trust between patients and those involved in their treatment. Giving community care hostel staff information about an individual patient against the wishes of that patient would not be appropriate as it would vitiate that trust.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify each donation which his Department has made in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Freeman: The Department provides financial support to a variety of voluntary organisations whose activities may include raising funds by public appeal. However, it is not the policy of the Department to make donations directly into such funds.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken following publication of the results of the survey funded by his Department in 1987 into the integration of mentally handicapped people into local communities.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the summary of a survey undertaken for MENCAP (The Royal Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults) which appeared in the editor's introduction to "Mental Handicap in the Community", edited by Alan Leighton, 1988. The survey was largely funded by the Department as part of its continuing consideration of what it can do to encourage public acceptance of the increasing number of people with a mental handicap receiving care in the community. The survey was in the nature of a pilot project and it would be wrong to over-estimate its reliability. The great majority of people with a mental handicap have always lived in the community and are well accepted there and experience has shown that local action is generally successful in extending this acceptance to others who move into residential care in the community.

Sickle Cell and Thalassaemia Centres

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the specialist sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia centres receive mainstream funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not collected centrally on local funding arrangements for these clinics.

Otosporin

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bottles of Otosporin were purchased by the National Health Service during the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 from Burroughes Wellcome in (a) 5ml. sizes and (b) other quantities; and what was the cost in both cases.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have information in the form requested. The latest information relates to prescriptions assessed by the prescription pricing authority during the calendar year 1987, and is derived from a sample of one in 200 National Health Service prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors. Usage by the hospital service, and prescriptions dispensed by dispensing doctors, are excluded. On that basis, the total list price of Otosporin purchased was £1,868,000; separate figures are not available for 5ml. or other sizes of Otosporin.

RAWP System

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the effect on each health region of the cessation of the resources allocation working party system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The arrangements set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" meet the need to replace RAWP with a simpler method of allocating resources. They retain however the broad principle of relating funding to population; and they will ensure hospitals are funded directly and quickly for treating patients from other regions. The effect of the change will therefore be dominated by population changes and general growth in resources over the next three years; and will be influenced by the arrangements regions negotiate with each other to pay for cross-boundary flows. The pace of change will be carefully managed.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given to the need for variations in computer software systems related to wage and salary payments of his proposals to introduce variable regional pay levels in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities are responsible for paying their own employees. Any adjustments needed to the computer software assisting them in that process is for them to consider.

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients living in East Cumbria health district attend Newcastle hospital for renal dialysis treatment.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may however wish to write to the chairman of Newcastle health authority for the information.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for East Cumbria health district patients needing hospital renal dialysis to receive this treatment in East Cumbria.

Mr. Freeman: The Northern regional health authority has approved in principle the provision of renal services at Cumberland infirmary, Carlisle. The scheme is one of a number competing for funding within the health authority's development programme.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimate of the number of people prescribed benzodiazepines for depression over the last five years who are still taking them.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Human Organ Sales

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Bloomsbury health authority inquiry into the sale of kidneys to the Wellington Humana has revealed who billed each recipient for the kidney they received as distinct from the operation or the stay in the hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The Bloomsbury health authority inquiry so far has not revealed the identity of anyone who may have billed recipients for kidneys received in the cases investigated. Inquiries are continuing.

"Working for Patients"

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the percentage change in the time general medical practitioners who work in budget holding practices will devote to administration under the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I recognise that general medical practitioners may look to other disciplines for the skills associated with managing and controlling budgets. Many large practices already employ practice managers and other administrative support staff. As proposed in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" each practice budget will include a fee, which the Government intends to set at a realistic level, to recognise the management and other costs. This will avoid the need for GPs to spend additional time on administration at the expense of caring for patients.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrators are (a) currently employed in the National Health Service and (b) would be employed under the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: "Administrators" has been interpreted as administrative and clerical staff in post.

At 30 September 1987, there were 114,600 whole time equivalent administrative and clerical staff in post in England.

It is not yet possible to say what effect the White Paper proposals might have on these figures.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether medical audit, as proposed under the National Health Service White Paper, will be extended to private hospitals;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that medical audit, as proposed under the National Health Service White Paper, is carried out in private hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall be publishing a working paper shortly on the development of medical audit with professionals.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) who in a district will make the decision about whether a patient can be referred to supra-regional services or supra-district services;

(2) under the White Paper "Working for Patients", whether prior approval would have to be sought from the patient's district of residence before a patient could be referred to a supra-regional or supra-district service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The responsibility for referring patients to hospital will continue to rest with GPs and, in the case of referrals from one hospital service to another, with consultants. The Government's proposals for funding supra-regional and supra-district services will be set out in more detail in a working paper which I will be publishing shortly.

Over-60s

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population is over 60 years (a) currently, (b) in 2000 and (c) in 2020.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent estimate of the population of England and Wales indicates that at mid-1987 20·9 per cent. of the population of England and Wales was over 60. The Government Actuary's 1987-based projections indicate that the corresponding percentages for 2000 and 2020 are 20·4 and 23·7 respectively.

Life Expectation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of years of expectation of life at birth for (a) males, and (b) females in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The latest available data from the Government Actuary's Department indicate that for the period 1984-86 the life expectancy at birth in the United Kingdom was 71·7 years for males and 77·5 years for females.

Infant Deaths

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of deaths in the United Kingdom per 1,000 live births of (a) infants under one year old, and (b) children under five years old.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table. The latest year for which data are available is 1987.

Number of deaths and rates per 1,000 live births for (a) infants under one year old, and (b) children under five years old—United Kingdom

	Number	[1] Rate
Under 1	7,077	9·1
0-4 years	8,284	10·7

[1] Per 1,000 livebirths.

Community Health Councils

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether extra resources will be provided to support community health councils to represent local community interests once local authority representatives have been removed from health authorities, as proposed in the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not accept that health authority members appointed by local authorities were intended to fulfil the role described. As the White Paper says, the interests of the local community will continue (as they have in the past) to be represented by community health councils which act as a channel for consumer views. They receive adequate resources for that purpose and the White Paper does not impose any additional duties or burdens upon them.

Waiting Lists

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the median waiting times for each district health authority in England and Wales for (a) hip replacements, (b) hernia operations and (c) cataract removals.

Mr. Mellor: Reliable information about median waiting times for specific procedures is not yet available under the new hospital episode system (HES). The sample numbers under the old hospital in-patient inquiry (HIPE) system were too small for reliable estimates to be made about individual procedures at district level.

Questions about Wales are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Out-of-area Health Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were treated outside their district of residence in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: In 1985, the latest year for which this information is available centrally, an estimated 1·38 million people were treated in NHS non-maternity, non-psychiatric hospitals outside their district of residence.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers of AIDS patients reported in each of the following health authority areas: Riverside, Parkside, Bloomsbury, West Lambeth, Hampstead, Tower Hamlets, Wandsworth and Camberwell; and what are the major hospitals in each district.

Mr. Mellor: The table shows the cumulative total of AIDS cases and deaths up to the end of December 1988 in each of the districts requested. These data are by health authority of the reporting doctor. The major hospitals listed in each district are those from which 10 or more cases were first reported to CDSC by the end of January 1989.

	Cumulative total of cases	Deaths	Major hospitals
Riverside	477	220	Charing Cross St. Stephen's Westminster West London
Parkside	287	152	St. Mary's
Bloomsbury	210	115	University College and Middlesex
West Lambeth	69	32	St. Thomas'
Hampstead	43	16	Royal Free
Tower Hamlets	43	28	The London (Whitechapel)

	Cumulative total of cases	Deaths	Major hospitals
Wandsworth	36	18	St. George's
Camberwell	35	20	St. Giles'

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice is given to health authorities about the disposal of clinical waste from AIDS patients;

(2) what precautions are taken for the disposal of sharps used in the treatment of AIDS patients.

Mr. Mellor: A code of guidance produced by the Health and Safety Commission for the safe dispersal of clinical waste has been sent to all health authorities with health notice HN(82)22, a copy of which is in the Library. Health authorities were required to review their policies for the handling, transporting and disposal of clinical waste which includes infectious waste and sharps used in the treatment of AIDS patients.

Genetic Diseases

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in view of the recent allocation of additional funds for research and development, he will change the criteria of the supra-regional services advisory group to include laboratory services as well as clinical services and take steps to promote recognition of the supra-regional services in the field of genetic metabolic diseases at Guy's hospital.

Mr. Freeman: No. The present arrangements for designating and funding supra-regional services were agreed after extensive discussions between the Department, regional health authorities and the joint consultants committee. I would not expect changes to the supra-regional services except those that may occur as a result of the implementation of the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what arrangements have been made within the National Health Service to diagnose and treat patients with genetic diseases after the closure of the purine research laboratory at Guy's hospital in March;

(2) what information he has about the availability in other western European countries of diagnostic and research services related to purine disorders; and whether it is his intention that work in this field should continue in the United Kingdom;

(3) what arrangements he is making to ensure that after the closure of the purine research laboratory at Guy's hospital in March the work now being done to achieve the first human gene implant involving the purine disorder adenosine deaminase deficiency will be continued.

Mr. Freeman: Purine disorders include a wide range of metabolic diseases (e.g. phenylkelonuria, gout). It is likely that most western European medical teaching centres provide some diagnostic and research facilities for diseases included in this category. In this country decisions as to facilities for diagnosis are a matter for local health authorities in the light of their assessment of local needs and priorities. The main Government agency for the promotion of medical research is the Medical Research Council. I understand that they are conducting research into purine.

No firm decision has yet been taken on the cessation of the diagnostic and treatment service provided by the purine research laboratory at Guy's hospital. The laboratory's research work, which is separately funded through grants, is continuing.

Clinical Waste Disposal

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take against the company Specialist Waste Management; and if he will require health authorities to instigate an investigation into the clinical waste disposal practices of the contractors they are using.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities are responsible for the arrangements to dispose of their clinical waste and any action that needs to be taken against a waste disposal contractor is a matter for the contracting health authority.

We believe that such waste should be incinerated and we understand that the contract between Riverside HA and Specialist Waste Management required the contractor to incinerate its clinical waste. The contract has been terminated.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died through food poisoning where the cause of the illness has been traced to the consumption of untreated milk in the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Confirmed reports to the public health laboratory service show that during the last five years in England and Wales there has been only one outbreak of food poisoning resulting in deaths where the consumption of raw milk was responsible for or contributed to the deaths. This was in 1984 when there were eight deaths.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the provisional 1988 figures for the number of people suffering food poisoning where the cause of the illness has been traced to the consumption of untreated milk;

(2) how many people have suffered food poisoning in each of the last five years for which final records are available where the cause of the food poisoning has been traced to the consumption of untreated milk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Confirmed reports to the PHLS show that numbers of cases of food poisoning associated with the consumption of raw milk in England and Wales in the years from 1982 to 1988 are as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1982	612
1983	283
1984	406
1985	233
1986	347
1987	366
[1]1988	22

White Paper (Costs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the money allocated to the launch of the National Health Service White Paper has been spent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The sum of £1,250,000 has been allocated and spent on the launch of the White Paper.

Thyroid Cancer

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the incidences of thyroid cancer were within a 10-mile radius of (a) Liverpool, (b) Faslane, (c) Holy Loch, (d) Rosyth, (e) Southampton, (f) Plymouth, (g) Portsmouth, (h) Cardiff and (i) Barry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The exact information requested is not readily available.

Data are readily available for county/metropolitan county districts, and the table shows data for those districts containing the requested locations in England and Wales. Registration data are given for 1984, which is the latest available, and mortality data are shown for that year and for 1987.

Data for areas in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Number of (a) newly diagnosed cases, (b) death registrations (underlying cause of death) for malignant neoplasm of the thyroid ICD (9) 193[1] by area of usual residence and sex, 1984, 1987

County district/Metropolitan county district of usual residence	1984 Registrations		1984 Deaths		1987 Deaths
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Liverpool	4	8	1	2	1	5
Southampton	0	0	0	0	0	1
Plymouth	1	1	0	1	2	1
Cardiff	0	2	0	1	1	0
Vale of Glamorgan (includes Barry)	1	2	1	0	0	0

[1] International Classification of Diseases (ninth revision). Figures are for all ages except 1987 (at age 28 days and over).

NHS (Inspectors)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider the establishment of Her Majesty's inspectors to monitor National Health Service facilities.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 20 January 1989]: No. As explained in the White Paper "Working For Patients" it is for district health authorities to ensure that their population has access to a comprehensive range of high quality services. Regional health authorities are responsible for monitoring the performance of their DHAs.

Abortions

43. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women presenting for abortions in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available had already had previous abortions.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 24 January 1989]: The notification form for abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 requires information about previous abortions to the woman concerned to be recorded, distinguishing between spontaneous miscarriages and legal terminations.

The number of notifications for England and Wales in 1987 (the latest available year) where at least one previous legal termination to the woman had taken place is 33,294. This represents 19·1 per cent. of all notifications for that year. These previous legal terminations, which include previous legal abortions under the 1967 Act, also include those which occurred outside Great Britain and were therefore not carried out under the Act.

The number of notifications for England and Wales in 1987 where at least one previous spontaneous miscarriage to the woman had taken place is 12,249. This represents 7 per cent. of all notifications for that year.

Notifications having at least one previous spontaneous miscarriage and also at least one previous legal termination, and women having more than one abortion under the Act in 1987 will be counted more than once in the statistics.

Mill Road Artificial Appliance Centre, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the upgrading of facilities at the Mill road artificial appliance centre, Liverpool

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1989]: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the hon. Member should address this question.

WALES

Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health authority (a) the square footage of unused properties and (b) the square footage or acreage of unused land and the estimated value of each category as a percentage total land and property and as a percentage of the total land and property value of each authority; and if he will make a statement as to his Department's policy on the sale of unused land and property.

Mr. Grist: This information is not recorded in the form requested and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information about the acreage of the land held by the National Health Service in Wales including the surplus land no longer needed for health purposes is available and is summarised in the following table:

District health authority	Total estate (acres)	Surplus area (acres)	Percentage surplus
Clwyd	113·0	20·80	18·40
East Dyfed	189·0	1·65	0·87
Gwent	369·0	28·50	7·72
Gwynedd	358·0	107·00	29·89
Mid Glamorgan	694·0	48·00	6·92
Pembrokeshire	41·6	4·50	10·82
Powys	236·0	77·00	32·63
South Glamorgan	500·0	48·00	9·60
West Glamorgan	81·0	23·00	28·40
TOTAL	2,581·6	358·45	13·90

The Department's policy is that surplus land will be sold in a publicly acceptable manner for the best possible price and the sale proceeds will be used for the benefit of health care in Wales.

The chief valuer of the Inland Revenue estimated the open market value of all National Health Service land and property in Wales in March 1988 to be approximately £219 million.

Further Education

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many fifth form pupils have moved into full-time education in each of the last three academic years giving the figures in numerical and percentage terms and for each standard planning region.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. The figures in the following tabie relate to leavers aged 15 at the beginning of the academic year who intended to proceed to a course of full-time further education.

16-year-old pupils[1] from Welsh schools moving into full-time further education[2]

Year	Number ('000)	Percentage of all leavers aged 16[1]
1984-85	6·4	21·7
1985-86	5·8	20·6
1986-87	6·8	22·8

[1] Aged 15 at 31 August ie the beginning of the academic year.
[2] The figures shown relate to school leavers only and as such do not include those pupils who continue their education in schools. Students on higher education courses are also excluded.

Curriculum and TVEI

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in the Training Commission in Wales dealing with the curriculum in schools and the extension of the technical and vocational education initiative; and of those so employed how many have teaching or education training qualifications.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are currently 10 staff employed by the Training Agency to support the development of TVEI in Welsh local education authorities. This team includes three specialist advisers who are head teachers on secondment to the Training Agency, and who have considerable experience in curriculum development.

All three have a range of professional qualifications in education. The remaining seven members of the TVEI unit provide administrative support.

Training Agency advisers work closely with HMI Wales, the WJEC and the Welsh Office education department in all matters concerning the development of TVEI in Wales.

Tourism

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a contract for educational research to promote tourist visits to Wales with the countryside interpretation unit, presently located at the Open university, Milton Keynes.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to do so.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since 1979-80 the Department has made no such donations.

History Curriculum

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those he has appointed to the working party on the history curriculum in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has appointed the following to serve as members of the history committee for Wales:

Members	Designation
Mr. Peris Jones-Evans	Head of history, Ysgol y Berwyn, Bala, Gwynedd
Mrs. Ruth Powell	Deputy head teacher, Cwmtawe secondary school, Pontardawe, West Glamorgan
Mr. Richard Waller	Head teacher, Overmonnow junior school, Monmouth, Gwent
Mrs. Gill Foley	School teacher, Cyfartha junior school, Merthyr Tydfil, Mid Glamorgan
Mr. David Maddox	LEA Adviser, Mid Galmorgan
Dr. Gareth Evans	Lecturer, Department of Education, University College of Wales, Aberystwyth
Dr. Gareth Elwyn Jones	Reader in education, Department of Education, University College of Wales, Swansea
Mr. Malcolm Jones	Assistant principal, Education Department, Trinity College, Carmarthen
Dr. William Lambert	Deputy examination secretary, WJEC
Mr. Robert Morris	Senior lecturer, Bangor Normal College, Gwynedd
Mr. Jon Vodden	Senior producer, BBC Radio Wales (Schools)
Mr. Roy Harrison	Head of staff training, education and development, British Coal plc

Note: Professor Rees Davies, Professor of History and Vice Principal of University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, will chair the committee.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the trunk road construction contracts (a) that will have been let by his Department during 1988-89 and (b) that his Department expects to let during 1989-90.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In 1988-89, the following contracts were let:

Structural renewal
A48 Earlswood-Lonlas resurfacing
A48 Chepstow old bridge repainting
A465 Llandarcy-Aberdulais salting viaduct
A470 Bridge waterproofing
A55 Penmaenbach resurfacing

Small schemes
M4/A449 filter lane at Coldra interchange
A55 Pen-y-Clip anchored retaining wall
A487 Aberaeron-Aberarth improvement
A483 Beulah improvement
A470 Carno bridge reconstruction
A483 Dolfor road improvement
A44 Aberystwyth area, milestones 15-16

I expect to let the contract for the A483 Chirk bypass and the A55 Travellers Inn improvement shortly.

Details of the major scheme contracts to be let in 1989-90 will be announced in the Welsh commentary on the public expenditure White Paper and in the forthcoming edition of "Roads in Wales." Further contracts will be let under the structural renewal and small schemes programmes.

Welsh Language

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessments he has made of the availability of trained teachers of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A survey of secondary school teachers' qualifications and deployment was conducted in January 1984 the results of which were published in 1986 in Welsh Education Statistics Bulletins Nos. 1 and 2. A new secondary school staffing survey is being undertaken at present.

A survey of the staff in primary schools was carried out in March 1987 and the results published in Welsh Education Statistics Bulletin No. 5 in 1988. The surveys were designed to assess the numbers of Welsh speakers amongst teachers in Wales as well as those who have qualifications in Welsh. The above publications are available in the Library of the House.

Tourism

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total of Government support for the tourist industry in 1988 prices for each year from 1960 to 1988 for Wales; and what is the projected amount for the next five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The principal tourism agency in the Principality is the Wales tourist board. Information on the board's net expenditure at 1988 prices is set out in the following table.

Future plans are set out in the 1989 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm. 617).

Wales tourist board net expenditure 1988 prices

[1] Provisional.

ENVIRONMENT

Climate Change

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department participated in the inter-governmental range on climate change held at Oxford between 24 and 26 January.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment provided £8,751 to cover the costs of the first meeting of working group I of the inter-governmental panel on climate change. Additionally, the Department provided one member of staff for secretarial support and two officials attended as observers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment attended during the first day.

Rats

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to control and to reduce the rat population; and what advice he has given on rat control strategies to local authorities and water authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Duties to control rats rest with district councils, London borough councils, the common council of the city of London and port health authorities under the Prevention of Damage by Pests Act 1949. This legislation is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the resources available to enable local authority environmental health officers and pest control officers to deal with rat infestations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each local authority todecide what resources to make available to its environmental health department. The need for expenditure on public health is taken into account in assessing grant-related expenditure for the purposes of the rate support grant.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures are available as to the number of rats in Derbyshire, the numbers for the previous two years, and the anticipated numbers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Local Government Superannuation Regulations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend the local government superannuation regulations so as to provide that employees of local authorities seeking early retirement on medical grounds have access to an independent medical examination.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions about the retirement of employees currently in post are a matter for the employing authority and do not come within the scope of the superannuation regulations. A retired employee who believes that he or she should have been granted additional benefits on account of retirement on grounds of ill health would however have a right of appeal to my right. hon. Friend under the regulations. Such appeals are determined by reference to independent medical advice.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the operation by Gedling borough council of those parts of the local government superannuation regulations which relate to medical examination of those seeking early retirement on health grounds as they relate to Mrs. Elizabeth Laurence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have received no representations relating to the case of Mrs. Elizabeth Laurence.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many families in the north west of England and each of the metropolitan boroughs in the north west of England have been admitted into local authority homeless accommodation from the year 1979 to the present due to repossession arising from mortgage arrears.

Mr. Trippier: I have today placed in the Library a table giving the available information.

New Towns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to consult the tenants of the Commission for New Towns through a ballot on the question of the transfer of the management of their homes.

Mr. Trippier: The management of the rented housing stock is a matter for the Commission for New Towns.

Warrington

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an official visit to meet the residents of Grappenhall and Appleton in Warrington.

Mr. Trippier: I have no present plans to do so.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why a revised code of guidance is in preparation for sites of special scientific interest; and what changes and new proposals he expects this to include.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A revised code of guidance is being prepared to take account of the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985 and the Wildlife and Countryside (Service of Notices) Act 1985. It is expected to be submitted for approval by Parliament later this year.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce further legislation to provide adequate protection for the residents of mobile homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to do so.

CFC Refrigerants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the report published by the Heating and Ventilating Contractors Association entitled, "Safe Disposal of CFC Refrigerants", which was presented to him on 23 January.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 3 February, Official Report, column 427.

Drinking Water

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce proposals for regulations on drinking water quality, as provided for in the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: Safeguarding the high standard of water supplied to consumers is a prime objective of the Government's Water Bill.

This is why I publish today two consultation papers setting out a comprehensive new system for safeguarding and improving the quality of water supplies.

The papers explain how we will meet the requirements of the EC Drinking Water Directive and go beyond that with additional measures of our own. The papers also point to more frequent and accurate sampling, a new procedure for approval of chemicals and other substances used in supplying water, and the technical details of how water suppliers should implement the regulations.

What is more, water suppliers will be required to provide full information to consumers on the quality of water coming from their taps.

Once these stringent regulations are in force both local authorities, and the Government's new drinking water quality inspectorate, will closely check that all requirements are being met.

All in all this adds up to a comprehensive system for safeguarding and improving supplies of drinking water.

I have placed a copy of the two papers with a summary of their contents in the Library of the House. We shall, of course, be glad to receive suggestions from local authority associations and other interested bodies.

Flow Country

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost to the Exchequer, through grants payable by the Nature Conservancy Council under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, of protecting areas of conservation value from afforestation in the flow country of Caithness and Sutherland.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 8 February 1989]: I understand that the Nature Conservancy Council has not received any applications for grant under section 38 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 related to possible afforestation in the flow country of Caithness and Sutherland. NCC's estimates for 1989-90 include a sum of up to £750,000 to pay both for possible compensation under management agreements in the flow country and for additional staff for work related to SSSI designations in the area. Provision of £1 million has also been made in the planned allocations to NCC for both 1990-91 and 1991-92 to cover similar expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for altering manning levels in the vehicle inspectorate and traffic commissioner enforcement sections of his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no such proposals for traffic examiners or in the vehicle inspectorate agency. Small reductions will be made in the number of clerical support staff in the traffic area offices following streamlining of duties and the introduction of new technology.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to reduce the manpower levels in his Department's vehicle inspectorate and traffic commissioner enforcement sections.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no such proposals for traffic examiners or in the vehicle inspectorate agency. Small reductions will be made in the number of clerical support staff in the traffic area offices following streamlining of duties and the introduction of new technology.

Bus Lanes (London)

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the purpose of bus lanes in London and take steps to ensure that they do not become parking places for coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Priority to buses can be justified when the benefit to bus users exceeds the cost to other road users.

The Department has issued guidance in traffic advisory unit leaflet 2/88 on the use of with-flow bus lanes; further advice is in preparation.

Violation of bus lanes—whether by parked or moving vehicles—is a matter for police enforcement.

One-man Operated Buses

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has conducted any studies to assess the effect of one-man operated buses on the free movement of other road users.

Mr. Portillo: TRRL studies have shown that lengthy boarding times can diminish potential savings from one-person operation of buses and add to general traffic delays. London Regional Transport takes into account congestion effects on bus services in their cost-benefit appraisals of conversions to one-person operation.

Toxic Wastes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, during the meeting of European Community Transport Ministers on 13 February in Murcia, he will make it his policy to initiate a European Communitywide survey of the hazards of transporting toxic and radiotoxic materials within and out of Community member states.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No such survey is needed. The transport of dangerous goods, including radioactive materials, is required to comply with international standards laid down by United Nations bodies. The regulations are kept under continuous review.

Traffic Speeds (London)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the current average speed by road, of traffic in central London; and by how much he hopes to increase this over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current average speed is about 11 mph throughout the 7 am to 7 pm period. It is not expected that speeds will change significantly over the next five years.

Public Vehicle Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the number of public vehicle inspectors his Department employed in (i) 1984 and (ii) at the current time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of vehicle examiners in May 1984 was 316; it is currently 472. Changes in the professional and technology grading structure and in the range of duties undertaken by the staff of the vehicle inspectorate mean that these two figures are not directly comparable.

PSO Licences

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has any plans to change the current requirements which operators of public service vehicles must satisfy before being granted an operator's licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is reviewing the operator licensing requirements for goods and passenger vehicles. There would be consultation on any proposals for change.

South Wales Traffic Commissioner

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the office of the South Wales traffic commissioner will not be moved from Cardiff.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no intention of closing the traffic area office in Cardiff.

Escalators (London Underground)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Underground on the number of escalators at London Underground stations currently not in operation; how many such escalators have been out of action during the past 12 months; what proportion each of these categories comprises of the total number of escalators in the London Underground system; why one or more of the escalators at St. John's Wood station has been out of operation frequently and for prolonged periods; what action he intends to take to remedy this situation; and if he will publish the contents of this report in the Official Report.

Mr. Portillo: The operation, repair and maintenance of escalators is a matter for the board and management of London Underground to whom the right hon. Member should address his questions. However, I understand that the need to take escalators out of service to carry out safety-related works recommended in the Fennell report has been a factor in the reduced availability of escalators in recent weeks.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give capital expenditure on prisons for each year since 1974.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Figures for total capital expenditure are given in the "Report on the Work of the Prison Service" which is published annually. Total capital expenditure on the Prison Service, net of receipts, in the financial years from 1974 was as follows:

Financial year	Capital expenditure[1]
1987-88	108
1986-87	110
1985-86	105
1984-85	74
1983-84	61
1982-83	46
1981-82	32
1980-81	33
1979-80	26
1978-79	26
1977-78	27
1976-77	28
1975-76	32
1974-75	22
1973-74	19

[1] £ million to the nearest million at outturn prices.

It should be noted that the definition of total capital expenditure has changed during the period covered: the figures are not, therefore, directly comparable.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will list all dates on which persons have been refused admission to the Unied Kingdom on the grounds of actual or suspected infection with HIV and the citizenship or country of origin of each such arriving passenger.

Mr. Renton: Government policy is that evidence of HIV infection is not of itself justification for a recommendation by a port medical inspector that a passenger should be refused entry to the United Kingdom on public health grounds. Passengers coming here for medical treatment, or who are likely to require treatment during their stay, including treatment for AIDS or for symptoms associated with HIV infection, are required to satisfy the immigration officer that they can meet any charges which might be made for such treatment and show that they can otherwise support themselves without recourse to public funds.

Identity Cards

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate a study into the practicality of extending the plastic national insurance card into an identity card containing name, address, date of birth, sex, photograph and place for signature.

Mr. John Patten: The information recorded on the plastic national insurance card is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Police National Computer

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private survey and other research organisations have access to the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Organisations of this kind do not have direct access to the PNC. But chief officers of police may, from time to time, provide information from police records, including records held on the PNC, to assist such organisations in particular projects, where this is clearly in the public interest.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards there are against non-governmental organisations and private organisations using the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Measures taken to prevent access to the PNC by unauthorised bodies, such as non-governmental and private organisations, include restrictions on access from public telephone lines, and regular checks centrally and in forces on accesses to the information held on the PNC. These measures are being reviewed in the light of recent cases, although these cases involved the misuse of the PNC by personnel who were authorised to have access.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons British Telecom has access to the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British Telecom does not have direct access to the Police National Computer. It does, however, receive from the police details of convictions of members of its staff, and some of this information is held on the PNC.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the BBC has access to the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The BBC does not have direct access to the PNC. It may, however receive from the police information held on the PNC in the course of carrying out the security procedures referred to recently in my hon. Friend's reply to questions from the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on 1 February 1989 at column 254.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-governmental organisations have access to the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No non-governmental organisations have direct access to the PNC, but arrangements exist for information from police records, including the records held on the PNC, to be disclosed to selected organisations where this is clearly in the public interest —for instance, the arrangements which enable local authorities and other bodies to obtain information on those seeking to work with children.

Police Stations

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will invite environmental health officers to inspect police stations, including cells and canteens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Environmental health officers already have powers to inspect police kitchens and canteens in the provinces. In the Metropolitan police district, the premises are regularly inspected by the public health engineers branch of the Metropolitan police. Lay visitors are already invited to visit police cells to ensure that the conditions of detention conform to the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 codes of practice.

Race Relations

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when considering the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis' annual strategy document, he will take into account the recommendations made in Greater London Action for Race Equality report "Fair Cop, Policing and Racial Equality", on the case for a policy to tackle discrimination in police services to black Londoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend discussed the Commissioner's strategy statement with him on 18 January and it was published on 24 January. Copies are available in the Library of the House. The strategy recognises the duty of the Metropolitan police to meet the policing needs of all sections of the community and gives priority to preventing and detecting offences such as racial attacks. In formulating his strategy, the Commissioner takes into account the views of a wide range of organisations, including Greater London Action for Racial Equality. The Metropolitan police maintain regular contact with GLARE, and the Commissioner met representatives of GLARE on 20 June 1988 to discuss the "Fair Cop" report.

Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all his Department's contracts with (a) Zeus and (b) Securipol Ltd. since 1979; and if he will give the purpose of each contract.

Mr. Hurd: Records are readily available only from April 1984. They include no contracts placed with, nor payments made to, Zeus or Securipol Ltd. by or on behalf of my Department during that period.

Abdullah Hassan Yousef

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to deport Abdullah Hassan Yousef pending his solicitor's representations on the grounds of the European convention on human rights.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet a deputation to discuss Her Majesty's Government decision to deport Mr. Abdullah Hassan Yousef.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 8 February and I have subsequently arranged to meet him on 15 February. Directions have been served for Mr. Yousef's removal on 24 February.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the income for the latest available year from parking fines and wheel clamps in London; and what targets he has for the next five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that fixed penalty payments in respect of parking offences in London produced revenue of around £20 million to £25 million in 1987, and that income from fines imposed following court proceedings amounted to a further £250,000.

The Metropolitan police received £2,710,548 from wheel-clamping charges in the 1987-88 financial year, and the City of London received £100,250 from wheel-clamping charges in 1988.

We do not have targets for income of this nature.

Parking Restrictions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) of 3 February, Official Report, column 422, concerning enforcement of parking restrictions, he will outline the safeguards for those motorists who feel they have been treated unreasonably.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any person who has been issued with a fixed penalty notice, whether or not the vehicle in question has additionally been clamped or removed, may make representations to the appropriate chief officer of police, or may opt to challenge the matter before the courts.

Juvenile Court

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek to ensure that all cases relating to children in the juvenile court are heard on consecutive days.

Mr. John Patten: The date to which the hearing of a case should be adjourned is for the court to decide with the advice of its clerk, having regard to the availability of the magistrates and to other factors. Often it would not be practicable to resume a hearing on the following day.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969, which were concluded in the inner London juvenile court during 1987 and 1988, were completed within a time scale of eight weeks;

(2) how many cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 and similar proceedings, which were concluded in the inner London juvenile court during 1987 and 1988, and which involved final hearings of more than one day in length;

(3) how many cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 and similar proceedings, which were concluded in the Inner London juvenile court during 1987 and 1988, and which involved final hearings of more than one day in length, were heard on consecutive days;

(4) how many cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 and similar proceedings, which were concluded in the Inner London juvenile court during 1987 and 1988, and which involved final hearings of more than one day in length, involved hearings in respect of which more than 14 days elapsed between the first day of the hearing and the last.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally on the time taken for cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969; to obtain such information from individual courts would involve disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases under section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 and similar proceedings were concluded in the Inner London juvenile court during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Records available to my Department, which may be incomplete, show 684 such proceedings in 1987. Data for 1988 are not yet available.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has undertaken of the types of proceeding most appropriately undertaken in (a) the domestic magistrates court and (b) the juvenile court.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's general intention is that all family proceedings (including care proceedings) heard in magistrates courts under the provision of the Children Bill should be heard in the domestic court.

Television (Ownership)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to preclude one person from owning two ITV stations through control of a company which bids successfully for two contracts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to prevent a newspaper group from having an interest in more than one United Kingdom television company; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has any plans to prevent a newspaper organisation from holding a stake exceeding 20 per cent. in a United Kingdom television company; and if he will make a statement;

(4) If he has any plans to prevent non-EEC companies from holding a stake exceeding 12 per cent. in a United Kingdom television company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 6.48-6.53 of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s, Competition, Choice and Quality" which set out our proposals for the formulation of rules to prevent the concentration of ownership of television companies. As my right hon. Friend has made clear, the White Paper sets out a range of principles and not a full set of rules. We shall be looking particularly carefully at arguments advanced for limiting newspaper interest in regional Channel 3 licences and for preventing anyone from controlling two large regional Channel 3 franchises. We would welcome any views on the scope and formulation of these rules during the consultation period on the White Paper which ends on 28 February.

Immigration

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people currently living in Great Britain have an immigration status which would subject them to the public funds test for income-related social security benefits.

Mr. Renton: The immigration rules require all overseas nationals coming to this country, except those with the right of abode and asylum seekers, to be able to maintain and accommodate themselves and any dependants or to be maintained and accommodated by a sponsor here without recourse to the public funds specified in the rules. The funds specified are those which are both means-tested and non-contributory.

Military and Police Training

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any training was given to police or military personnel from Turkey or Chile during 1988; and whether there are any plans to give training in 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 9 February 1989]: No police officers from Turkey or Chile visited the United Kingdom for training in 1988. Some 40 police officers from Turkey are at present attending English language training courses in this country, which will be followed by training programmes in various aspects of police work. I have no information on training for military personnel.

Mrs. Maltman

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects that Mrs. Maltman of 97 Carlton road, Derby, is likely to receive an answer either to the letter she wrote to him on 1 January 1988 or to the letter sent on to his office by the private secretary to Her Majesty the Queen on 21 November 1988, concerning her disentitlement to United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 30 January 1989]: I believe the question relates to Mrs. Dorthy Maltman. Her application for British citizenship has been approved, as have the similar applications for her two sisters. I have written to the hon. Member to explain the position.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been held under the Prevention of Terrorism Act since 1 December 1988; what areas of the United Kingdom and other countries they were from; for what period they were held before being charged; and how many were subsequently charged.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 13 January 1989, c. 760]: The available information relates to persons detained in December 1988 and is given in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Patrick Haseldine

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date Mr. Patrick Haseldine was suspended on full pay; what further disciplinary action has been taken since that date; what further action he proposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Haseldine was suspended on full pay on 7 December 1988. In accordance with diplomatic service regulations, the matter will shortly come before a disciplinary board.

Consular Fees

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to increase any of the consular fees.

Mr. Eggar: Yes, an Order in Council (the Consular Fees Order 1989) was made on 7 February which provides for increases in certain consular fees with effect from Saturday 1 April 1989 and a rationalisation of the consular shipping fees, reducing them in number from 30 to 10. It has been the policy of this and previous Governments that the cost of consular services should as far as possible be borne by the users.

PRIME MINISTER

Fraud (Tax and Social Security)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister how much money Her Majesty's Government estimate has been lost in each year since 1979 as a result of fraudulent tax claims and of social security claims; and how many persons have been successfully prosecuted in England and Wales.

The Prime Minister: Reliable estimates are not available of the cost of fraudulent tax or social security claims.

Information about the number of persons successfully prosecuted for benefit fraud in England and Wales by the Department of Health and Social Security is held only in respect of each year since 1984-85, as follows:

	Number
1984-85	6,132
1985-86	6,045
1986-87	5,462
1987-88	6,228

The numbers of successful Inland Revenue prosecutions in respect of false accounts or returns and false claims to personal allowances, expenses and repayments in England and Wales are:

	Number
1978-79	59
1979-80	58
1980-81	56
1981-82	38
1982-83	20

London Underground

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister when she last travelled on official business as a passenger on a London Underground train; whether she will cause an inquiry to be set up into the London Underground system in the light of criticisms made of it since its removal from management and ownership by the Greater London council; and what action she intends to take to remedy the squalor, graffiti and litter on the London Underground system and the increasing tendency of certain passengers to place their feet on the seats in the trains.

The Prime Minister: It is impracticable for me to use the Underground for official business. Immediately on taking responsibility for London regional transport from the GLC the Government charged the board to bring forward a programme of investment to modernise the public transport systems, making them more attractive to passengers and more efficient. The Government have approved steadily increasing investment in the Underground which next year will be the last year attributable to the GLC. There can be no reason for an inquiry.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Children Bill

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if the procedures to be established under clause 69 of the Children Bill [Lords] will be the same regardless of which court is hearing the procedures.

The Attorney-General: The Government are considering how far, given the different constitutions and structures of magistrates' and county courts and the high court, the procedure under the Bill in those courts can be aligned.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if the procedures to be established under clause 69 of the Children Bill [Lords] will follow the procedures currently followed in matrimonial proceedings and under the Guardianship of Minors Acts.

The Attorney-General: The procedures relating to proceedings under the Bill are still under consideration but will be designed to protect the interests of all those who may be affected and to ensure an expeditious disposal of the issues in the light of the fullest evidence using, where appropriate, procedures currently employed in cases affecting children.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if the rules to be made under clause 70 of the Children Bill [Lords] will provide for children and parents to be made parties automatically in all proceedings governed by the Bill.

The Attorney-General: No. Where parents wish to make an application or their legal position may be affected by proceedings they will be given the right to be joined in those proceedings. Children are to be parties automatically to proceedings relating to care, supervision and emergency orders. In other proceeding they will be parties if they are applying for an order in those proceedings and in other cases the courts will have power to join them as parties.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if the rules to be made under clause 70 of the Children Bill [Lords] will provide for all other persons who are either entitled to make applications within the Bill or given leave to make applications within the Bill, to be made parties automatically in all proceedings in which they are making the application.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to seek to ensure that all cases in all courts relating to children are heard on consecutive days.

The Attorney-General: It is the intention that all cases relating to children will be dealt with expeditiously and that a system of court management should ensure that such cases are heard on consecutive days. In the high court such a facility already exists. In the county courts the further development of continuous hearing centres and the deployment of circuit judges and registrars with special responsibilities for child care cases should also ensure that cases are heard to their conclusion.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if he has proposals to increase the number of magistrates and judges available in higher courts with experience of cases relating to children.

The Attorney-General: The Government recognise that cases involving children need to be handled with particular sensitivity. There are already many magistrates and judges with experience of dealing with such cases. The judicial studies board is currently considering the need for training in this area.

Rudolf Hess

Mr. David Young: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will take steps to bring into the public domain all documents bearing on the captivity and death of Rudolf Hess.

The Attorney-General: No. Any United Kingdom public records relating to Rudolf Hess that are more than 30 years old have either been made available in the Public Record Office, or are withheld from access under the provisions of the Public Records Act 1958 in accordance with the established criteria set out in paragraphs 24 to 31 of the White Paper "Modern Public Records", Cmnd. 8531, March 1982. Access to records less than 30 years old which have not yet been transferred to the Public Record Office is the responsibility of individual Departments.

Land Registry

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time taken by the Land Registry to (a) register a title for the first time, (b) transfer a registered title, (c) transfer a part registered title and (d) grant a new lease; and what is the current backlog for each of the above categories.

The Attorney-General: The average completion times for the categories stated are:

(a) 34 weeks,
(b) 9 weeks,
(c) and (d) 33 weeks.

Having regard to the registry's target completion time of 14 weeks for category (a), 4 weeks for (b), and 12 weeks for (c) and (d), the backlog of applications for each of the above categories is:

(a) 240,000,
(b) 267,000,
(c) and (d) 136,000.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Third World (Education)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his Departments' responsibilities for the financial support and furtherance of education on Third world development issues in schools, universities and through the media; and in what specific ways those responsibilities are currently being discharged.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration has no direct responsibility for the furtherance of education on Third world development issues in schools and universities in Britain. However, under its public information programme the Overseas Development Administration disseminates a wide range of material on development issues to schools, universities, the media and interested organisations and groups.

As part of this programme we are providing annual grants to the Centre for World Development Education and the Scottish Education and Action for Development of £125,000 and £6,000 respectively.

I also agreed last year to contribute £70,000 to the Council of Europe's north-south interdependence campaign. Many groups, including local development education centres, have been able to use these funds.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Products Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the advice of the Veterinary Products Committee concerning the possible licensing of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The committee offers advice whenever appropriate but it will not make a final recommendation until it has received and assessed all pertinent information, including the data being generated in the current field trials and the conclusions of the Community's committee on veterinary medicinal products. I cannot forecast when this might be.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning veterinary products undergoing licensing considerations by the Veterinary Products Committee.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I frequently receive such representations from non-members, other individuals and organisations representing the consumer, trade and other interests, and sometimes from applicant companies.

Research and Development

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the future of agricultural research and development.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's position is well known. We will continue to fund strategic and public good research while looking to industry to take on support for near market research, which is work which offers the prospect of commercial application or exploitation as product, process or system with a reasonable time scale.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on why grooms who are working on establishments which are both equestrian centres and farms are not covered by Agricultural Wages Board orders.

Mr. Ryder: The orders made by the Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales apply only to workers in agriculture as defined in the Agricultural Wages Act 1984. The definition relates to activities carried out by the worker rather than to the type of establishment.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider extending the Agricultural Wages Board order to cover private gardeners, estate workers, gamekeepers and equestrian workers.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans to extend the scope of the Agricultural Wages Board.

Horses

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to re-classify the horse as an agricultural animal.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The horse is treated as an agricultural animal when it is used for the purpose of farming of land.

Contaminated Beef

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has had from the Irish Government concerning the import of contaminated beef.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Irish veterinary authorities have now confirmed that they have reviewed procedures at the Republic's export-approved meat plants and are satisfied that Community rules are being observed. In addition, they have issued instructions to veterinary inspection staff that in future all carcases exported to the United Kingdom should be from good quality cows and should be able to withstand a journey of three to four days and the temperature fluctuations which occur when parts of a consignment are unloaded at different destinations.

I welcome those assurances. The Irish Government are as anxious as we are that consignments of meat from the Republic should reach their destinations in the United Kingdom in first class condition.

Laying Flocks (Zoonoses Order)

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister fo Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he intends to make in respect of laying flocks subject to notices served under the Zoonoses Order 1975.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall very shortly be making an order under section 29 of the Animal Health Act 1981 to provide where necessary for the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks in which salmonella has been confirmed. Compensation will be paid as required under the provisions of the Act.

Milk

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that all milk, including goats' milk, is subject to hygiene control testing.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The production and processing of cows milk is already subject to strict controls, and new tests were introduced on 1 January 1989. As a result, the United Kingdom has been granted step 2 status under the heat treated milk directive and this means that we can apply the same high standards to imported milk. I set out the position on goats milk in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Bar (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Merseyside Chamber of Commerce

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Merseyside chamber of commerce.

Mr. Atkins: I do not at present have any plans to meet the chairman of the Merseyside chamber of commerce but such a meeting could well be accommodated within a future visit to Liverpool

Exchange Rate

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice his Department is giving to export industries concerning the exchange rate of the £ sterling.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our consistent advice to exporters has been that they should consider protecting themselves against the risk of exchange rate fluctuation and to consult experts, primarily the banks, about the best way of doing this.

East Midlands Business Survey

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received a copy of the east midlands business survey and its analysis for the prospects of the textile industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware of the survey's conclusion that the textile and clothing industry is optimistic about employment prospects over the next six months notwithstanding the survey's findings that the industry has performed less well than other sectors in the last six months.

Regional Assistance

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will provide the figures for spending on regional selective assistance and regional development grants for the north west of England for each year from 1978-79 to the present and estimated figures for 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92 in cash at 1987-88 prices;

(2) what is the total estimated expenditure on regional development grants and regional selective assistance in the north west of England for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: Gross expenditure at current and constant (1987-88) prices on regional development grant (RDG) and regional selective assistance (RSA) in the north west region in the financial years 1978-89 to 1988-89 is shown in the table. Figures for RDG and RSA provision in future years are not available at the regional level.

[1] Expenditure on RSA industrial and training grants only. Figures for the business improvement services and exchange risk guarantee schemes are not available at the regional level.

[2] RDG figures incorporate expenditure under the original and revised schemes.

[3] To end-December 1988 and provisional.

Church Organisations (Meetings)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for 1988 and 1989 to date the contacts his Department has had with church organisations on rural area matters; what were the subjects for discussion in each case; and what meetings are planned in the near future.

Mr. Atkins: I am not aware of any such contacts.

South Africa (Investment)

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has received any request for guidance from, or supplied any advice to, RTZ plc concerning the Government's voluntary ban on new investment in South Africa, in the light of RTZ's recent acquisition of BP's mineral division.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Contacts between this Department and United Kingdom companies are treated as commercial-in-confidence. The Office of Fair Trading is at an early stage in its consideration of the RTZ corporation's proposed acquisition of certain of BP's mineral interests and will report to the Secretary of State in due course.

Export Licences

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many licences for the export of leg-irons, shackles and gallows were granted during 1988; and what were the destinations of goods to which licences were given.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 9 February 1989]: It is our general policy not to issue licences for the export of leg-irons, shackles and gallows. No licences for such equipment were issued during 1988.

SCOTLAND

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify each donation which his Department has made in response to public appeals for financial assistance during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Rifkind: Donations were made as follows:

	1988-89 £
Scottish Television's Telethon Trust—in response to the Telethon '88 Appeal.	120,000
Lockerbie Air Disaster Appeal Fund.	150,000

Local Authority Housing

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of local authority housing stock, by district council area, as at (a) 1 April 1979 and (b) 30 September 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures are taken from different sources and may not be strictly comparable. Estimates for authorities which failed to submit returns have been included.

Cattle Semen

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on his future intentions with regard to the proposals to deregulate the supply of cattle semem to farms in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 February 1989]: In July 1988 the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland invited interested organisations to comment on proposals for changing the regulations governing the sale and supply of cattle semen for artificial insemination. These paralleled similar consultations being undertaken in England and Wales.

Seven responses were received by the Department. In addition, representations were made to my noble Friend the Minister of State by 10 hon. Members. Further discussions have taken place with a number of interested parties. The views expressed are currently being considered.

Hill Lambs (Radioactivity)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further tests of hill lambs for radioactivity resulting from Chernobyl have been taken in the past year; what have been the results; and what action he is taking as a result.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Information on the level of radioactivity in sheep in Scotland resulting from the Chernobyl accident is published on a regular basis by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. The measured levels of radiocaesium in live sheep tested in 1988 in those areas in which restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep are in force range from 53 becquerels per kilogram to 3,683 becquerels per kilogram. Readings taken from sheep in slaughterhouses throughout Scotland in 1988 range from 2 becquerels per kilogram to 145 becquerels per kilogram. The mark and release arrangements ensure that sheep which may be contaminated to levels above the 1,000 becquerels per kilogram safety level may not be removed from the restricted areas unless they are painted the appropriate colour and that such sheep may not be slaughtered unless they are marked with a tag to show that they are below this level. Monitoring and the related restrictions are designed to protect the public from the risk of eating sheep meat contaminated to an unacceptably high level and they will continue until it has been demonstrated that there is no longer any cause for concern in this respect.

THE ARTS

Consultants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the names of all management and arts consultants commissioned by (a) the Office of Arts and Libraries, and (b) the Arts Council giving their fees, in each of the past two years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 7 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 19 May 1988 at column 566 and the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 14 July 1988 at column 328.

In respect of the Arts Council, I am unable to add further to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 11 May 1988 at column 126.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the average annual percentage change in GDP(E), at 1985 prices, per head of the United Kingdom working population, including both employed and unemployed people, from (a) 1959 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Major: Between 1959 and 1979 the annual average percentage change in GDP(E), measured at constant factor cost, per head of the United Kingdom work force was 2·1 per cent. Between 1979 and 1987 the average annual percentage change was 1·0 per cent. Over both of these periods whole economy productivity rose on average by 2·1 per cent. a year.

Strip Searches

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many strip searches were made of females at Customs during each month of 1988, giving the number of persons involved; what dutiable items or unlawful imports were discovered in any search; in how many cases persons who were asked to undergo a strip search asked for review of that request by a justice of the peace or senior customs officer; how many of those who sought such review were subsequently strip searched and how many were not; on how many occasions persons declined to be strip searched before such review and after such review; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. Lilley: Customs set up central records on search of person in July 1987 but these records do not identify separately searches of men and women.

For the period 1 July 1987 to 31 March 1988 (the latest period for which figures are available) the number of persons strip searched was 16,023. Drugs were recovered in 586 instances, dutiable goods in 180 instances and other prohibited or restricted goods in 57 instances. In addition there were 2,019 instances of smuggled goods found before the search and 119 afterwards (for example, concealed internally by smugglers but recovered only after the search).

Appeals against strip search to a justice of the peace or senior customs officer totalled 71, of which 17 were upheld. There are no recorded instances of persons declining to be searched once having exercised their appeal rights.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Staff (Child Care)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what child care provision the Northern Ireland Office provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with the commitment in the circular "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Northern Ireland Civil Service" published May 1986, the Northern Ireland Civil Service has considered the provision of child care facilities and in particular workplace nurseries. It concluded that such nurseries could be provided only if there was a substantial injection of capital to meet start-up costs and a continuing subsidy from Government towards running costs. The use of public funds for this purpose has not so far been considered justifiable in relation to other needs.

However, the Northern Ireland Civil Service is anxious to assist staff in making other suitable child-minding arrangements and recently introduced a scheme to assist staff to find suitable registered childminders. In addition it is considering with the trade unions the provision of other facilities such as day care for pre-school age children, after-school care for older children, and holiday play schemes.

The home Civil Service part of the Northern Ireland Office, which comprises about 180 staff divided between London and Belfast, does not provide child care facilities, but gives sympathetic consideration to the individual needs of staff with young children.

Social Security Transitional Payments

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the number of people receiving social security transitional payments under the schemes announced on 27 April 1988 and the likely expenditure in the current financial year.

Mr. Needham: At 17 December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, transitional payments were being made to some 5,665 beneficiaries. It is estimated that the total expenditure in the current financial year will be in the region of £1 million and this is being met by repayable advances from the civil contingencies fund pending parliamentary approval of a Supplementary Estimate.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Colleges of Further Education

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of full-time and part-time teachers in each college of further education in Derbyshire for each year since 1979, together with the average number of hours worked by part-time teachers in each college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following table gives the available figures for Derbyshire colleges of further education. It shows full-time teaching staff numbers and full-time equivalent (FTE) numbers of part-time teaching staff. Figures are not readily available for the period before the academic year 1983-84 and there are data for only a sample of Derbyshire colleges from 1983-84 to 1986-87.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of changes in the balance between full and part-time teaching in colleges of further education since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available data are listed below. The number of part-time lecturer hours worked in higher and further education in polytechnics and other LEA-maintained establishments in England has been converted to the full-time equivalent (fte) number of lecturers and is expressed in the table as a percentage of the total fte lecturer numbers.

Pre-school Education

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of those aged three and four years in each of the educational authorities in the north west of England in nurseries, pre-school playgroups or other forms of education (a) at the latest available date, (b) five years ago, (c) 10 years ago and (d) 15 years ago, expressed numerically and as a percentage of the age group; what was the national average for these figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total number of pupils under five and the percentage of the age group attending maintained nursery and primary schools in each local education authority in the North West and in England in January 1973, 1978, 1983 and 1988 is given in the following table. Information on pupils under five in playgroups is not available centrally.

The percentage figures are the number of children under five attending maintained nursery and primary schools expressed as a percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population.

Languages (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each school in the county of South Yorkshire the foreign languages which are taught.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available centrally.

Opting Out

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what leaflets and booklets have been published by his Department on opting out for maintained schools; what was their cost; and by what means they were distributed.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has published a booklet "School Governors: How To Become A Grant-Maintained School" and circular 10/88 "Education Reform Act 1988: Grant-Maintained Schools". Copies were sent by post to the chairman of governors of all county and voluntary schools in England, local education authorities and other interested parties. The cost of printing and distribution was approximately £46,000.

Teacher Training Bursary Scheme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students receive bursaries under the teacher training bursary scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of 2,405 students have received shortage subject bursaries in the current academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many people qualifying under the teacher training bursary scheme are recorded as taking employment as school teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: Independent evaluation conducted by the university of Bath indicates that 88 per cent.—1,148—of those in receipt of trainee teacher bursaries in 1986-87 took up employment as school teachers.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total cost of the teacher training bursary scheme for each year of operation; and what is the cost in respect of those qualifying under the scheme who do not become school teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total cost of the scheme for each of the two full academic years of its operation is £1·76 million for 1986-87, and £2·8 million for 1987-88. The cost in respect of those receiving the bursary who do not become school teachers is estimated to be £210,000 for those qualifying in 1987. Figures for those qualifying in 1988 are not yet available.

Student Numbers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of (a) overseas students and (b) students over 25, excluding post-graduates, in higher education for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: Readily available information for years 1979, 1983 and 1987 are shown in the following table.

Higher and Further Education (Places)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the total number of non-degree places for each of the last 10 years in (i) universities, (ii) polytechnics and (iii) colleges of further education;

(2) what is the total number of first degrees places for each of the last 10 years in (i) universities, (ii) polytechnics and (iii) colleges of further education;

(3) what was the total number of higher degree places for each of the last 10 years in (i) universities, (ii) polytechnics, and (iii) colleges of further education.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the number of available places is not held centrally.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of 18 to 24-year-olds have secured a first degree placd in (i) universities, (ii) polytechnics, and (iii) colleges of further education for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: Readily available information for years 1979, 1983 and 1987 are shown in the following table.

Higher and Further Education (Staff)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many academic and non-academic staff in higher education have (i) taken early retirement and (ii) accepted redundancy for each of the past 10 years; and what was the total cost for each year.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is only partially available.

For universities in Great Britain, 4,400 academic and academic-related staff and 2,770 non-academic staff took early retirement during the currency of the University Grants Committee's 1981-84 premature retirement compensation scheme at a total cost of £153 million. During the present 1986-91 restructuring programme, the Committee estimates that some 2,760 academic and academic-related staff and 870 non-academic staff will take early retirement with compensation at a cost of £122 million.

Estimates of HE lecturers taking premature retirement from polytechnics and colleges maintained or assisted by local education authorities in England are available only as follows:

	Number
1982-83	800
1983-84	840
1984-85	950
1985-86	930
1986-87	930

In those years, local education authorities claimed reimbursement from the premature retirement compensation pool of the following expenditure on the costs of prematurely retiring HE staff in their institutions:

	£ million
1982-83	3·4
1983-84	6·2
1984-85	6·4
1985-86	8·5
1986-87	10·7

For voluntary and direct grant colleges (excluding the Royal College of Art and Cranfield Institute of Technology), expenditure on redundancy and early retirement of academic and non-academic staff since 1982 has been as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1982-83	0·767
1983-84	0·727
1984-85	1·170

Financial year	£ million

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the staff-student ratio for each of the last 10 years in (a) universities, (b) polytechnics, and (c) colleges of further education.

Mr. Jackson: The data required are given below. Figures for polytechnics and other maintained establishments cover England and figures for universities cover Great Britain.

National Advisory Body

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was his Department's total allocation to the National Advisory Body for each year since 1982.

Mr. Jackson: The National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) advised the Secretary of State for Education and Science on the allocation of the capped Advanced Further Education (AFE) pool. Since 1982 the AFE pool has been determined by the Secretary of State as follows:

Financial year	Total capped AFE pool (£ million)
1982-83	539·0
1983-84	560·5
1984-85	580·5
1985-86	620·0

1987-88	716·5
1988-89	781·0

University Grants Committee

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was his Department's total allocation to the University Grants Committee for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: Recurrent and capital grants made to universities in Great Britain on the advice of the University Grants Committee have been:

Financial years	£ million
1979-80	816·3
1980-81	1,040·8
1981-82	1,071·1
1982-83	1,283·0

Students

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was total Government spending (a) per student and (b) per graduate for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: The available data are listed below. The figures show the net institutional expenditure per student in universities (Great Britain), polytechnics (England) and in further education and higher education at other maintained establishments (OMEs) in England.

Net institutional expenditure[1] per student

	Financial year
	1978-79[3] £	1979-80 £	1980-81 £	1981-82 £	1982-93 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £

Polytechnics[2]	2,153	2,506	2,988	3,121	3,157	2,990	3,030	3,150	3,325
OMES (FE)[2]	1,166	1,335	1,644	1,898	1,924	2,095	2,190	2,320	2,430
OMES (HE)[2]	1,807	2,069	2,548	2,725	2,822	3,010	3,120	3,020	3,170

[1] The figures for universities are based on recurrent expenditure financed by UGC grants and tuition fee income for home and overseas students. The figures for polytechnics and OMEs are net recurrent institutional expenditure per full-time equivalent student. Institutional expenditure includes direct and indirect costs of providing tuition but excludes financing cost of capital expenditure.
[2] Standard weightings have been used to calculate numbers of full-time equivalent students.
[3] The polytechnics and OMEs figures for 1978-79 cover England and Wales.

Provisional estimates of costs per qualifier are available only for higher education as a whole in calendar year 1984.

Excluding student support and welfare	11,700
Excluding student support and welfare, and research and development	9,100

Third World Development

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his Department's responsibilities for the financial support and furtherance of education on Third world development issues in schools, universities and through the media; and in what specific ways those responsibilities are currently being discharged.

Mr. Jackson: Education on Third world development issues in the school curriculum is covered by section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988, to the extent that it helps to contribute to the moral and cultural development of pupils in preparing them for the opportunities, responsibilities and experience of adult life.

The United Kingdom Education Departments provide an annual grant of some £40,000 to support the activities of the Council for Education in World Citizenship, which organises conferences for schools and colleges and distributes material on third world issues amongst others.

My right hon. Friend grant-aids the Standing Conference on Education for International Understanding currently at the rate of £6,000 a year, to promote education on international understanding at all levels of the education service.

Universities receive public funds on the advice of the University Grants Committee. Drawing on these and other funds at their disposal they make the provision they judge appropriate for Third world development studies.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the procedures under the Education Reform Act 1988 relating to applications by schools for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am concerned at suggestions that some local education authorities may be seeking to deter or hinder governing bodies and parents from exercising the rights given to them under the Education Reform Act to seek grant-maintained status for their children's school. My Department will therefore be writing in the near future to all local education authorities to draw their attention to their responsibilities under the Education Acts. Copies of the letter will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the Government Actuary's report on the teachers superannuation scheme for the period 1981 to 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As required under the Teachers' Superannuation Regulations I have arranged to lay the Government Actuary's report before both Houses today.

The report specifies a normal contribution rate of 13·3 per cent. and a supplementary contribution of 0·75 per cent.—a total of 14·05 per cent. The current contribution rates are 13·7 per cent. and 1·75 per cent. In accordance with the requirements of the regulations, therefore, there will be a reduction in employers' contributions of 1·4 per cent. from 1 April 1989.

The Government's plans for spending by local authorities on education, which I announced in November, assumed a reduction of about 1 per cent. in the rate of employers' contributions.

GCSE

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he yet has an indication of the effect of GCSE examinations on staying on in full-time education and on the attainments of those taking the examination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The preliminary indications are encouraging. There has been a significant increase, from 46 per cent. to 49 per cent. between 1987 and 1988, in the proportion of 16-year-olds staying on in full-time education. There has been a similar increase, from an estimated 25 per cent. to some 27·5 per cent. in the proportion of all 16-year-olds gaining five or more results at grade C or above in the GCSE compared with the equivalent examinations in the previous year; and increases in the proportion of 16-year-old school leavers generally obtaining graded results. The increases have been particularly notable in French and in mathematics, for both sexes, and among girls in the physical sciences. Further details are contained in the tables.

The evidence from Her Majesty's Inspectorate and the School Examinations and Assessment Council is that the GCSE examining groups, and in particular their chief examiners, have been at pains to maintain in the GCSE the standards set in previous examinations. These results therefore strongly suggest that the improvements in teaching and learning learning observed by Her Majesty's Inspectorate have been reflected in higher levels of attainment in the GCSE. There is, however, undoubtedly room for further improvement at all levels of attainment. I look to schools, with the support of the examining groups and others concerned, to secure these.

HEALTH

Organ Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each of the last 10 years such information as he has of the total number of organ transplants in the United Kingdom and the number of overseas recipients.

Mr. Mellor: According to provisional information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of cadaveric transplants carried out within the NHS in the United Kingdom in 1988 was:

	Number
Kidney	1,544
Heart and heart/lung	332
Liver	212
Pancreas	9
Lung	3

These figures will be subject to revision once final returns are received. Comparable figures for the years 1978-87 were given in my reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 22 December 1988 at columns 397-98.

The United Kingdom transplant service is currently unable to identify the number of overseas patients treated under reciprocal health agreements with other countries, but revised arrangements for collecting data to be introduced shortly should enable this information to be obtained in the future.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify for each of the last 10 years how many instances there were of cadaveric kidneys being transplanted into non-entitled patients.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information is not available. In 1988, 35 transplant operations were performed in the private sector using cadaveric kidneys surplus to requirements in the United States and imported by arrangement with the United Network for organ sharing.

Weil's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many case of Weil's disease have been treated over the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Data on the number of cases treated are not available, but the number of cases in the last 10 years confirmed by the leptospira reference unit of the public health laboratory service is 444.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any advice has been given to district health authorities and general practitioners alerting them to be vigilant about Weil's disease.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has not issued any advice to district health authorities or general practitioners about Weil's disease. However, as the organism can enter the human body when cuts and abrasions or the membrane of nose, mouth or eye come into contact with contaminated water, members of inland sailing and canoeing clubs are issued with warning leaflets.

Waiting Lists

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of out-patient waiting lists in Mersey regional health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information about out-patient waiting times centrally.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the in-patient waiting list figures for Mersey regional health authority in March 1988, 1987, and 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

In-patient waiting list, Mersey regional health authority

Date	Waiting list
31 March 1979	41,103
31 March 1987	29,147
31 March 1988	[1]31,031

[1]On a comparable basis with previous statistics.

Broadmoor Special Hospital

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years the number of deaths that have occurred at Broadmoor special hospital; what was the cause in each case; how many of these deaths were investigated by a public inquiry; what was the result in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 1 February at columns 275-76. The report of the public inquiry relating to the death of a patient on 6 July 1984 was published on 30 August 1985 and a copy is in the Library.

Abortions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions at 18 weeks or more gestation were performed during 1988 in cases of rape.

Mr. Freeman: As rape is not in itself a statutory ground for performing an abortion under the Abortion Act 1967, and is not required to be specified on the notification form by the certifying doctor, the exact number of notifications of abortions associated with rape is not available. However, in some cases the information is volunteered, and arrangements have been made to code separately and analyse all notification forms which mention rape from January 1987. Of the notification forms received by the end of August 1988 in respect of terminations performed in the first two quarters of 1988 at 18 completed weeks gestation or over, none mentioned rape.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for discharges from out-patient and day-patient attendances of persons with diagnoses of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Freeman: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information that he seeks. The information available centrally on out-patient and day care does not include diagnosis.

Guardians Ad Litem

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes to enable guardians ad litem to have the power to see all records relating to the child they represent.

Mr. Mellor: Provisions on procedure to be added to the Children Bill by Government amendment will provide for access to records by guardians ad litem in accordance with paragraph 57(b) of the White Paper on "The Law on Child Care and Family Services" (Cm. 62).

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes under the terms of the Children Bill [Lords], that guardians ad litem for children who are not represented by solicitors would have to seek funding for expert opinions from the local authority.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the independence of guardians ad litem is maintained under the Children Bill [Lords]; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the passages dealing with guardians ad litem in the Lord Chancellor's concluding speech on Second Reading of the Bill in another place on 6 December 1988 at columns 534-36, and his remarks in Committee on 19 January at columns 418-20.

Children Bill

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is being made to prevent a child who is being provided with accommodation by a local authority under clause 17 of the Children Bill [Lords] from being removed without their consent and without warning by a person with parental responsibility for the child.

Mr. Mellor: In accordance with paragraphs 22 and 23 of the White Paper "The Law on Child Care and Family Services" (Cm. 62), the Bill does not require notice of intended removal to be given where children are being provided with accommodation under voluntary arrangements. The power of any person who has parental responsibility for a child to remove him from accommodation provided by or on behalf of the local authority under clause 17 does not apply where the child is aged 16 or over, by virtue of clause 17(10). The Lord Chancellor gave an outline of provisions enabling a person caring for the child to prevent removal in extreme situations in another place on 6 February at column 1412.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial provision is being made to local authorities to carry out their duties under part III of the Children Bill [Lords].

Mr. Mellor: The financial consequences for local authorities will be discussed with the local authorities associations and taken into account in setting the level of aggregate Exchequer revenue finance in 1990-91.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to ensure that children continue to be represented in care and related proceedings by a solicitor; and if he will make a statement about the proposed regulations referred to in clause 36 of the Children Bill [Lords].

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the Lord Chancellor's statement on legal representation of the child in such proceedings on Second Reading of the Bill in another place on 6 December 1988 at column 533-34. I shall make a statement on the regulations provided for in this clause during consideration of the Bill in this House.

Smoking

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the figures for people smoking cigarettes in the United Kingdom during the first three quarters of 1988; and whether this represents an increase or decrease over the previous period.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested. However, consumers' expenditure on cigarettes in the first three quarters of 1988 is estimated to have been £4,440 million at constant 1985 prices. These statistics are not adjusted for seasonal variation and so cannot be compared with the immediately preceding period. They show little change from expenditure on cigarettes at 1985 prices in the first three quarters of 1987 (£4,416 million).

Over 60s

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of National Health Service treatment for someone (a) between 60 and 65 years, (b) between 65 years and 75 years and (c) over 75 years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested. The average gross expenditure per head (at 1986-87 prices) in the NHS is (a) £178 for those aged 16-64 (b) £521 for those aged 65-74 and (c) £1,186 for those aged 75 and over.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the cost to public funds of the medical attention and treatment given by the National Health Service to victims of food poisoning attributable to chicken and eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 30 January 1989]: The costs to public funds in 1988 of medical attention and treatment given by the NHS to victims of food poisoning attributable to chicken and eggs—predominantly from salmonella enteritidis, phage type 4—are estimated at about £2 million. This figure is based on estimates of costs of medical attention and treatment for salmonellosis in hospitals or the community calculated in 1985 as part of a special PHLS study, but adjusted for inflation, and applied to reported cases of infection of salmonella enteritidis phage types 4, 8 and 33 in 1988.

Baby Food (Aluminium)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the levels of aluminium in baby foods and milks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy on aluminium occurring in baby foods and milks is to ensure that the levels do not exceed those which our medical advice has reported to be safe. The results of research into aluminium intakes will be kept under regular review.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in (a) 1989-90 and (b) a full year of (i) raising the national insurance threshold from £43 a week to £75 a week and (ii) charging national insurance at 7 per cent. on incomes between £100 and £125 a week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Cost in terms of changed yields of National Insurance contributions

£ million

	1989-90 (receipts) £	1989-90 (full year) £
(i) Raising the National Insurance threshold to £75 a week[1]	+190	+220
(ii) Charging national insurance at 7 per cent. on earnings between £100 and £125 a week[2]	−350	−400

[1] The higher lower earnings limit increases the band of earnings in respect of which people in contracted-out employments pay contributions at the higher not-contracted out rate. Raising that limit to £75 a week increases the overall yield of class 1 contributions.

[2] The estimate assumes that earnings between £75 a week and £100 a week attract class 1 contributions at 5 per cent. and earnings between £100 and £125 attract class 1 contributions at 7 per cent.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will collect evidence and make a statement on the effect which the requirement that housing benefit be withdrawn after 52 weeks in hospital is having on the efforts of local authority social service departments to rehabilitate long-term hospital patients.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Ninety per cent. of all hospital admissions last four weeks or less. In the small proportion of admissions lasting more than 52 weeks, there is no evidence that the withdrawal of housing benefit is by itself a major factor preventing the return of long-term hospital patients to the community. I would, however, be happy to consider any examples of such cases that the hon. Member or others may have in mind.

It is the duty of local authorities to find accommodation for people in vulnerable groups who are homeless through no fault of their own, including those who are unable to return to their former home following a stay in hospital. In addition, community care grants may be available to people leaving hospital to help them with the costs of re-establishing themselves in the Community.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider giving some discretion to local authorities to extend the period of housing benefit in cases where single patients would otherwise be unable to retain their homes when they go into hospital for a long stay.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Housing benefit is intended to help people with their immediate costs by way of rent and rates and to alleviate current hardship. The main criterion for entitlement is therefore that the claimant must be paying rent or rates for a dwelling which he or she occupies as home. Fifty-two weeks is a reasonable limit to the period during which a claimant can be considered to be occupying a dwelling despite his or her physical absence. The application of this limit to the housing benefit entitlement of hospital in-patients does not appear to lead to undue hardship, but the situation is being kept under review.

Age-related Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the size of age-related personal allowances within (a) supplementary benefit, (b) income support and (c) housing benefit for each age-group for each year since 1980, both in current and standard prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Values under the old and new benefit systems are not comparable because the system of personal allowances and premiums intruduced in 1988 radically altered the structure of the income-related benefits. The information requested is:

Mrs. Elizabeth Lawrence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received relating to the case of Mrs. Elizabeth Lawrence daughter of Mrs. Kathleen Beardmore, 6 Carlisle avenue, Cantrell road, Bulwell, Nottingham NG6 9AJ.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Benefit Payments (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving income support from each office in South Yorkshire; and what were the comparable figures at the same date in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the number of people receiving income support and its predecessor, supplementary benefit.

Social Security Fraud

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money he estimates has been lost in each year since 1979 as a result of fraudulent social security claims and how many persons have been successfully proceeded against in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Strathclyde and (d) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No reliable estimate is available as to how much money is lost as a result of fraudulent social security claims. The information available on successful prosecutions brought by the Department in respect of fraudulent social security benefit claims is shown in the table:

	Great Britain	Scotland[1]	Strathclyde[1]	Greenock and Port Glasgow[1]
1979-80	16,236	—	—	—
1980-81	18,369	—	—	—
1981-82	13,856	—	—	—
1982-83	11,312	—	—	—
1983-84	5,989	—	—	—
1984-85	6,595	463	—	—
1985-86	6,586	541	176	3
1986-87	6,258	796	147	9
1987-88	6,997	769	181	3

[1]Information covering earlier periods is not held.

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families receive family credit in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole and what is his estimated number of families in each of (a), (b) and (c) who are entitled to family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) on 6 February at column 483.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help he intends to introduce for those in receipt of retirement pensions to assist them in paying increased water charges and increased standing charges for water.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Retirement pension is uprated in line with the percentage movement in the retail prices index which reflects increases in water charges and standing charges for water.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any proposals to assist those in receipt of income support to pay increased water charges and increased standing charges for water.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Unlike supplementary benefit, water charges are not a separately identifiable element in the income support rates. Compensation for water charges was included as a once and for all adjustment from April 1988. The income support personal allowance will be uprated from April 1990 but decisions on the amount of the increase will not be taken until the autumn.

School Meals and Milk

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what cash compensation is in the family credit child rates for the loss of (a) free school meals and (b) free welfare milk.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amount is £2·55.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his total provision for child benefit for 1988-89 and each of the next three years at constant 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 24 January 1989]: The amounts are shown in the following table and are derived from the cash figures shown in table 15.1 of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 615).

Financial year	£ million
1988-89	4,256
1989-90	4,065
1990-91	[1]4,200
1991-92	[1]4,200

[1] These figures are rounded to the nearest 100 million, in line with the convention in successive public expenditure White Papers.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps are being taken to improve communications between the United Kingdom mainland and Royal Navy submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines whilst those submarines are on patrol;

(2) what steps are being taken to improve the floating buoy communications system for use between the United Kingdom mainland and Royal Navy submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines on patrol;

(3) what steps are being taken to improve the trailing wire communications system for use between the United Kingdom mainland and Royal Navy submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines on patrol;

(4) if any improvements have been made to the trailing wire very low frequency communications reception systems fitted to Royal Navy submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines, which enable reception at the depth of more than 10 m;

(5) if any improvements have been made to the trailing wire very low frequency communications reception systems fitted to Royal Navy submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines, which enable reception when the submarine is travelling at other than specific tangents to the shore-based transmitting station;

(6) whether the Anthorn very low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion;

(7) whether the Inskip low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion;

(8) whether the Rugby very low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion;

(9) whether the Criggon very low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion;

(10) whether the Glen Garry trial extremely low frequency transmitter will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion;

(11) whether the Crimond low frequency transmitter has been, or will be, hardened to resist the (a) blast and (b) electromagnetic pulse effects of a nuclear explosion.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not prepared to comment for security reasons.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to the commanders of submarine-launched ballistic missile carrying submarines regarding launch autonomy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to discuss operational matters of this kind.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which hon. Members attended the defence visit to Norway on 31 January; and on what basis they were selected.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence has an agreement with the Government and Opposition defence Whips whereby they nominate hon. Members to go on official defence visits, following advertisement in the All-Party Whip. Those who went to Norway were nominated in accordance with this practice.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many overseas visits his Department has arranged in the last two years for hon. Members; and at what cost.

Mr. Neubert: Ten official visits overseas have been arranged for hon. Members over the last two years. In the same time, the Defence Select Committee has undertaken five trips overseas in connection with its official business.

The second part of the question could only be answered at disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all hon. Members who have participated in defence visits overseas in the past two years, stating which visits they have attended and to which political party they belong.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is below. In addition to these visits a number of visits abroad were undertaken by the Defence Select Committee.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what future use is proposed for RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on 3 February at column 444.

Reserve Forces (Advertising)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the recent advertising campaign for recruitment on behalf of the reserve forces.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 11 November 1988 at column 321.

Admiralty Nuclear Reactor (Greenwich)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific safety assessment has been made of the accident consequences of the Admiralty nuclear research and demonstration reactor at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Reassessments of the consequences of an accident involving the nuclear reactor at the Royal Naval college, Greenwich, are conducted regularly. The most recent assessment, which was carried out in January 1989, concluded that it was difficult to conceive of any accident involving this extremely small reactor which would necessitate countermeasures outside a range of 50 metres. Nevertheless it is our policy to practice contingency arrangements for more severe accidents, however remote the chances of them occurring may be.

Nuclear Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how often during each year from 1980 to 1988 Royal

Navy submarines have docked at the port of Liverpool; and what emergency procedures exist to protect the metropolitan population of Liverpool against radioactive contamination from an accident involving the radioactive core of the submarine;

(2) how often during each year from 1980 to 1988 a nuclear-powered Royal Navy submarine docked in Cardiff; and what emergency provisions are in force there to cope with an accident involving the nuclear reactor core in a submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual number of visits by Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines to Liverpool and Cardiff since 1980 are as follows:

	Liverpool	Cardiff
1981	3	1
1982	1	0
1985	3	1
1986	4	2

Local authorities are informed three weeks in advance of all such visits, and for the duration of each visit a naval emergency monitoring team, a MOD health physicist and a naval incident commander are located at the port concerned as a precautionary measure.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on Tuesday 7 February at column 667, and to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) to the hon. Member for Mossley Hill on Tuesday 7 February at column 793.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any incidence of serious breakdown resulting in radioactive release and exposure to the operating work force in the operation of United Kingdom nuclear-powered submarines since the first such craft was launched.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no such incidents.

Soviet Forces

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why Her Majesty's Government reject certain aspects of the Soviet compilation of its force deployment in Europe, released on 29 January; and what data base it used.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have welcomed the Warsaw Pact's publication of its view of the balance of forces in Europe as a sign that the Warsaw Pact is prepared to be more open about such matters than in the past and to acknowledge its superiority in key combat equipments based in Europe. There are, however, differences between the recent Warsaw Pact assessment of the balance and the one published by NATO in November 1988; in particular, NATO does not accept the Warsaw Pact's conclusion that there is a rough parity in forces. Work will be needed by the two Alliances to resolve these differences and to agree common definitions and counting rules.

Procurement Policy

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) European and (iii) United States-owned defence industries.

Mr. Sainsbury: Whilst we have regard for other factors including the location of the manufacturer and the ownership of suppliers, our prime consideration is to obtain the best value for money.

EMPLOYMENT

VAT Registrations

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new registrations there were for value-added tax in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published, the estimated number of new registrations for value added tax was 205,000. The net increase in the number of VAT registered businesses in 1987 was 45,000 or nearly 900 a week on average. The indications are that the rate of increase during 1988 has been faster.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees who have started on employment training have subsequently dropped out.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated that by the end of November 1988 about 12,000 trainees who were not transferees from previous programmes had left employment training earlier than planned.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will visit Nottingham, North and address a meeting of former miners on the redundant mineworkers pension scheme who have received letters to undertake restart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans to visit the Nottingham, North constituency. As I told the hon. Member in my reply to his question of 2 January 1989, the redundant mineworkers payment scheme is the responsibility of the Department of Energy. Officials from my Department and the Department of Energy are examining the redundant mineworkers payment scheme regulations and benefit procedures which bring those in the redundant mineworkers payment scheme within the coverage of the restart programme.

Race Relations and Equal Opportunity

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will describe his Department's principal achievements in respect of race relations and equal opportunity since May 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The principal achievements in my Department in respect of race relations and equal opportunities since May 1979 are as follows:

(i) In the race relations field

The extension of race discrimination legislation (the Race Relations Act 1976) to offshore employment.

The significant role played by my Department's race relations employment advisory service in promoting the recommendations of the CRE 1984 code of practice's recommendations to employers on the implementation of equal opportunities policies. The service is now giving greater publicity to the use of the positive action provisions of the Race Relations Act.

The commissioning of a number of research projects by my Department which have informed the Government and others on the position of ethnic minorities in the labour market.

The regular meetings of my Department's race relations employment advisory group, whose members include the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality and distinguished representatives of ethnic minorities, have provided successive Ministers with valuable advice on the employment of people from ethnic minorities.

(ii) In the sex discrimination field

The extension of the Equal Pay Act to provide equal pay for work of equal value.

The removal of restrictions on adult women's hours of work thus freeing women to compete on equal terms with men for higher paid shift and night work.

The extension of sex discrimination legislation (the Equal Pay and Sex Discrimination Acts) to offshore employment —an employer can no longer refuse a women a job on an oil rig simply because she is a woman.

Equalising retirement ages—the woman, who wants to, can now work to the same age as her male counterpart.

Freeing single sex training from unnecessary legislation. A training provider no longer has to obtain Ministerial designation before running a women only course.

The regular meetings of the Department's advisory committee on women's employment. This committee, which includes the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission and members of women's organisations, has provided successive Governments with valuable advice on the employment of women.

(iii) In Training Agency programmes

All Training Agency programmes are available equally to all eligible people, regardless of their race, religion, sex, marital status or disability.

Both YTS and employment training have equal opportunities codes of practice. A commitment to equal opportunities is one of the criteria for achievement of approved training organisation status; this is under-pinned by a contractual requirement. Publicity material for both schemes promotes equal opportunities and avoids stereotypes. Single sex and race training is provided where appropriate.

The skill training agency has an equal opportunities statement and has issued guidance forbidding pin-up material in skill centre premises.

Education authorities and schools participating in technical and vocational education initiative have equal opportunity statements.

(iv) In the Department's employment service

The employment service is an equal opportunities organisation and as such has a responsibility to ensure its services are available to all regardless of race, sex or disability.

The ethnic origin traffic surveys of 1986 and 1987 provided information on the needs of people from ethnic minorities. As a result 48 inner city officers have been appointed to help make services more accessible and relevant to inner city job seekers, many of whom are from ethnic minorities. A number of leaflets have also been translated into minority languages.

People can attend job clubs at times convenient for childcare and domestic arrangements. A leaflet aimed at women who are thinking of returning to work has been produced. Eligibility for the job start and enterprise allowance schemes is based on receipt of benefit; people whose partner is in receipt of benefit are also eligible.

(v) In the Department's contribution to action for cities

Many people from ethnic minorities live in inner cities and have benefited from these initiatives. For example the small firms service have recently opened six inner city sub-offices; their services will be available to all small businesses but their expertise in ethnic minority business matters will be particularly helpful to ethnic minority entrepreneurs.

(vi) as an employer

In 1986 the race relations employment advisory service audited the equal opportunities policy within my Department with regard to race. Most of their recommendations, which relate to training, instructions etc., were accepted and are being implemented. In addition we are, or are about to begin, monitoring recruitment, staff in post, access to training and promotion. Whilst representation of ethnic minority groups remains concentrated in lower grades there have been gradual improvements.

My Department has also introduced a number of initiatives to ensure both men and women have the same opportunities. These include increased opportunities to work flexible working hours and/or part time, the provision of a preferential reinstatement (career break) scheme and advice on the granting of special leave for domestic purposes. Representation of women is gradually increasing at most levels within my Department.

(vii) The introduction of equal opportunities proofing

All the Department's policies are now examined to ensure that they do not unlawfully discriminate against women and ethnic minorities.

Early Retirement

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he collects statistics on the levels of early retirement and those due to ill health (a) generally, (b) in local authorities and (c) in Gedling borough council.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the statistics as requested are not collected centrally.

Watercooling Plants

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislative controls to make all water cooling plants subject to regular inspection and control.

Mr. Nicholls: Water cooling plants in workplaces are already subject to the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, which places a responsibility on those in control of buildings and their engineering services to implement and monitor appropriate controls. Additionally, the Health and Safety Executive has issued guidance on these controls and inspectors monitor the performance of employers during routine inspections.

New Jobs

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in Great Britain.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988 the work force in employment in Great Britain increased by 399,000 of which 220,000 were in full-time employment and 179,000 were in part-time employment. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes. In classifiying the work force in employment between full and part-time, all programme participants are counted as in part-time employment.

Employment Training

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees on employment training are (a) getting meals paid, (b) getting the maximum of £5 of travel paid, (c) experiencing a £5 deduction because their spouse works and (d) confined to a £10 premium because their partner works 24 hours plus a week; and if he will express each figure as a percentage of the total numbers of employment trainees.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested at (a), (b), and (d) is not available. It is not clear what the hon. Member is referring to at (c). There is no £5 deduction on employment training. All trainees get a training allowance of at least £10 a week more than their benefit entitlement.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees undergoing employment training are receiving enhancements over benefit paid for training managers; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of the total on employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of dismissals from the employment training programme so far, distinguishing between reasons for dismissal.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Tourism

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total of Government support for the tourist industry in 1988 prices for each year from 1960 to 1988 for the south west region and separately for Devon and Cornwall; and what is the projected amount for the next five years.

Mr. Lee: Total funds made available by the English tourist board to support tourism in the south west region, through subventions to the west country tourist board, payments under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 and, in 1971-72 and 1972-73, under the hotel development incentives scheme, at constant 1987-88 prices, were as follows:

1971-72	129,472
1972-73	830,381
1973-74	801,818
1974-75	866,538
1975-76	1,241,240
1976-77	991,504
1977-78	951,349
1978-79	904,050
1979-80	1,781,136
1980-81	1,633,740
1981-82	2,171,574
1982-83	1,331,250
1983-84	3,443,496
1984-85	2,351,520
1985-86	2,796,238
1986-87	3,954,080
1987-88	3,431,000
1988-89	[1]

[1] estimated to end of January 1989, at actual prices—£2,538,500

Separate figures for Devon and Cornwall, and for Government assistance prior to the formation of the west country tourist board in June 1971, could only be provided at disproportionate cost. No projections have been made as to the amount of support for the next five years.

In addition, the tourist industry receives substantial support through a number of other Government Departments.

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Government support for community insulation projects under employment training.

Mr. Fowler: Employment training is helping a large and increasing number of unemployed people to develop the skills they need to get back to work. The valuable work done by community insulation projects in draught proofing the homes of low-income households offers one means of providing suitable training and experience.

I have agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy to reinforce the contribution employment training can make to community insulation projects this year by taking the following action:

(a) training managers will be offered an increase to £40 per week in the level of supplementary training grant under existing contracts in respect of additional filled places;

(b) more advice will be provided to training agents and potential trainees on the range of skills offered by such project based training; and

(c) support will be given to enhance the opportunities for trainees on insulation projects to obtain recognised qualifications.

To give these measures time to take effect and to maintain the present community insulation project network through the remaining winter months a three-month extension will be offered to participants presently on community programme terms.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 146

SESSION 1988–89

30th January–10th February 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
